The term Cowan has, among our brethren of the Free and Accepted Craft, a meaning and signification of its own, which is so well understood by every Mason, that there is no reason to speculate upon its Masonic interpretation here; but there is a dearth of information among us as to whence the term is derived, and what was its original import, and a note on this part of the inquiry may, perhaps, be interesting to our readers.

In the sense understood by us, it will be sufficient if we quote one or two examples of the use of the word in question; thus in a song, "Once I was blind, and could not see," we have the following as part of the last verse:

"Then round and round me he did tie
A noble ancient charm,
All future darkness to defy,
And ward off cowan's harm."

And in another song we are told—

"How happy are the ancient brave Whom no false cowan can deceive."

Whilst another, entitled "We Brethren Freemasons," declares—

"The name of a cowan we'll not ridicule

This term, too, has not been without its difficulties to many of the writers on Freemasonry, whether charlatans or not, and without giving undue prominence to the catchpenny tribe, one of the most popular of these revelation-mongers says, in a note: "The word cowan is a flash word peculiar to Masons. It signifies an enemy, but formerly was expressive of kings and all those who had the power to prosecute, and who did persecute the associated Masons."

In Preston's Illustrations, 13th edition, page 80, is a note to the "Ancient Charges," in which it is stated, "Twelfthly, That a master or fellow made not a mouldstone, square nor rule, to no lowan" (this no doubt should be cowan); nor let no lowan worke within their lodge, nor without to moulde stone." And in Dermott and Harper's Ahiman Rezon, 7th edition, 1807, among the ancient charges, No. V., entitled "Of the Management of the Craft in Working," p. 37, it says: "But Free and Accepted Masons shall not allow cowans to work with them, nor shall they be employed by cowans without an urgent necessity; and even in that case they must teach cowans, but must have a separate communication: no laborer shall be employed in the proper work of Freemasons."

Now these two extracts positively refer to an operative class called cowans; and it occurred to me that as we symbolize many other matters connected with the handicraft of Masons, so we have treated the cowans; and as speculative Masonry long held its headqarters in Scotland, the word might possibly be of Scotch extraction. For this I had reference to a work published in two volumes folio, in Edinburgh, 1808, with a supplement of two volumes folio, published in 1825, and an abridgement in one volume 8vo, published 1846, in all three of which the word cowan is given. And in that work we have the following definitions:

"COWAN, s. A fishing boat, etc.

"COWAN, s 1. A term of contempt, applied to one who does the work of a mason, but has not been regularly bred. (Scottish.)

"2. Also used to denote one who builds dry walls, otherwise denominated a dry-dyker. (Scottish.)

"'A boat carpenter, joiner, cowan (or builder of stone without mortar), gets 1s. at the minimum and good maintenance.' (P. Morven, Argylshire Statistical Account, x, p. 267.)

"'Cowans, masons who build dry stone dykes or walls.' (P. Halkirk, Caitnesshire Statistical Account, xix, p. 24.)

"In the Suio-Gothic, or ancient language of Sweden, it kujon or kughon, a silly fellow, hominen imbellum, et cujus capiti omnes tuto illudunt, kujon appellares, moris est (Ihre, Glossarium Suido-Gothicum, 2 vols., fol., Upsal, 1769.) French, Coion, or coyon, a coward, a base fellow (Cotgrave's French-English Dictionary, fol., Lond., 1650); Qui fait profession de lachete, ignavus. (Trevoux Dictionnaire, Universal Francois et Latin, de 7 vol., fol., Paris, 1742). The editor of this dictionary deduce it from the Latin quietus. But the term is evidently Gothic. It has been supported by the Franks, and is derived from kufw-a supprimire insultare."

The supplement stating—

"COWAN, s. 2. Applied to one who does the work of a mason, add; COWANAR is the only term used in this sense in Lothian."

So also on referring to Dyker, Jamieson tells us—

"DYKE, DYK, s. 1. A wall, whether of turf or stone. (Derived from the Scottish.)

"A ditch; as in English, although not obsolete.

"DIKER, DYKER, s. A person whose employment is to build inclosures of stone generally without lime; often called a dry diker. (Derived from the Scottish.)

"The dyker, as he is called, gets from £2 to £3 sterling, and sometimes more, for three months in summer. (P. Tarland, Aberdeenshire Statistical Account, vi, p. 209.)"

From the foregoing, it is presumed that the cowan is derived from a two-fold sense, the French application of the term suiting the speculative Mason, the Scottish, the operative Mason; and from the charges above quoted, equally applicable in both senses to the Free and Accepted Mason. The Scottish cowan, according to the operative craft, was a builder of walls of unhewn stone, and they were piled one on the other, either with or without mortar or mud, as is to be seen in Gloucestershire and the lower part of Oxfordshire at the present time; and the stringent law that ordered no master or fellow to set him a mouldstone was made for the purpose of guarding their art from the uninitiated, so that those who only could pile rough materials on each other should not invade the trade of a mason, or one that could both set and square the perfect ashler.—Masonic Mirror.

Within the Lodge.

The transactions of a lodge, in its varied Masonic duties, are secret as to the rest of the world. Inasmuch as its business relates exclusively to Masonry, and none but Masons are interested in it, therefore none but Masons should know what transpires therein. It is an offense, therefore, against Masonic usage, as well as fraternal confidence, for one to reveal to a profane any of the transactions within the lodge. In the by-laws of some lodges it is provided that if a visitor should be guilty of such an offense, he shall be denied the privilege of visiting it in the future; and if a member should so far forget himself he shall be liable to such penalty as the lodge shall see proper to inflict.

To reveal to one not a Mason what has transpired within the lodge may be productive of very serious consequences. This is the case especially when the business in action is upon a petition for initiation, and consequent inquiry into character. It is necessary in such cases, to speak with frankness and freedom, if anything is said; but it must also be in the strictest confidence. The necessity for this is obvious to any person who will reflect a moment. We do not wish to injure any one, but rather do him good; yet we owe it to the Order to discuss the fitness of applicants with the utmost freedom, sometimes, which would not be proper before the world. Now, if such things are repeated outside the tyled door, an unintentional injury may be done to the applicant. But the rule does not apply only to the case referred to; everything done within the lodge should be—must be—kept there—"in the repository of faithful breasts."

The violation of this confidence has always been considered a grave Masonic offense, and drew upon the offender a suitable punishment. In the course of our reading recently we met with a case which occurred in a lodge in Scotland, we believe it was in Ayr, the brother had been found guilty of "communicating to outside persons, in a clandestine and illegal manner, the whole supposed proceedings of St. Paul's Lodge, and defaming the character and government of said lodge." Such an offense, we are sorry to say, is not very uncommon even in this day of general Masonic intelligence. The brother was tried and found guilty of the offence as charged, and the sentence was:

That he be suspended from his office for two months from the date hereof; and that upon the first monthly meeting after this term is expired, he shall in open lodge read the following: "I have been guilty of a crime highly prejudicial to the good order of society and the interests of St. Paul's Lodge; and I declare this to be a proof of my contrition, and hope it may be a warning to all members, and in case of a complaint, that they may lay it in a legal manner before an open lodge, and not be misled by those who neither consider their own nor the interests of the lodge."

This occurred in 1811, and shows how strict our brethren were a half century since, in enforcing proper discipline among the members.

We need not speak of the evils resulting from a dereliction of duty among Masons in matters of this kind; they occur, too often—and the consequences are sad indeed. We knew a case of this kind: a brother applied to a member of another lodge, in a neighboring town, for information about the character of an applicant who formerly resided there. Under the strictest injunctions of secrecy it was given. But, untrue to his Masonic duty, the brother receiving the information (which was of an unfavorable character,) immediately communicated it to the applicant. The result was the personal ill-will of the applicant towards the informer, which was never removed. This repeating to the applicant the information received, was entirely unnecessary, and was the more aggravated because secrecy had been enjoined, and the informer had given the information as he had received it from other Masons, on inquiry, as he had no personal knowledge of the applicant.

How often we have known the action of a lodge, especially in relation to applicants who were rejected, known to the applicant himself the next day! Of course two results followed: 1st, the applicant lost his respect for Masonry, seeing its influence was not sufficient to preserve discipline among its members; and, 2d, a personal hostility towards certain ones who had been instrumental in his rejection. To this might be added a bitterness of feeling among the members themselves, growing out of this violation of confidence and duty to each other.

Whenever a brother is found guilty of thus revealing to a profane the secret transactions of a lodge, he should be at once dealt with; the punishment, if the offense were deliberate and intended, should be severe in character and promptly inflicted.

We are constrained to believe that discipline in the lodges is generally too lax; we could report a large number of cases confirmatory of this, but it is unnecessary. The Masters of lodges should remember that the charter of Masonry is, to a large extent, confided to their keeping, and depends upon the enforcement of discipline.—Freemasons' Magazine.

The Case of William Preston.

Bro. Preston was an expelled Mason, but as our Order is more indebted to him for the development of its beauties than any other man since the time of the "immortal three," who formed the first Grand Lodge at Jerusalem, our readers will excuse our making this article somewhat diffuse.

Bro. William Preston was a Scotchman by birth, but removed to London where he took up his permanent residence in 1760. He was entered, passed, and raised among the "Antients," a society which had its origin in a schism and secession from the Grand Lodge of England. Preston's clear perception, however, soon convinced him that his party was not a legally constituted one, and he left them and applied for, and was received into, membership under the banner of the regular Grand Lodge of England.

With the utmost assiduity did he study the principles of our Order, and a bright and successful student was he. He saw that the hidden treasures of Freemasonry required a more general development in order to be fully understood by the ordinary mind. To effect this was the chief object of his life, and how successful he was, every intelligent brother knows.

At a certain hour, daily, he applied himself to the drawing of designs on his trestle-board, and so perfect were his plans that the Craftsmen, wheresoever dispersed, have been since engaged in executing them, and have never been at a stand for want of employment.

On Thursday, 21st May, 1772, in order to have the counsel and advice of the Craft, he gave a banquet at his own expense, at the Crown and Anchor tavern, in the Strand, London, to which he invited all the Masonic wisdom and talent of Great Britain to be present. According to his request, the brethren assembled early, and he was not slow in announcing the object he had in view in convoking them.

He said that "Freemasonry in order to preserve its standing must spread its roots and expand its branches far and wide, for the purpose of extending its capabilities to meet the exigencies of the times." He then laid before them the result of long and arduous labor; the present system of lecturing (a reconstruction of the old), as practiced in England in the beginning of the present century; whence it was introduced to the United States by Bro. T. S. Webb. It was discussed seriatim, approved and adopted. Bro. Preston then became exceedingly popular, and was employed as an assistant under Bro. Heseltine, Grand Secretary, who wished at that time to publish an improved edition of the Book of Constitutions, which would bring down the history of Freemasonry to his own time. Considering Bro. Preston the most eligible to prepare the work for the printer, he gave him the entire charge of it, and free access to all the documents and papers of the Grand Lodge. When the most laborious part of the work was performed, and it was nearly ready to go to press, Bro. Heseltine wanted to give an acquaintance of his, a Bro. Noorthouck, Treasurer of the Lodge of Antiquity, an interest in its publication, and appointed him to assist Preston in completing it. Bro. Preston, having done all the work of selecting, arranging, etc., thought he was entitled to the individual honor of his labors and declined the offer, when the job was taken from him altogether and given to Noorthouck. Seeing that the honors he had so well earned were taken from him and given to another, who had no right whatever to them, he remonstrated warmly and threw up the office of Assistant Grand Secretary in disgust, and, some say, withheld a part of the material he had collected for the book. This displeased Bro. Heseltine, who was not long waiting for an opportunity of resenting the offense which Preston had given him, and the latter was arraigned for a violation of the laws of the Grand Lodge in attending a sermon at church in Masonic costume; and in his defense, Bro. Preston said that this regulation of the Grand Lodge—the one which they said he had violated—was "the height of absurdity, and could not be admitted by any person who professed himself a friend to the Society." He also said that "the Lodge of Antiquity had its own peculiar rights formally secured to it at the revival in 1717, and was determined to preserve them inviolate, and it was very questionable if the Grand Lodge was empowered to make laws binding on a lodge which had acted on its own independent authority from a period long anterior to the existence of that body." On the 30th of January, 1778, he (Bro. Preston) was "expelled from the Grand Lodge and declared incapable of attending the same or any of its committees."

In 1787, when the Duke of Cumberland was Grand Master, the case of Bro. Preston was submitted to the Grand Lodge, who then, in a better and more Masonic spirit, reconsidered all its former proceedings, and reinstated Bro. Preston to all the rights and honors of Freemasonry.—London Freemason.

Reminiscences of Anti-Masonic Times.

BY REV. DR. GIGER.

I am aware that great prejudices have existed in regard to the true character and tendency of the Masonic Order. These prejudices were originated and spread by political demagogues for selfish and ambitious purposes, and many well-disposed persons were thus deceived, and their zeal to destroy Masonry rose above all other subjects of public concern. Strange that intelligent men could have ever persuaded themselves that Anti-Masonry had a base broad enough upon which to build up a party, that "the manifold interests of a great country, its trade, commerce and general industry; its finance, its development through the thousand channels of public adminstration, its party alliances, its ambitious strifes and its multiform pursuits could all be reduced into subordination to the purpose ef extirpating Masonry by political action." The incidents are so well known that we will only briefly allude to them.

The opponents of Andrew Jackson, who was a Royal Arch Mason, found themselves in a dilemma. For Henry Clay, who was the idol of the Whig party, was a Mason, aad wishing "to be right rather than to be President," would not sacrifice his principles nor violate his solemn obligation. William Wirt was, therefore, selected as the standard bearer. And yet he, in his letter of acceptance, pays a high tribute to the cause so unjustly assailed. Says he, "I was myself initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry. I never took the Master's degree, but it proceeded from no suspicion on my part that there was any thing criminal in the institution, or any thing that placed its members in the slightest degree in collision with their allegiance to their country and its laws. I have thought and repeatedly said that I considered Masonry as having nothing to do with politics, and nothing has surprised me more than to see it blown into consequence in the Northern and Eastern States as a political engine, and the whole community excited against it." As the day of election drew near, wishing to be relieved from the position into which he had beeh reluctantly forced, he writes: "To persist in the nomination will only expose their weakness. They cannot carry a single State, except, perhaps, one. They cannot even organize an electoral ticket to the South of New York, except, perhaps, in Pennsylvania. It will annihilate them, and me too, by the mere force of ridicule." The result of the election proved the truth of his prophecy, for out of the 286 electoral votes Gen. Jackson received 219, Mr. Clay 49, Mr. Floyd 11, and Mr. Wirt seven. Thus the fanatical spirit which enkindled the flame of persecution and spread over the face of one section of our land with the wild fury of a mghty conflagration was quenched. It was short-lived, and its few paroxysms in subsequent years were followed by utter dissolution. Like Hudibrah's musket, which missed the mark it aimed at

> Recoiled and knocked its owner over."

The attempted assassination of Masonry turned out, as with other assassinations, only to confirm her power and to hasten her coming hypotheosis. Antæus-like, she reached that point of extreme depression where by touching the ground she touched also the giant spring of that power in which she rose and now triumphantly reigns.

Garibaldi.

We note that Garibaldi has issued a flaming call for a gathering of free thinkers, in opposition to the Ecumenical Council, and among other societies enumerated we find the Freemasons. We protest, in behalf of the Craft universal, against having Freemasonry, even by name, mixed up in the atheistical revolutionary hodge podge fathered by the celebrated Italian. We protest and deny his right to drag the Institution into even apparent antagonism with any sect of religionists, even though, as in the case of the Catholic Church, that sect be its open and avowed enemy. We protest against being mixed up with political or revolutionary measures of any kind; and, more than all, we most strenuously object to having our garments soiled by the contact of free thinkers, or, in plainer English, atheists. If the general would have patience to reflect for a few moments, he would see that his motion has for effect to increase the importance of the Ecumenical Council, and lend interest to its deliberations; while the idea of fighting it before it has opened its mouth, is to place one's self in the attitude of firing six-pounders at the moon. If the Roman Council bounds its deliberations by the needs of the Catholic faith, and lets the rest of mankind alone, we fail to perceive why the rest of mankind need get unduly excited over the fact. If on the other hand, it attacks other sects, or societies, we venture to believe that it will then be time enough for the party attacked to defend itself. Should the Council go out of its way to attack Fremasonry, the attack, judging from what has gone before, must be in the nature of a slander, and against that we have the major remedy of proving, by our acts, that it cannot reach us through the invulnerable armor of truth and right, in which we are panoplied. But if such attack could be justified, it would be by the fact that our Institution had joined hands with the political associations of Europe. We therefore request the Ecumenical Council to take notice that, notwithstanding the call of Garibaldi, Freemasonry has and will have nothing to do with his gathering or its objects.—Holmes.

Lawful Information.

The following rules in regard to the admission of a visitor in a lodge, embrace the whole subject in a convenient form:

1. It is not sufficient evidence to the lodge of a visitor's Masonic standing, that his name appears in the printed proceedings of a Grand Lodge or in the printed catalogue of his own lodge.

2. It is not sufficient evidence to the lodge of a visitor's Masonic standing, that he has been seen in a Masonic procession.

3. It is not sufficient evidence to the lodge, of a visitor's Masonic standing, that he had delivered a letter of introduction to some member of the lodge, even less if the letter was to some person not a member of the lodge.

4. It is not sufficient evidence to the lodge of a visitor's Masonic standing, that he has been examined and vouched for by a private member not legally authorized to do so by the Master or one of the Wardens. None have the authority save the Master and Warden. The lodge elects them to attend to its business, and it is sheer impertinence for a private member to intermeddle therein without leave asked or power granted.

It is not sufficient evidence to a lodge of a visitor's Masonic standing, that he presents a diploma from some lodge of which he claims to be or to have been a member.

6. It is not sufficient evidence to a lodge of a visitor's Masonic standing that Bro. A. declares that Bro. B. vouches that Bro. C. knows him to be a Master Mason.

7. It is not sufficient evidence to a lodge of a visitor's Masonic standing as a Master Mason, that some member present vouches that he has sat with him in an Entered Apprentice's or Fellow Craft's lodge.

8. It is not sufficient evidence to the lodge of a visitor's Masonic standing, that popular opinion considers him a Mason. The voice of the people is not a voice that can admit a stranger in a Masonic lodge.

Death of Amos Kendall.

The deaths of prominent men are lately occurring with uncommon frequency. We have to record that of Amos Kendall, who breathed his last at Washington recently, at the ripe age of eighty years. Twenty-five years ago, few men in America were exerting a larger influence upon the public mind than Kendall, then Postmaster General under Van Buren, and one of the principal writers for the Washington Globe. He was equally prominent as an executive officer, and as a political leader. Probably no man ever displayed better organizing power in the postal department. He made the service "pay," and opened the way for cheap postage. Possessed of a religious cast of mind, he appealed to the serious and solemn instincts of the people in his political writings, and exercised a controlling influence upon the minds of earnest men. During the twelve years of the Administrations of Jackson and Van Buren, he was one of the very first minds influencing the policy of the nation. Previous to that time, he had led an active and useful life, partly in the practice of his profession, and partly in various official positions.

With the defeat of Van Buren he retired from active participation in politics, and engaged in other active pursuits with great profit to his private fortune. In 1845 he assumed the entire management of Prof. Morse's interest in the American Electro-Magnetic Telegraph. His organizing power was conspicuously shown in the immediate development of this new science, to which he devoted his chief attention during the remainder of his life. He accumulated a colossal fortune, and dispensed charities with a prodigal hand. He was also conspicuous in various organizations for benevolent purposes. The city of Washington owes him for one of its handsomest church edifices, which he constructed entirely from his own funds, and then made a free present of it to the Baptist Society of that city.—New Age.

Socrates called beauty a short-lived tyranny Plato, a privilege of nature; Theophrastus, a silent cheat; Theocritus, a delightful prejudice; Carneades, a solitary kingdom; Domitian said that nothing is more grateful; Aristotle affirmed that beauty was better than all the letters of recommendation in the world; Homer, that 'twas a glorious gift of nature; and Ovid, alluding to it, calls it a favor bestowed by the gods.

Portrait Gallery of Living Masons.

THEODORE SUTTON PARVIN,

Brother Parvin was educated for the bar, but pursued his profession only ten years, during which period he filled the office of prosecuting attorney of one of the districts of the Territory, Judge of the County Court, Secretary of the Senate, &c.

His Masonic career commenced March 14, 1838, when he was initiated in Nova Cœsarea Harmony Lodge No. 2, at Cincinnati, Ohio; was passed April 9, and raised May 9 of the same year. In order to extend the benefits of the Institution into the Territory, he united with others November, 1840, in the organization of Des Moines Lodge, No. 41, at Burlington, Iowa, receiving the authority from the Grand Lodge of Missouri, and was its first Senior Deacon. On the 13th of February, following, he also united in the organization of Iowa Lodge No. 42, at Muscatine, his then residence, but then known as Bloomington. Iowa Lodge derived its authority from the Grand Lodge of Missouri also. In this lodge he was its first Senior Deacon, and for the two succeeding years its Secretary, and the fourth and fifth years, Master. He still retains his membership in that lodge, though residing at Iowa City, whither he removed some years since.

Our esteemed brother had the honor to be a member of the Convention of Masons, held at Iowa City on the 7th and 8th days of January, 1844, when the Grand Lodge of Iowa was organized; was its first Grand Secretary, and, with the exception of two years—1851, 1852—the latter of which he filled the office of Grand Master, has since performed the onerous duties of the Secretariat, with a fidelity and ability which have caused him to be viewed as a model keeper of the archives.

In Capitular Masonry, he was advanced January 5, and exalted January 7, 1845, in Iowa City Chapter, No. 2, and retained his membership therein until he united in the formation of Washington Chapter No. 4, at Muscatine, September 27, 1852, of which he was elected High Priest, December 27, 1853.

Companion Parvin was President of the Convention which organized the Grand Chapter of Iowa, January 8, 1854, and was elected first Grand High Priest. The succeeding year he was elected Grand Secretary, a position, however, he does not retain.

Shortly after the Triennial Convocation of the General Grand Chapter, at Chicago, in 1859, the Grand Chapter of Iowa withdrew from partnership in the former body.

In Cryptic Masonry, Companion Parvin received the degrees of Royal and Select Master, in a council working under the warrant of Dubuque Chapter No. 3, September 27, 1847. All councils emanating from Illinois, at that time, were thus irregularly formed; and the healing process being gone through, he assisted in the formation of Webb Council in 1855, upon the reorganized basis.

In the Chivalric Order he was created and dubbed a Knight Templar, January 9, 1845, in Apollo Commandery No 1, Chicago, Illinois; and on the 15th of March following, when De Molay Commandery No. 1, at Muscatine was organized, he was named its Commander. At the formation of the Grand Commandery for the State of Iowa, in 1864, he was elected first Right Eminent Grand Commander, and re-elected the following year.

At Hartford, in 1856, Companion Parvin was proxy for Grand King and Grand Scribe of the Grand Chapter of Iowa, in the General Grand Chapter of the United States; and, at Chicago, in September, 1859, he was again its proxy at the Triennial Convocation there held. At the Triennial Conclave of the Grand Encampment of the United States, held in 1869, he was proxy for the Eminent Commander of De Molay Commandery No. 1, at Muscatine.

R. W. Brother Parvin has the honor of being the representative near the Grand Lodge of Iowa, of the following Grand Lodges: Illinois, Minnesota, New Jersey, Nova Scotia, Ohio, and Vermont.

In Ineffable Masonry he received all the degrees of the A. A. Scottish Rite under the Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspector General 33°, for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, and is now an active member of the same, and Ill. Grand Chamberlain. He was admitted in 1859.

As a speaker, Brother Parvin is logical and convincing invariably appealing to the kindlier feelings of his brethren, and gaining as much on their confidence by his pleasing manners and graceful action as by the force of the common sense he utters. He is a Masonic conservative of the old school, and delights in being called an old fogy. As a writer, in addition to his many splendid reports and addresses, he made quite a reputation while editing the columns of his journal, the Western Freemason, and none regretted more its discontinuance than the writer of this sketch. The first number was issued in October, 1859. He was one of the regular contributors to that excellent organ of Freemasonry for the State of Iowa, the Evergreen, published at Dubuque, and gazetteed as such as late as September last, since when his name does not appear.

To show his independence of character, we will conclude our portrait with a quotation from his Salutatory: "I have enjoyed all the honors an over-partial Brotherhood can bestow, have passed every round of my mystic ladder, and for fifteen years stood upon the topmast (Secretarait of a young but full-grown Grand Lodge), and viewing the field of labor on all sides, have no place to seek, no power to covet, no friends to promote, and hence no selfish end to advance."

Such a man, and such a Mason is Theodore Sutton Parvin, who we trust will long be spared to the Craft in Iowa, of which he is one of the chiefest ornaments.—Pomeroy's Democrat.

Orphans' Home, Mississippi.

While the Grand Lodge was in session last October, Mrs. Laura Reed, daughter of Gen. Duff Green, formerly well known as the publisher of the Telegraph at Washington, and a relative of Bro. B. S. Edwards, Judge of the Springfield Circuit, visited the Hall previous to resuming labor, and, in a few thrilling words of magical power, laid before the brethren the condition of the Orphans' Home. Her father, late husband, and son, all of the mystic tie, gave her access to her auditors. The result is contained in the following documents:

Office of the M. W. G. Master, A., F. & A. M., of the State of Mississippi,

"Most Worshipful Sir and Brother:

"I ask to thank you for the generous reception which, through your agency, the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois extended to Mrs. Laura Reed, agent of the Orphans' Home of Mississippi. This institution is not a Grand Lodge enterprise, but receives the very warmest sympathy of the Grand Lodge of this State. I have the honor to be President of the Board of Trustees, and in that capacity have ascertained that about ninety children at the "Home" are the orphans of Masons. We would be very grateful for anything in the way of provisions for our children.

"Thanking you again, allow me to write myself in the bonds of friendship, morality, and brotherly love. "Fraternally yours,

"Thos. S. Gathright, Grand Mnster of Miss,

"To H. G. Reynolds, M. W. G. M. of Illinois."

Office Treasurer Orphans' Home,
Brooksville, Miss., October 22, 1869.

"Received of Mr. Harman G. Reynolds, M. W. G. M., the sum of one hundred and fifteen dollars and seventy-five cents for use and benefit of Orphans' Home.

"T. J. Deupree,
"Treasurer Orphans' Home."

Brooksville, Miss., Oct. 22, 1869.

"Harman G. Reynolds, Esq., M. W. G. M. of Masons, State of Illinois:

Dear Sir—Through our agent, Mrs. Laura Reed, I have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of one hundred and fifteen dollars and seventy-five cents, a contribution from your Grand Lodge to the Orphan's Home of Mississippi, a receipt for the same is herewith inclosed. Permit me, in behalf of the Board of Trustees, to return you thanks for the donation, and be assured that the little orphans will remember with gratitude your kindness to them.

"The number of orphans at the 'Home' at the present time is about 200. We would be glad to succor more of them and raise them up to be useful citizens, but have not the means. We are now buying, at high prices, every pound of meat used, and almost all of the bread. Our State raises comparatively no meat, and the present corn crop is almost a failure, so we feel compelled to ask the benevolent of other States to aid us in taking care of the little unfortunate ones who, deprived of their natural protectors, appeal to us for shelter, food, and raiment. About one-half of the children at the 'Home' are the offspring of deceased Masons, and any further assistance you may see proper to render us will thus be shared by those who more directly appeal to your charity.

"With high regard, I am your o'bt serv't,

"T. J. Deupree,

Office of the G. Rec. of G. Encampment K. T.,
United States of America,

John D. Caldwell, Grand Recorder.

Grand Encampment U. S. A.

To our Right Eminent and Eminent Commanders of the Temple, opu to all Valiant Knights within our jurisdiction, greeting:

The General Grand Encampment of the United States, at its triennial meeting held at Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, in September, A. D. 1859, unanimously amended the constitution, whereby it adopted the title of "Grand Encampment," with the name of "Grand Commandery" for State bodies, instead of "Grand Encampment," as then before used, "Commandery" instead of "Encampment" for subordinate bodies, and by which it also adopted certain other changes in the titles of officers in grand encampment, grand commandery, and commandery.

In several jurisdictions there remained for some years after the grand constitution was amended, various sections of the constitutions of State grand bodies in conflict with the provisions of our constitution, as well in the titles of those bodies, as in other essential provisions.

One by one these State grand bodies have complied with the constitutional requirements of our Grand Encampment, until in the jurisdiction of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, there alone existed the ancient nomenclature.

Official information has now been received, that the grand body of Templars of this jurisdiction, at its annual assembly, held at Providence, R. I., on the 29th day of the present October, by a unanimous vote, amended its constitution, making it conformable in every respect with the constitution of our Grand Encampment.

The Grand Master takes this opportunity to communicate this happy result to the Templars of the United States, and to congratulate them upon the universal loyalty which reigns in every State from Maine to California, to the Grand Encampment of United States, not only in name, but in very deed.

Given at Boston, this thirtieth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

One copy, one year..$1 25

All communications should be addressed to H. G. REYNOLDS, or THE MASONIC TROWEL, Springfield, Ill.

We will hereafter publish regular lists of our agents, so that the brethren may always know who are authorized to receive money for us for THE TROWEL.

The place of birth, age, name, time and place of death, and membership of deceased brethren, are solicited. Resolutions are declined.

We are responsible for our agents, and none others, but favors will be gratefully received from all who may send us subscribers, orders, or work.

NOTICE.—Remittances by Express and Registered Letters at our risk. Parties sending us money by mail must assume the risk.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., DEC. 15, 1869.

☞No communication or advertisement is likely to receive attention, if received after the first of each month, in the issue immediately following.

The Master of a Lodge.

The honor, rank, powers and dignity of a Worshipful Master are not understood by the Craft at large. In most lodges he is held as a presiding officer, with such powers only as are conferred upon him by statute laws.

The Grand Lodge of Illinois, while guarding carefully its own rights and the rights of its subordinates, has been equally as careful of the powers, prerogatives and dignity of Masters.

We have been greatly impressed with this idea, as we have beheld the anxiety to attain positions in grand lodge.

The moment a brother is installed Master of a lodge, his rank is that of a Past Master, and he is eligible to the position of Grand Warden, Deputy Grand Master, or Grand Master.

In case of the absence of the Grand Master, Deputy, or Grand Wardens, the present or past Master of the oldest lodge represented officiates as Grand Master. And in case of their death or disability, such present or past Master becomes Grand Master in fact.

We maintain, therefore, that the dignity and honor of the Master of a lodge in grand lodge is next to that of Grand Warden. He is a permanent member, and the chief representative and spokesman of his lodge in grand lodge. Any Master Mason in good standing may be elected Grand Treasurer, Secretary, Orator, Chaplain or Tyler, and by virtue of such election become a permanent member, but he cannot thereby become eligible to either of the first four offices. For this reason, although not invested with Right Worshipful, the rank of a Master ought to correspond with the honor and dignity of his station. And such Master holds his right of representation in his own hands. He can attend in person or appoint such member of his own lodge as his proxy as may suit his pleasure. Over this matter his lodge has no control.

At the Grand Communication of 1868, four hundred and thirty-four lodges were represented, and of these two hundred and seventy-five were represented by their Masters in person, and two hundred and thirty-one by Masters alone. Each lodge is entitled to three votes; and if there be but one representative present, he casts the whole. The entire vote, aside from the vote by lodges, cannot exceed eleven votes at this time, and this may be increased or diminished by the addition or diminution of Past Grand Masters.

The two hundred and thirty-one lodges represented by Masters alone, command six hundred and ninety-three votes, while all the other votes combined, including Masters and their proxies, are but six hundred and twenty votes. This is a fair comparison of session by session.

But of the other forty-four represented in part by Masters, the Masters commanded seventy-nine votes, which, added to the six hundred and ninety-three, makes seven hundred and seventy-two votes.

Ninety-three Masters and thirty-two Wardens were represented by proxy, and but ninety-six Wardens were present in person. If asked why there is such a disproportion between the Masters and their proxies and the Wardens and their proxies, we answer that the representative highest in rank, or his proxy, draws the mileage and per diem, and this indirectly gives the control of the Grand Lodge to the Masters themselves.

Of the one hundred and twenty-five proxies, and ninety-six Wardens, we know, by inspecting the list, that sixty-five are Past Masters, and they commanded full one hundred and twenty-five votes, which, added to the seven hundred and seventy-two, makes eight hundred and ninety-seven. The whole number of votes in 1868 was thirteen hundred and thirteen. Two-thirds of this number is eight hundred and seventy-six votes, or twenty-one less than the votes actually controlled by the Masters and Past Masters of lodges. And we presume that a careful analysis would give the Masters and Past Masters full three-fourths of the vote at every Grand Communication.

We have now demonstrated the numerical power of Masters in grand lodge, and will proceed to show their individual powers. One lodge, represented by its Master alone, can tie the votes of the Grand Master, Deputy and Grand Wardens. Four lodges, represented by four Masters alone, can out-vote all the Grand and Past Grand officers combined.

It may be said that the influence of position over-rides the influence of the Masters. This we emphatically deny.

There are but two grand officers who, as a rule, can exercise more influence in their stations than on the floor. The Grand Master, by virtue of his power, if he be a wise and just officer, does, and of right should, wield a large influence. But it should be borne in mind that he is a Past Master; that he is selected by them as one in whom they and the entire Craft may safely trust. He is selected for his ability, his wisdom, his character, and for his adaptation to the peculiar duties of his office; and hence, while every one may be, and should be, carefully watched, still, if he be found faithful and able, he will have all the influence he ought to have.

The Grand Secretary, if he be an able and competent man, has peculiar influence, especially in shaping and giving direction to business and correspondence. Aside from these two positions, we maintain that an unembarrassed position on the floor carries with it a weight and power wholly superior to that of official position.

We call to mind four special instances at the last Grand Communication: the first was the report made upon the Address by Judge Cunningham, W. M. of 157; his clear and direct statement, and his unanswerable arguments derived from Masonic law, carried overwhelming conviction, and resulted in the adoption of principles, which, if observed, will work a silent but efficient revolution in many matters of Masonic polity in this State.

The next to which we allude was the report of the Committee on Grievances, by W. Bro. Hudson, Master of 179. After six days of patient labor with his stalwart colleagues, he came in with a report more terse, complete, fine-cut and ringing than any one ever emanating before from the able committees who have sat in judgment upon appeals. And the manner of delivery by the silver-haired veteran won praise far better than official position can give.

The next was the report upon lodges U. D., by W. Bro. Rounsville, P. M. of No. 15. The situation was a perplexing one, but the report removed all doubts, and was adopted without dissent.

While we might allude to fifty instances of influence, we will mention but one more. When the ancient constitutions and usages were being discussed, the W. M. of 292, wholly unknown to fame, surprised the whole grand body by a careful statement of the history of York and Ancient Craft Masonry in England.

It may be said that the official positions are necessary in order to attain the position of Grand Master. By no means. Six of our Grand Masters have been taken from the floor, or from without the line of succession. Leaving the present incumbent out of consideration, we may truthfully say that they were all able men, and, with one exception, successful Grand Masters. The exception we make was Grand Master Walker. We do not by this depreciate any other brother who has filled the chief executive chair. But the point we make is this: the Grand Lodge of Illinois (and every other grand lodge) is entitled to call its wisest, ablest and best men to preside over its affairs, and position should not influence a single vote. As but few Masters can gain the Grand East, so they should be the more solicitous that a self-poised mind, a clear brain, marked ability, a firm hand, and a resolute, conscientious will should be selected to rule; from the line, if within it; from without the line, if best.

The most important distinction, to our mind, is to serve as chairman of a committee; the next, to serve on a committee. But it is by no means unimportant to sit as a legislator, as a judge, or as an administrator, and pass all these matters presented by committees, and brought forward by the grand officers, in a careful review.

Heretofore, and at various times, we have presented our views at considerable length in regard to the office of Master, as related to the interests of a lodge.

We come now to say to our brethren that their lodges, through their representatives, and mainly through their Masters, are component parts of the grand lodge. Hence the necessity of selecting men qualified by character, information and skill to preside over them, and wisely and honestly to represent them. We urgently press upon them to let nothing influence them in the selection of Masters but the good of Masonry in the most comprehensive and general meaning of the term.

What we have said here applies generally to all grand lodges in the United States, and to most of them quite as fully as to our own.

Occidental Consistory, Chicago.

Having some business to transact in Chicago, we so timed our visit as to be present during two of the four days' convention, which this splendid body was holding in the old Masonic Temple. We saw the Rose Croix, Kadosh, and S. P. R. S. grades worked on twenty-three candidates, and worked as they are worked no where else save in Cincinnati and New York City. We have not been in the temple since September of last year, and were astonished and delighted to witness the wondrous change that has been wrought in the adornments and fittings of the two full stories which are occupied by the consistory, in common with Apollo Commandery and Lafayette Chapter. Outside the costly Scotch Rite palace of Cincinnati, there are, probably, no rooms in the country that are now so well provided with A. & A. R. scenery, costumes, machinery, and furniture, as are these. Several thousand dollars have been expended under the immediate supervision of that eminent Templar, author, and tactician, Sir Knight Brower—who is known among his intimates as "pious Monk" Brower. He has an artist's eye, and a scene builder's skill, and having a body of men at his back who cheered him on, instead of putting obstacles in his way, he has made the dingy old temple a thing of beauty and convenience. The degrees were admirably and fully conferred, under the immediate supervision of good old father Van Rensselaer, who is never so happy as when engaged in Masonic work. We were rejoiced to be permitted to grasp once more his dextral digits, to look into his honest eyes, and to note the fact that he was looking better than we had ever seen him appear before. The amiable and venerable frater actually seems to grow younger instead of older.

Prominent among the workers, we observed illustrious Breth. Hurlbut (father and son), Stevens, Gale, Smith, Brower, Myers, Egan, Ramsey, Blaney, Bigelow, Miles, Montgomery, Leffingwell, Patrick, and numbers of others whose names have escaped us. The attendance was large, Iowa, as usual, being represented by a number of brethren from Lyons, including the accomplished Bro. Leffingwell and Breth. Baldwin and Marquis, who enjoyed themselves hugely. Most excellent Pitkin, whose rear name is Wright, had just left as we arrived, after having "blazed the comet of a season." We owe him one for not waiting a day longer. The most graceful courtesies were bestowed on the visiting brethren, by Hurlbut (the commander-in chief), Wentworth, Egan, Stevens, et. al., and the banquet to the grand army was more recherche and enjoyable than usual.

Among the notables present from outside the city, we noticed Grand Master Reynolds and his alter-ego, the amiable Grand Secretary, Miner. We interviewed Reynolds, and the words of wisdom that fell from his lips during his infrequent mascatory pauses, are recorded "and faith we'll prent 'em" by and by. He is "some" on provender, is Reynolds. Indeed, that is characteristic of the dignitaries in the Order, taking Morris, Hemenway, Wright, Jno. Scott, "Joe" Chapman, Bower, and cetera as special proofs of the averment, but we are sorry to say, for the honor of our State, that Reynolds can euchre them all and not half try. In the way of appetite, as in matters official, he holds both bowers, the ace, the king and queen everytime. The last we saw of him on that memorable night, he was deep in the discussion of the momentous question which has puzzled so many Masonic jurists—after dinner—who was the father of Mrs. Zebedee's children!—Evergreen.

Guilbert on eating and provender! rich, decidedly. True enough, Grand High Priest Wright had been there, and had won all hearts since it was ascertained that he and his wife had become acquainted; but when he learned that Guilbert, with his train was coming, he slid! When our Esculapius made his debut, the sables turned ashy pale, and all the commanders and ex-commanders of Templarism in Chicago, concentrated in Occidental, held a solemn consultation! Wiley inquired, "who among us is the Achan?" Theodore remarked that he heard that he was coming, but disbelieved it, because it had always been understood that he was not a middle-man.

Then Vincent says, "Surely you ought to have known that his coming was as certain as 'unconditional election.' Did you see the disgust of the G. H. P. of Missouri when Iowa was announced at the General Grand Banquet at St. Louis? His face said as plainly as a face could say, 'you are welcome, but really I did not make suitable provision for such an unlooked for event;' and the victuals just naturally went to Guilbert. Now, he has come, and when he comes, the Southern Jurisdiction comes too, and I don't propose that Occidental shall 'knuckle down.' Chicago never was beaten, and Occidental always has been equal to the situation, but if ever either of them were in 'imminent danger,' that time is now. What shall we do, Ammi?"

The latter functionary very coolly answered by calling one of the sables, and ordering him to take the first car, and go to Union Park, and tell Jim. that Guilbert has come, and to bring all his cooked hams, oysters, in shell and can, chickens, eggs, bread, crackers, and sauces, coffee and tea, and to come to stay, for he was needed. As soon as the sable disappeared, James proposed a telegram to Bill. Palmer, at Milwaukee, to have all the provision stores closed, and to hold their entire stocks ready for orders at a moment's notice; and gave as a reason that Bill. Palmer knew Guilbert's capacity. While the sable was absent on his mission of mercy, necessity and safety, the commanders and ex-commanders gathered into a corner to draw consolation from several Habanas. After two or three curls around Ben's elegant head, he asked if any one of them ever heard of the Hen Convention at Dubuque? "What is it Ben?" came from every one.

Ben commenced: "You know that Guilbert used to live at Waukegan, and then at Elgin, before he settled in Dubuque. Immediately after the latter event, the hens held a convention in the outskirts of the city, and when inquiry was made, 'what-for they were come together,' one motherly dame, with a fine topknot, remarked that she formerly lived in Elgin, and that from the time Dr. Guilbert came there until she was brought away, not one chicken was born in Elgin, and that she was sure that not one would be born in Dubuque as long as he stayed there! and, for her part, she was going back to Elgin; and with one consent, they all took private quarters on the ferry-boat, went to Illinois the same night, and the next morning not a hen was to be found in Dubuque!"

Guilbert on provender! Why to see him masticate, one would imagine that he left Iowa to get something to eat. There is one consolation, however, Occidental did live through it without going into bankruptcy; but to see them repairing damages, one would think they were preparing for a return to specie payment!

General History, Cyclopedia, and Dictionary of Freemasonry.--By Robert Macoy.

Fronting the title-page is an elegant likeness of Bro. Macoy, natural as life. A "general history of Freemasonry is given in the first sixty-eight pages; three hundred and twenty-eight pages, embracing a large number of elegant plates and illustrations are then devoted to a Cyclopedia embracing a "comprehensive explication of the whole system of Freemasonry, and of kindred or similar associations."

Three hundred pages then give Oliver's Symbolical Dictionary, including several valuable plates, making in all 700 pages. It is a complete and comprehensive work, and supplies the place of several separate volumes, and is invaluable for reference and ready means of information.

Bro. Thomson is the agent for the work in the West. It is also for sale at Trowel Masonic store.

Woman.--Her Rights, Wrongs, Privileges, and Responsibilities.

The history of woman, as given by the author is very interesting, and we presume is literally true. At least, it is true so far as we know. The wrongs of woman, together with her powers and capacities are fairly and graphically stated. While there seems to be, as is clearly the intention, a disposition to treat woman fairly, still the anti-female-suffrage side is pretty strongly stated, and more strongly illustrated, and while we are forced to yield assent to most of the arguments, we can not avoid the remark that a man would answer some of the author's positions very successfully. It is now to be seen whether woman will dispose of the matter by ridicule, sneers, ill-temper, or downright good-tempered argument. If she does not use the logic and argument so manifestly in her reach, then Dr. Brockett has won the day.

Information Wanted.

William P. Gulick, a Royal Arch Mason, formerly of Rushville, but more recently of Beardstown, by occupation a miller, left his family at Beardstown about the 12th of October last, and went to Missouri in search of employment. He wrote to his wife from Chillicothe, Mo., and since that she has no word from him, but there is a rumor that he is somewhere in Illinois or Kansas. He was very unwell when he left, and she fears that he is suffering from sickness, while she is nearly destitute. He is five feet seven inches high, dark complexioned, dark heavy beard, has a large scar over the left eye, hair thin, heavy set, and is agreeable in his manners. He took with him a black valise and large trunk, well filled. He is also a member of the Methodist Church and a Good Templar. Any brother knowing the whereabouts and condition of Bro. Gulick, will render a valuable service to a distressed wife by writing to Bro. M. L. Read,

Beardstown, Ill.

Exchanges.

We have received three numbers of Brennan's Freemason, all told, and in those numbers we read more miserable vituperations about ourself and others than often falls to our lot.

The September number of the Monthly came with a flattering notice of us and The Trowel, which we glanced at in such terms as it deserved, considering the very little time then at our command. We have received no number since, and we hope that no feeling of cowardice will prevent the sending of both those journals. We can frankly assure the editors and scribblers of both of them, that it is our intention in the future to give them "their just due," and that they shall not spoil for want of notice. And by way of commencement, we class them among anti-Masonic journals, and desire to exchange with them for the same reason that we exchange with the infamous Cynosure, so that we may be posted up in the "doings and intentions" of the old Adversary, and may be the better able to show them up in their true colors. So, come on!

Gentlemanly Postoffice Officials.

In our correspondence, which is pretty large, we often have intercourse with persons connected with the postoffices of the country, with whom it is a real pleasure to do business. Among such is the entire force in the Springfield Office, whom we have always found to be pleasant and accommodating. All our citizens will bear testimony to this fact. Another such is the postmaster at Pleasant Plain, Iowa. By mistake, we sent a letter there to a gentleman who resides in another town in the same county. The P. M. returned us our letter, and also wrote us a short, but pleasant note, stating what he believed was the postoffice address of the person to whom the letter was sent. Also many postmasters take particular pains to give us the new postoffice address of subscribers to The Trowel, who formerly received the paper at their postoffice, but have moved away. We give our sincere thanks to them all.

Brethren who are getting up lists of subscribers for The Trowel are requested to forward them as soon as they are completed. It is often the case that they are delayed until in January, and then it is almost impossible to get them all down correctly on our subscription list. We only keep two lists and only two persons can be at work at one time entering names, and they must all be entered and the lists corrected in time for the January Trowel, and if there is a great hurry and rush, there is apt to be some mistakes.

Palestine Explorations.

Our lodges who desire a rich intellectual treat and a comfortable entertainment for some of our long winter evenings, will do well to read the advertisement of R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson, of Fulton, in our advertising columns.

Those of our brethren who have heard these lectures speak highly of them. They are rich, solid, and entertaining, and far better than the thin and pedantic lecture of the graceless La Grange Jesuit.

We hope that our brethren will send for Bro. Thomson.

We call the attention of our readers to the two advertisements on our last page, of The Masonic Token and the "General History Cyclopedia," and Symbolical Dictionary of Freemasonry, published by the Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company of New York. We have examined those books, and know they are what the advertisements describes them to be.

The Masonic Token,

Is a beautiful gift book, edited by Bro. Wm. T. Anderson, 32°, and issued by the Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company, 432 Broome street, New York.

It is bound in morocco and gilt, and is just such a gift as a lady admiring Freemasonry, or a member of the Eastern Star might properly crave from a devoted husband or manly lover.

Orders will be received at The Trowel office.

Visit to Carrollton.

In accordance with a previous invitation we visited Carrollton Lodge No. 50, December 1. It may be as well to speak of other matters now. At Jacksonville, the Toledo, Wabash & Western, the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis by Jacksonville, and the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville, all meet at the same depot, and the latter road is intending to reach St. Louis by way of Carlinville and Bunker Hill. At Whitehall preparations are making to receive the cars on the road from Beardstown by Winchester. This road is also to reach St. Louis by Brighton. This is our first trip from Jacksonville south, and we are gratified with the evidences of material prosperity, maturity, and comfort on every hand. Murrayville, Manchester, and Whitehall are large and flourishing towns, and the homes of excellent lodges. Upon arriving at Carrollton we were taken in charge by Dr. Samuel, Hon. J. W. English, and the officers of the lodge, and were made the welcome guest of Dr. Samuel and his amiable family.

Dr. J. B. Samuel was born in Caroline county, Va., June 2, 1798, and was initiated in July, 1819, being as soon as he could be received upon coming of age. In June, 1832, after having served as Secretary and Warden, he was elected Master of St. Andrew's Lodge No. 18, at Cynthiana, Kentucky. In February, 1832, he settled in Carrollton, where he has ever since resided, and been in the unintermitted practice of medicine. In October, 1847, at the session of the Grand Lodge at Quincy, a petition was presented for a charter for Fletcher Lodge at Carrollton, and the petition was granted without the intervention of a dispensation—the only case in our knowledge. Dr. Samuel was the Master named in the charter. The following year, 1848, we met him in Grand Lodge at Alton, and the name of the lodge was changed to Carrollton. Over that lodge he presided by his original appointment and election for thirteen years, and for the whole period has been in Grand Lodge with the exception of three meetings. He is emphatically the Patriarch of the lodge, as he is in his church and the community which he has so long graced.

For one year, Hon. D. M. Woodson was Master. In 1840—41, we attended the session of the Legislature in Springfield, and at some time during the session, the Fraternity had a celebration. The procession was quite imposing, and Judge Woodson delivered the oration in the State House; it was both powerful and elegant, and made a good impression. He was then a member of the Legislature, as he was a member of the Constitutional Convention in 1847, and is now a member of the General Assembly. After the adoption of the Constitution, the people of his Circuit elected him Judge—a position he held for eighteen years.

In 1863, Hon. J. W. English was elected Master, and held the position for five years. He is the son of Dr. Nathaniel English, long a resident, and noted physician and citizen in Jacksonville. Bro. English is a member of the Constitutional Convention, and an Attorney in successful and profitable practice.

He was succeeded by W. Bro. Geo. W. Davis, the present incumbent, who graces the station with ability and dignity.

Early in the evening we were conducted to the Hall, and were introduced by W. Breth. Samuel and English, and were handsomely received and welcomed by the W. M. and lodge. About seventy-five brethren were in attendance, quite a number of whom were from the lodges at Whitehall, Fayette, Greenfield, Kane, and Jerseyville. After the reception, the third degree was conferred in a masterly and impressive manner. Bro. Davis had every portion of his work, including the manual parts, committed to memory. A call to refreshment, a nice collation, an agreeable chat, and labor resumed.

We spoke for a few moments, and were followed in eloquent remarks by Judge Woodson, Rev. W. D. Clark, and Bro. Withers, Commander of Hugh de Payens Commandery No. 29, and formerly a member of the Legislature. Dr. Samuel gave his experience, and Bro. English closed the speaking in some eloquent remarks.

The meeting was very pleasant, the lodge is high-toned and has a fine hall and complete appointments for meetings in every way.

Visit to Meredosia.

In October, 1848, we started from Rock Island down the Mississippi River, as a representative of Cambridge Lodge No. 49, to attend the grand communication of the Grand Lodge at Alton. On our way we fell in with Dr. W. J. Wackerle, who was also on his way to procure a charter for a new lodge at Meredosia.

For several years its existence was precarious, and its future uncertain. But for some time past, it has been growing in numbers, character, self-respect, and union, until it has housed itself in an elegant lodge-room, handsomely furnished, and with full and complete appointments.

Upon invitation, we visited the lodge on the 25th ult., and found the room crowded with the members of the lodge and visitors from Naples and Versailles, including the Worshipful Masters from both places.

W. Bro. S. S. Winegar, a disciple of Bro. Dickey, presided. The opening and closing ceremonies of a lodge were exemplified, and many questions in relation to work, law, and usage, were answered. Remarks were made by several brethren, and the evening was spent in a pleasant and useful manner.

We were the guest of the Worshipful Master, Bro. J. H. Carver, who with his amiable wife, took special pains to make our stay agreeable and pleasant. We certainly feel grateful to our brethren everywhere we have been for their kind care and hospitality, and to none more than to our newly-formed acquaintances at Meredosia, and we cordially wish an unbroken prosperity to Benevolent Lodge No. 52.

Dedication at Avon.

The brethren of Avon Harmony Lodge No. 253, at the beautiful town of Avon, in Fulton county, on the C., B. & Q. R. R., have provided themselves a convenient hall, beautifully finished and up for comfort and use.

Upon invitation, we visited Avon on the 9th, of November, and were hospitably entertained by W. Bro. O. Crissey and his better half. R. W. Bro. John W. Ross soon put in his appearance, and we took seats with his uncle, and our old time acquaintance, Gen. L. F. Ross, and went into the country, where we looked over the General's farm of six or seven hundred acres, and saw as fine a stock of cattle, horses, and hogs, as one is apt to see anywhere in Illinois. After making our bow to Mrs. Ross and partaking of a genuine farmer hospitality, she was added to the traveling list, and we returned after dinner to town.

Grand Master; R. W. John W. Ross, Dep.; R. W. Breth. C. Sanford and M. Hefter, of Golden Gate Lodge No. 248, Senior and Junior G. Wardens; Gen. Leonard F. Ross, G. Marshal; Isaac Cunningham and Thomas Bell, G. Treas. and G. Secretary; John Nance, G. Bible Bearer; Dr. Baily Ragon, of Roseville Lodge No. 519, Bearer Book of Constitutions; John Mummy, G. S. D.; A. J. A. Smith, of Berwick Lodge No. 619, J. G. D.; Job Babbitt and L. A. Hall, G. Stewards; and F. M. Nance, Grand Tyler.

Delegations were present from Galesburg, Greenbush, Prairie City, and Bushnell. The procession was formed under the direction of the Grand Marshal, and proceeded to the new hall, where the lodge received the Grand Lodge with suitable honors.

A brother from Galesburg with Bro. and Mrs. Crissey, and another lady, formed a quartette, and with the aid of a melodeon, the company were entertained with appropriate and elegant music. The hall was then dedicated in ample form.

The procession re-formed and proceeded to the Methodist chapel, where an elegant oration was pronounced by R. W. Bro. John W. Ross; he was followed by Rev. M. Heckan, of Prairie City, who gave several touching incidents of his Masonic experience, to which we shall allude more fully hereafter.

The Rev. A. Day, of Avon, officiated throughout as Grand Chaplain, and the band gave several fine pieces of music.

Then came the supper. It beats us how the women can manage a supper or a dinner. Streator, Magnolia, and Avon, are rural towns, and to go to one of their suppers or dinners a man is often compelled to eat against his better judgment, and Avon is no exception to that rule. We have never known anything to pass off in better order than did the whole dedication matter at Avon. We congratulate Bro. Crissey and his brethren upon the successful completion of their labors, and upon the bright future in store for their prosperous lodge.

Dedication at Sycamore.

On the 17th, of November, R. W. Bro. James A. Hawley, S. G. Warden, repaired to Sycamore, and formed a Grand Lodge as follows: M. W. James Adams Allen, M. D., P. G. M. of Michigan, Deputy; Morris Holcomb, S. G. W.; L. P. Wood, J. G. W.; Rev. Dr. Humes, G. Chaplain; Charles Kellum, Grand Architect; Daniel Dustin, Grand Marshal; C. P. Stewart, G. Treas.; P. F. Ward, G. Sec.; H. Cobb, and W. W. Bryant, Deacons; J. B. Harkness, J. W. Garvin, G. Stewards; O. F. Settle, Grand Tyler.

Bro. Hawley, as Grand Master, then dedicated the commodious and elegantly furnished Hall of Sycamore Lodge No. 134 in due form.

Notwithstanding the recent storm, the audience was large, and the address of Past Grand Master Allen was listened to with profound attention, and will do much towards counteracting the diabolical efforts of Pres. Blanchard and his associates in spreading the venom of hate, malice, falsehood, and uncharitableness of anti-Masonry.

Rock River Lodge No. 612, at Sterling, was constituted October 11, by R. W. Bro. J. A. Hawley, G. S. W.

Patoka Lodge No. 613, at Patoka, Fayette county, was constituted October 18, by W. Bro. T. J. Whitehead, assisted by Bro. H. S. De Pew, both of Odin.

Sheep and Wool in the Great West.

The publisher of the Western Rural is unremitting in his efforts toward making that journal still more popular than heretofore. Among the new features for 1870, is to be a Sheep and Wool Department, to be edited by Hon. A. M. Garland, President of the Illinois Wool-Growers' Association, than whom there is no gentleman in the West better acquainted with the wants and interests of sheep and wool growers.

The subject of raising sheep, the best breeds for the west, and kindred questions, will not only be discussed, but the wool and woolen interests in general—the market prices and best times and modes of selling wool—will also receive a full share of attention. Mr Garland's qualifications eminently fit him for the charge of this department, and we congratulate our farmers that they are to have the benefit of his experience and judgment.

This is but one of the numerous attractive features of that great farm and family weekly. The subscription price is only $2.00 per year, and specimen copies are sent free of charge, by addressing H. N. F. Lewis, publisher Western Rural, Chicago, Ill.

For the Masonic Trowel.

Bro. Palmer Webster, a member of Palatine Lodge No. 314, died at Gardner, Grundy county, Ill., on Nov. 5, 1869. Bro. Webster was one of the oldest members of this lodge, and beloved and respected by all who knew him. He was one of the oldest settlers of this section of the country, having come here when the country was new and unsettled, from New York. In March last he removed to Gardner, where he remained but a few months, when he was called from this world to the presence of the Supreme Architect of the Universe. His age was 58 years.

Bro. Webster's remains were brought to this place for interment, and received the usual Masonic ceremonies. He leaves a widow and six children who mourn his loss. The proper resolutions were passed by this lodge in reference to his death.

The Masonic Trowel.—Walt. P. Tanquary, Jr., of the Register, is canvassing for a club to this excellent Masonic paper. He proposes to give the per cent. allowed him by the publisher to Morning Star Lodge, for the purpose of aiding the lodge in furnishing the new hall. Valuable premiums have been offered by the publisher for the largest clubs. Mr. Tanquary is striving for one of these premiums, and proposes, if successful, also to give the amount to the lodge. The price of the paper is $1.25 per year, and every Masonic brother in Canton should take a copy, and thus aid in furnishing suitably the lodge-room.—Canton Ledger.

Dedication at Lexington.

McLean is the largest county in the State, and Lexington, at the Northwest corner of one of its groves in the northern part of the county on the C. A. & St. L. R. W. is one of its oldest and richest towns. In 1866 a dispensation was granted for a new lodge, Bro. Herbert Kittle, W. M. The lodge was chartered in October, and has had a reasonable prosperity ever since.

During the past season Bro. the Hon. Wm. Smith, a wealthy merchant, and for the present and past terms a member of the Legislature, with others, erected a large brick block, in which the lodge has secured commodious and convenient rooms all elegantly furnished with the newest styles and patterns.

Some time since, Bro. Kittle removed, and the government of the lodge has fallen upon W. A. B. Davidson, a noble-hearted unpretentious brother, whose character is a guarantee, that the material for the temple will all be sound and well wrought. Upon invitation we visited the lodge December 3, for the purpose of dedicating its new hall. A large number of ladies and citizens were present, and good music was provided for the occasion. We were assisted by R. W. Bro. J. M. Stilwell, Mayor of Bloomington and D. D. G. M. as Deputy, R. W. Bro. Louis Zeigler, W. M. at Chenoa, as S. G. Warden, R. W. Bro. Dr. Lee Smith, W. M. of Wade-Barney Lodge at Bloomington as J. G. Warden, W. Breth. Dr. Elder of Chenoa as G. Marshal, P. H. Hiett of Cheney's Grove as G. Architect, and a full complement of grand officers, and was received by the lodge in a very correct and creditable manner.

The hall was then dedicated in ample form. After the ceremonies of dedication, handsome addresses were made by Rev. Bro. Hall, G. Chaplain, Bro. Stilwell and Bro. Smith. One brother spoke of it as a genuine love feast, and so it was.

The general make up and character of the lodge is of a high order, and its prospects cheering.

We were recipients of the hospitality and attentions of Breth. Davidson and Smith and their families. We, and all our brethren, bid Lexington Lodge No. 482 a hearty God-speed.

Cedar of Lebanon.

We thank R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson for a beautiful cone, with a portion of a branch from a Cedar of Lebanon, in Syria. The cone is four inches in length, six inches in circumference at each end, and nine inches in the middle. It is firm and solid, and the cone and branch verify the description given to the cedar in Jenks' Companion to the Bible.

"CEDAR.—A tall, goodly, excellent tree whereof the choicest grew in Lebanon. Its leaves are like rosemary; it is always green, and distils a kind of gum, to which different effects are attributed. The wood of it is very durable, beautiful, solid, and inclining to a brown color; it bears a small apple like that of the pine. It was used for the building of magnificent houses."

In the commentaries upon the 19th chapter of 2d Kings, these cedars are described as being very thick and tall, some being 35 to 40 feet in girth. The wood is reputed to be incorruptible, solid, and free from knots.

The gum has exuded from several places on the cone before us, and has dried up and become solid.

WE received, December 8th, through the postoffice, the following letter:

FORT D. A. RUSSELL, WYOMING TER.,
December 4, 1869.

To the M. W. —— Lodge, A. F. and A. Masons:

SIR: Troop C, Fifth U. S. Cavalry, having just completed their summer campaign and gone into quarters at this post, I embrace this my first opportunity to communicate to you the following facts:

On the 11th of July, 1869, a portion of the Fifth U. S. Cavalry, under General Carr, fought and defeated a band of hostile Indians, under the chief Tall Bull, capturing the entire Indian camp and camp equipage. Among the captured property was found a Masonic badge, on which is stamped the following name and address: "W. West, Springfield, Ill." Being at a loss to know how such an article could come into the possession of hostile Indians, except by foul means, I deem it my duty as a Mason, to lay the matter before the Fraternity in Springfield. The badge is still in my possession, and I will make such disposition of it as you may direct.

Hoping that my surmises regarding the fate of Mr. West may be groundless,

I am very respectfully, your ob't serv't,
JOHN E. WELCH, Troop C, 5th U. S. Cav.,
Fort D. A. Russell, Wyoming Ter.

A Welcome Call.

On the 16th of November we were gratified to meet R. W. Bro. Martin Collins, Representative of the Grand Lodge of Illinois in Missouri, and Gen. Grand Scribe of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, accompanied by R. W. Thomas E. Garrett, Past Grand Lecturer, Past Grand Puissant, and Grand Lecturer Grand Chapter Missouri.

From them we learn that all orders of Masonry in Missouri are prospering, and that now it is ascertained that the Scottish Rite is not treason, murder, forgery or robbery, that it will shortly flourish in Missouri, as it already is all around it. We wish our Scottish brethren and all other branches of Masonry in Missouri the largest measure of success.

Third Annual Dinner of Lafayette Chapter.

We are in receipt of the National Republican which contains a glowing account of the annual reunion of the members of the above named chapter, Nov. 29. The opening address was made by D. Spalding Jones, M. D., the High Priest. A Past Grand High Priest's jewel of solid gold, elaborately carved and studded with diamonds, suitably inscribed was presented to M. E. Comp. Noble D. Larner, P. H. P. and Past Grand High Priest, and upon its receipt he made an eloquent acknowledgment. Several toasts were proposed and several speeches were made, among them one by P. G. High Priest, B. B. French. The companions had a joyous time.

Masonic Mirror.

The above is the title of a thirty-two page Magazine published at San Francisco, at $2.50 per year, by Fredrick R. Carrick, and edited by Bro. Amasa W. Bishop, Past Master. It is a neat journal, arranged in good taste, and edited with much ability, and we wish it great success, and abundant remuneration to the publisher. The second and third numbers are received, and we will thank conductors to send us the first.

Condolence.

We sincerely sympathize with R. W. Bro. Robert Macoy and his family, in the loss of his son, at the age of eighteen years. We remember the bright-faced lad very well, and can truly feel with the sorrowing parents in their heavy affliction. And they may be assured that all who know them will join us in this tribute of affection and sorrow.

We are pained to learn that M. W. Bro. Robert D. Holmes, P. G. M. of New York, and the very talented editor of the Masonic Department of the Dispatch, is seriously indisposed. We trust that he will speedily recover.

A Papal Grand Jubilee.--Sale of Indulgences.

His Eminence, Cardinal Paul Cullen, Archbishop of Dublin, has issued a pastoral, in which he announces "a jubilee." After stating that this jubilee was to commence Nov. 1, and continue to the termination of the Ecumenical Council, convoked for December 8 inst.; he proceeds to detail crimes which are held in abhorence, such as murder, belonging to secret societies (especially the Freemasons), and other offences of greater or lesser magnitude. To all those who comply with the terms of the pastoral, indulgences will be granted; said indulgences to apply "to the souls in purgatory." The conditions of these indulgences always have been, prayer, confession, fasting, etc., but last, though not least, the contribution of " Peter pence." Such being the case, the following impromptu will show the modus operandi; and at what price Freemasons can get absolution:

Quoth the Pope, my exchequer is now very low,
The pence for St. Peter, come in much too slow;
And how to replenish it, come, let us see,
We'll try the effects of grand Jubilee.

Now sinners, who wish of your sins to be rid,
Make haste to the priest, and do as you're bid;
If murder, you'll only have once to kneel down,
Confess—and you're free for a single half-crown.

If arson's the crime, the pay is the same;
If maiming, one-half, though your victim you lame;
For stealing, false-swearing, or tempting to rob,
An indulgence you'll get as low as a bob.*

And e'en should you band wtih the Masons so free.
And we'll wink at your crime, and let you do worse,
If only you'll aid to fill up our lank purse.

Now remember you rogues, my exchequer is low;
That the pence for St. Peter, come in very slow;
And if you replenish it, with me you'll agree,

The M. W. the Grand Master of England.

It is now generally understood that the M. W. the Grand Master, the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, has signified to the principal officers of Grand Lodge that he desires not to be again put in nomination for the office of Grand Master at the regular Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge on the first Wednesday in December next; and we understand that a meeting of some of the officers of Grand Lodge was held at the end of last week to receive the Grand Master's announcement, and to deliberate upon the course to be adopted, with a view to filling the office of Grand Master.

We are informed that after the communication of the Grand Master has been made in Grand Lodge, an eminent brother will move that the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon be elected as the successor of the Earl of Zetland as Most Worshipful Grand Master.

It is desirable that the most perfect unanimity should prevail, and that the election of a worthy successor of so estimable a Mason as the present Grand Master should take place in the same cordial and unanimous way that has almost without exception marked the annual re-election of the Earl of Zetland for the last twenty-five years; and, as no one more able or distinguished as a Mason could by any possibility be appointed as Grand Master, we trust that the name of Earl de Grey and Ripon will be the only one mentioned for the high and distinguished office at the next Quarterly Communication, and that his lordship's election at the following regular meeting of Grand Lodge will be entirely unanimous.

It is believed that at the next meeting of Grand Lodge, on the 1st December, the following motions, of which notices have, we are informed, been duly given, will be moved by several brethren, whose names are appended thereto, viz.:

By the W. Bro. J. R. Stebbing, P. G. D.: "That the tenure of office as Grand Master by any brother, be limited to three years in succession."

By W. Bro. R. W. Stewart, W. M. 12, P. M. 108: "That no brother shall be eligible for election as Grand Master for a longer period than five years in succession."

By W. Bro. Joseph Smith, P. G. Purst.: "That the office of Grand Master shall not be held by any brother for a longer period in succession than seven years."

Catholicism vs. Masonry.

The London Freemason for October has the following:

"Pope Pius the Ninth's tirade against Freemasonry is but one of a series issued by the dignitaries of Rome. I remember, when stationed at Malta in 1843, that the Archbishop of Rhodes, Monsignor Caruana, who was also Bishop of Malta, issiued a pastoral in which he strongly denounced the Order. Among the choice expressions he used were "the diabolical creation of this lodge," "that pestilential center of iniquity," "common sewer of all filth," "monsters of iniquity," &c. He also referred to the anathemas of Popes Clement XII., Benedict XII., Pius VII., Leo IV., and Gregory XVI., and excommunicated all who even accorded "common salutations" to the Freemasons, much less hospitality. The funny part of the story is, that at the very time the prelate was cursing the Freemasons, he was a frequent guest at the table of an English officer of rank who belonged to the proscribed Order, and who was a constant attendant at the "infernal tribunal," as the Bishop called the lodge in Senglea. I believe the brethren made some stir about it at the time, but as I left Malta with my regiment soon afterwards, the finale is not known to me, unless we may take the present prosperous condition of Masonry on the island as a sufficient refutation of the Archbishop's calumnies. On the other hand, I have met two or three jolly priests at Masonic banquets, who were thorough gentlemen and good Masons. One more especially, Father Peter Macnamara, who lived not a thousand miles from Ennis, in the county Clare, was a diamond of the first water.—"A. L., late Colonel H. M. service."

Barnum's Railway Courtship.

The managers of railways running west from Chicago pretty rigidly enforce a rule excluding from certain reserved cars all gentlemen traveling without ladies. As I do not smoke, I avoided the smoking-cars, and, as the ladies' car was sometimes more select and always mor comfortable than the other cars, I tried various expedients to smuggle myself in. If I saw a lady about to enter the car alone, I followed closely, hoping thus to elude the vigilance of the brakeman, who generally acted as door-keeper. But the car Cerberus is pretty well up to all such dodges, and I did not always succeed. On one occasion, seeing a young couple, evidently just married and starting on a bridal tour, about to enter the car, I followed closely, but was stopped by the door-keeper, who called out:

"How many gentlemen are with this lady?"

I have always noticed that newly-married people are very fond of saying, "my husband" and "my wife." They are new terms, which sound pleasantly to the ears of those who utter them. So, in answer to the peremptory inquiry of the door-keeper, the bridegroom promptly responded:

"I am this lady's husband."

"And I guess you can see by the resemblance beween the lady and myself," said I to Cerebus, "that I am her father."

The astonished husband and the blushing bride were too much "taken aback" to deny their newly-discovered parent, but the brakeman said, as he permitted the young couple to pass into the car:

"I hope you will not deprive me of the company of my child during the little time we can remain together," I said, with a demure countenance. The brakeman evidently sympathized with the fond "parient," whose feelings were sufficiently lacerated at losing his daughter through her finding a husband, and I was permitted to pass. I immediately apologized to the young bride and her husband, and told them who I was, and my reasons for the assumed paternity, and they enjoyed the joke so heartily that they called me "father" during our entire journey together. Indeed, the husband privately and slyly hinted to me that the first boy should be christened "P. T." My friend, the Rev. Dr. Chapin, by-the-bye an inveterate punster, is never tired of ringing the changes on the names in my family; he says that my wife and I are the most sympathetic couple he ever saw, since she is "Charity" and I am "Pity" (P. T). On one occasion, at my house in New York, he called my attention to the monogram, P. T. B., on the door, and said, "I did it." "Did what?" I asked. "Why that," replied the doctor "P. T. B. Pull The Bell, of course;" thus literally ringing a new change on my initials.

At another time, during my western lecturing trip, I was following closely in the wake of a lady who was entering the favorite car, when the brakeman exclaimed:

"You can't go in there, sir!"

"I rather guess I can go in with a lady," said I, pointing to the one who had just entered.

"Not with that lady, old fellow; for I happen to know her, and that's more than you do; we are up to all these travellers' tricks out here; it's no go."

I saw indeed that it was "no go," and that I must try something else. "Look here, my dear fellow," said I; "I am traveling every day on the railroads, on a lecturing tour throughout the West, and I really hope you will permit me to take a seat in the ladies' car. I am Barnum, the Museum man, from New York."

Looking sharply at me for an instant, the altogether too wide-awake brakeman said:

"No you ain't! I know Barnum!"

I could not help laughing; and, pulling several old letters from my pocket, and showing him the directions on the envelopes, I replied:

"Well, you may know him, but the 'old fellow' has changed his appearance, perhaps. You see by the letters that I am the 'critter.'"

The brakeman looked astonished, but finally said: "Well, that is a fact, sure enough. I know you when I come to look again, but really I did not believe you at first. You see we have all sorts of tricks played on us, and we learn to doubt everybody. You are very welcome to go in, Mr. Barnum, and I am glad to see you," and as this conversation was heard throughout the car, "Barnum, the showman," was the subject of general observation and remark.—Life of P. T. Barnum.

Northwestern Agricultural and Mechanical Association.

It affords us peculiar pleasure to learn that the initiative has been taken to inaugurate the Northwestern Agricultural and Mechanical Association. A charter was obtained at the last session of the General Assembly of Illinois, for such an association, and some of the most prominent citizens of Chicago, whose practical business qualifications, energy, and intelligence are a guaranty of success, have the matter in hand. The board of directors consists of Messrs. George S. Bowen, C. M. Henderson, Philip Wadsworth, John P. Reynolds, David A. Gage, Milton S. Patrick, John B. Drake, P. W. Gates, L. J. McCormick, H. H. Porter, and Emery Cobb. The charter has been accepted, and the association organized. The Board of Directors has chosen Mr. Patrick, President; Mr. Gage, Vice President; Mr. Henderson, Treasurer; and Mr. Reynolds, Secretary.

The plan upon which the organization is based is broad and liberal. By its terms subscriptions to the amount of $250,000 must be obtained before any assessments can be made, and the intention is to distribute the amount among the various material interest of the community, so that the co-operation and aid necessary to carry forward the enterprise successfully, shall be shared generally among the enterprises and industries of the Northwest. The stock could doubtless be readily obtained by dividing it into shares comparatively large in amount, and confining it in the hands of a few individuals; but we are pleased to notice that such is not the design of the management. The other plan will make the enterprise more generally popular, and necessarily contribute in assuring its success from the start.

Arrangements have been made to solicit the necessary subscriptions, and Messrs. Patrick, Drake, and Gage are a committee to examine propositions already made or that may be presented, to furnish the land required by the association for its annual exhibitions, and report to the association. There is scarcely room to doubt that the subscriptions required by the charter will be readily obtained, and that the success of this long-desired and important enterprise will be speedily assured.

While it will afford the vast region tributary to Chicago, the opportunity for an annual exhibition embracing the products of the labor, industry, and skill of the agriculturist and the artizan, as well as the achievments of science and art, it will not necessarily interfere with kindred exhibitions in the States which are immediately interested. It will be, rather, a powerful auxiliary to their success; for experience elsewhere has demonstrated that instead of dwarfing the lesser fairs, the larger ones operate as aids in stimulating and imparting additional interest and value to them.

As our readers are aware, we have when favorable opportunities presented, urged the inauguration of steps to accomplish this object, as by reason of its location, its importance as the great commercial entrepot of the Northwest, and its superior facilities in every point of view, Chicago is by far the most eligible city on the continent for such an enterprise; and it is scarcely necessary for us to say that this movement affords us unfeigned satisfaction. We doubt not it will be hailed with delight by the entire population of the Northwest.—Western Rural.

Journalism in the United States.

"The first attempt at journalism in the United States was made in Boston, in 1690. It was a small sheet of four quarto pages, one of them blank; but only one weekly edition of it was ever issued, the Colonial Legislature having discovered in its columns, to use their own language, 'reflections of a very high nature,' and so its publication was declared contrary to law, and its existence snuffed out. The News Letter was the next attempt, fourteen years afterward. It was a half sheet, twelve inches by eight, with two columns on each page. It was issued weekly until the year of the Declaration of Independence. William Bradford started a paper in the latter part of 1719, and two years afterward, James Franklin, elder brother of Benjamin, started the New England Courant, in Boston. In his autobiography, Benjamin Franklin says he remembers some of the friends of his brother trying to dissuade him from attempting the enterprise, for the reason that there was already one newspaper in America, and two would be one too many. Dr. Franklin adds, triumphantly, at this time (1771) there are not less than five and twenty. According to the returns of the census in 1810, the number of journals in the United States was 350, of which 27 were dailies. In 1830 the number was estimated at 1,000. In 1840 it was 1,641. In 1850 it was 2,800, with a yearly circulation of nearly 500,000,000 copies. Now, the daily, tri-weekly, semi-weekly, weekly, monthly, and quarterly publications in the United States amount to over 4,000, with an estimated annual circulation of 800,000,000 copies. There are four times as many periodical publications issued in this country as in England, and twice as many as in France."

The Mobile Weekly Register, the oldest Democratic paper in the South, is said to have reached a larger circulation than was ever attained by any journal south of Mason and Dixon's line. It is full of interesting varied matter, having an able agricultural department, presided over by the veteran editor and successful agriculturist, Hon. C. C. Langdon. Its general literature, poetry, stories, &c., make it highly acceptable to the ladies.

The coming year will open with a new continued story of deep interest, by one of the most distinguished writers of the day. The price was recently reduced to $3.00 per year, which, for so large a paper (12 pages), is extremely cheap.

Howe's Musical Monthly.

Is published by Elias Howe, 103 Court street Boston, at $3.00 per year. Sheet music size, 32 pages piano music, and arranged to bind. The paper is thick and clear, and the whole is devoted to music alone.

Grandpapa's Story.

"Oh, if you please, grandpapa, do tell us a story," said little Alice.

"Oh, yes; and let it be about yourself, when you were a boy," said Arthur.

"And tell us something wrong you did," chimed in Harry; "all grown-up people tell us how good they were when they were children; but they don't tell us if they were ever naughty."

"No," said Arthur, "if you do anything wrong it always is, when we were children if we had done so and so, we should have been well beaten instead of forgiven, as you are; or——"

"Oh, do be quiet, Arthur and Harry," said grave Ernest, "or grandpa wouldn't be able to tell us any story before we go to bed. Please to begin, grandpa."

"Well, my dears," said grandpa, "I do not exactly know how to begin, or what to begin on; but if you will seat yourselves, I will try and think. I suppose it must be about myself."

"Oh, yes," cried all the children.

"Very well. And now, if you think you can keep quiet and sit still, Harry, I'll begin."

"So saying, grandpapa cleared his throat, and settling himself comfortably in his arm-chair, began as follows:

"When I was a very little boy I lived at a large farm down in Shropshire. I had no brothers and sisters, so I was a great pet with my father and mother; my mother was especially fond of me, and spoilt me by letting me have nearly all I asked for, and I had only to cry to get anything I wanted. I, like other boys of about my own age, went to a school kept by a gentlemen, about half an hour's walk from our house. About half way between the school and where my father lived there stood an old house, inhabited by an old man whom the people in the village said was a miser; but, I believe, he was only an ill-tempered, quarrelsome, eccentric old man, who delighted to tease us boys and upset our games, if he happened to come near us. We, from that cause, naturally disliked him, and showed our dislike whenever we could by making all kinds of noises, just under his window, on half hollidays, about the hour we knew the old gentleman would be taking his nap, robbing a fine apple-tree which he had in his garden, and now and then breaking one of his windows. You must not think that we did not get punished for all this, for we did very often, by being kept in on half hollidays to learn lessons, instead of going and enjoying ourselves with our companions, and by having to pay for the windows with our pocket money, for the old gentleman was generally on the look-out for us; and if he did see us, and if he could tell how many there were, and if it were us school-boys (as some times the village boys persecuted him, for he was generally disliked), he would send round to our teacher to inquire into the matter, and then we were obliged to confess, for we were too honorable to let the whole school suffer for what half a dozen had done.

"Now this old man was particularly fond of his garden, which was a large one for the size of the house, for he lived alone, excepting an old servant, who was as stingy and crabbed as his master. In his garden there were some of the finest pear and apple trees that you could see, and he had also some very fine wall fruit—one peach tree in particular that he prided himself on. He let no one attend to the garden but himself, and his chief delight seemed to be in watching his fruit slowly ripen day by day. The wall of the garden was very low, and covered at the top with pieces of broken glass, to keep the boys from climbing over; not that it did, for we used, as I told you, to get over and take the apples, though we often cut ourselves in the attempt. I had to pass the house every day on my way to and from school, therefore I also had noticed the peaches, and on hot, dusty days I had often longed for one.

"One very hot afternoon, as I was returning from school, very hot and thirsty, I happened to glance at the peaches, and they looked so cool and delicious that I could no longer withstand the temptation to take one; so I scrambled over the wall, first looking cautiously round to see that no one was in sight.

"When I had taken one, I took two or three more, and, stuffing them into my pockets, I crept towards the wall to get back, when, just as I was about to get over, I heard the door of the house open, and had only time to conceal myself behind some bushes that were near, when the old servant came out, and, walking down to the gate, stood looking up and down the road for his master. How long I was there I don't know; but it seemed an enormous time to me, crouching tremblingly behind the bushes, hardly daring to breathe for fear of being discovered. At last he went in, and I was able to come from my hiding-place. As I was getting over the wall I cut my hand with the glass rather severely; however, I bound my handkerchief around it, and hastened home. When I got into the house my mother met me, and asked me how it was that I was so late from school; I told her I had been been kept, and then hastened to my bedroom to hide the stolen fruit and bathe my hand.

"Having done so, and smoothed my hair, I went down stairs to tea, when the first thing my father said to me was—

"'Hallo, Dick, what's the matter with your hand?'

"'I've only cut it,' father, I stammered.

"'How came you to do that?' said my mother.

"'Oh, I fell down and cut it with the gravel in the play-ground,' said I, turning very red and hot, for this was the first time I had told any falsehoods.

"'Well, never mind, Dick,' said my father, 'go on with your tea. I dare say your hand will be well soon,' he added kindly, evidently thinking that my face flushed with pain instead of shame.

"Well, I passed a wretched evening that day. I was unable to fix my attention on my lessons, because I always found myself listening to every sound in the house; and I could not endure my mother in the room where I was, for fear she should ask any more questions; still less could I bear her to be out, for then I fancied she would go to my room and find the fruit—I having hidden it in one of my drawers, not knowing where else to put it. At last my bed-time came, and I jumped up directly the clock struck, thereby very much astonishing my parents, for it was a rare thing for me to go to bed of my own accord, and I generally begged to sit up a little longer when I was told to go.

"I was very glad to get to my room that night, for I thought if I could eat the fruit, and so get rid of it, I should no longer be in fear of being discovered; so directly I was in my room I proceeded to lock my door, so that nobody should come in, and going to my drawer I took one of my peaches, and was just about to eat it when I heard something say, 'Dick, Dick, Dick, Dick!'

"I turned round with a start, but saw nobody; then I listened; but the only sound I could hear was the wind moaning in the chimney. So I said to myself that it was only fancy, and I turned and resolutely bit a piece out of the peach, and then, louder than before, something, or somebody, said, 'Dick, Dick, Dick, Dick!'

"It frightened me so this time that I nearly chocked myself, and was unable to hear anything for coughing for a long time, and when I did listen I only heard the wind moaning as before, and the great clock ticking outside my door. Then I determined to look all over my room, and see if there was any one concealed in it; so, seizing my candle, which I then noticed was a very small piece and would not last much longer, I looked under the bed, and in every place possible and impossible for anybody to hide, but could see no one. Well, I did not know what to do. I could not eat the fruit, for directly I touched it that dreadful voice said, 'Dick, Dick, Dick, Dick!'

"I trembled with fear so that I was obliged to sit down. I tried to go to the door and call some one; but I could neither move nor speak—I could only sit where I was, with my hands so tightly clenched, that afterwards I found my nails had been dug into my flesh; not that I felt it then, for I could feel nothing; I was paralyzed with fear. At last the light went out, and then I was, if possible, more frightened. The wind was very high, and my chimney had a cowl on it, so that every time the wind blew and turned this cowl round, it shrieked and groaned till I fancied all sorts of demons were haunting me because I was such a wicked boy as to steal. At other times the noise which the chimney made never frightened me; but that night I was so nervous that that any noise in the farmyard or the house I imagined to be unearthly; even the clock (which I could hear every now and then when there was a lull in the wind), with its everlasting tick, tick, grew wearisome to me, and seemed to tick louder than ever it had before.

"At last I must have fallen asleep and dreamt something I cannot now remember, for the next thing I do recollect at all distinctly, was lying on the bed, and hearing my mother say, as she bathed my head and held salts to my nose, 'Hush, hush; you have been dreaming, that is all.' Then I noticed that the room was full of servants and farm-men, who had evidently rushed up from their supper to see what was the matter, and were now staring at me with astonihment and alarm written on their faces.

"The first thing my mother did when she saw my senses return to me was to send all the servants away, assuring them that they could do nothing for me, and that I should soon be well; and then she undressed me and put me to bed, which I did not leave for two or three days. During that time I told my mother, with many tears, all I had done. She was very much shocked and grieved, but seemed to think I had been sufficiently punished by the fright I had gone through. My mother then told me how they had found me. She said she fancied I had not been in my usual spirits, but had attributed it to the heat of the weather and the close attention I paid to my studies lately. After I had gone to bed that night my mother had asked my father if he could not take me to London, for she thought a change would do me good, and she knew I had a great desire to see London. While they were talking and arranging plans for my pleasure, they heard a scream, and, on going to my door, found it locked and all silent within. My father wished to go down stairs again, but my mother was so positive that it was I who screamed, and that I might be in a fit, or had fainted, that at last my father forced the door, and when my mother rushed in she found me on the floor to all appearance lifeless. They brought me to with a great deal of trouble, and so soon as I was able to speak I clung to my mother and begged her not to leave me; and she calmed me by telling me I had been dreaming, and that she would stay with me.

"Of course I did not go to London with my father. I was very much disappointed at not being able to go; but I thought I deserved it, and therefore let nobody see how disappointed I was.

"I had told my mother when my father went away of what I had done, so he knew nothing about my having stolen the peaches, and went to London fancying I was to be petted because I was ill; but when he came back, and my mother told him all about it, he was very angry, and said that I had been so spoilt by being allowed to do just what I liked, and have just what I wanted at home, that I did not know what I was about, and that therefore I should be sent to a boarding-school; which I accordingly was, to the grief of my mother, who had a horror of such places, fancying that they injured a boy's morals. My father said stuff and nonsense; that as I had already distinguished myself by stealing, he considered I had no morals to injure. And, in his opinion, every boy that was strong and healthy should be sent to boarding-school, and, therefore, I was sent.

"I stayed at school some years, and all the time I was there I never joined in any plans for robbing orchards, destroying other people's property, and doing a variety of other things of which boys are so fond, and which they term, in their horrid and foolish slang, 'jolly larks.' So you see the lesson was not without its effect on me. And now, my dears, I have finished my story," said grandpapa.

"But you never told us what the old man said when he missed his fruit," said Arthur.

"No, nor what your mother did with it," said Henry.

"And you did not tell us what said Dick, Dick, Dick,' said little Alice.

"You ask me so many questions, my dear children, before I have time to answer one, that you quite bewilder me, I do not know which to answer first; but as I think I can answer both your questions in one, Arthur and Harry, I will begin with yours.

"You want to know what my mother did with the fruit? Well, she took it to the old man, told him what I had done, and offered to pay for it; but he would not allow her, but said she was to send me to him to beg his pardon. Then my mother told him I was ill, and could not come; but that I had promised never to touch his fruit again. So he was satisfied, and laughed when he heard I was ill through fright, and said it served me right. And now, Alice, you want to know what frightened me by saying 'Dick, Dick, Dick;' well, it was a large clock that stood on the landing, just outside my door, and that sounded to my excited imagination as if it said, 'Dick, Dick, Dick, Dick,' instead of 'tick, tick, tick, tick!'

A Roman Dinner Party.

The ordinary Roman dinner-party was not large; the rule was that the guests should be not less than three, the number of the Graces; nor more than nine, the number of the Muses. The tables were made of rare woods, finely carved, and sometimes entirely of precious metals. Table-cloths were unknown. Those who dined used neither knives nor forks, but helped themselves with their fingers; nevertheless, as soups could not be eaten in this primitive way, necessity, the mother of invention, devised spoons. To handle a hot dinner without burning the fingers, required as much dexterity as the juggler displays in playing with heated pokers. Gentlemen with tender digits and irrepressible appetites wore metallic finger-tips, like thimbles, which enabled them to put a finger into the hottest pie with impunity. After each dish they prepared themselves for the next course by dipping their fingers into ewers of water, carried around by servants, and drying them on napkins, each guest bringing his own napkin with him. Wealthy persons are said to have used a very costly kind of asbestos napkin, which, when soiled, they threw into the fire; the fire cleansed it without consuming it. Refined epicures sometimes wiped their hands on the long hair of the cup-bearers, a custom that is very common in the Orient, and recalls the office performed by Magdalen to the feet of Jesus. The Romans began the day with an early breakfast of bread, seasoned with salt, and eaten with olives, dried grapes, or cheese. At noon they took a warm lunch of eggs, fish, etc., together with their favorite beverage, called calda, a sort of punch, composed of water and wine, seasoned with spices and sweetened with honey. This drink was to the Romans what tea and coffee are to us. The wine in the mixture, being considerably dilluted, possessed only very mildly intoxicating properties, so that it could be used quite freely without unpleasant effects; and Cowper's description of a tea-party, where > ——"The bubbling and loud-hissing urn

> Throws up a steamy column, and the cups
> That cheer but not inebriate wait on each,"

would correspond very well to a calda-party of Roman ladies nineteen centuries ago. Several calda-urns of bronze have been found at Pompeii. The principal meal (called cœna) was eaten about four o'clock, and lasted several hours. People, like the elder Pliny, who dined only three hours, were considered remarkably frugal and time-saving. In Pompeii there are numerous paintings of feasts, which give considerable information as to the bill of fare. In the center of the table, for example, is a large dish containing four peacocks, so arranged as to form a stately dome with their tails; here and there are lobsters, each holding something in its claws; one has a blue egg, another an oyster, a third a stuffed rat, a fourth has a little basket of grasshoppers, or some similar appetizing delicacy. There are also four plates of fish, several pheasants, hares and squirrels, each holding its head between its paws; besides peaches, melons and other fruits, a variety of vegetables, fantastic forms of pastry, and different kinds of wine. In order to equip the table as magnificently as possible, many articles were provided not because they were agreeable to the palate, but because they added to the splendor and costliness of the banquet. Dishes, too, which would excite in us the most intense disgust, were held in high esteem. In one picture, a man is represented as drinking from a cow's horn, pierced at the smaller end so as to allow a thin stream of wine to flow into the mouth as he holds it up at arm's length—a method of imbibing still practiced by common people of Southern Italy. Other cups were fashioned, by the whimsical fancy of the potter, into the head of a pig, a ram, a stag, or some other animal; many of them are of cheap material (clay), but all show by their excellent workmanship that they were made by good artists. One advantage of such a drinking vessel in the eyes of a veteran tipler would be that, owing to its peculiar shape, it could not stand upright, and when once filled must be emptied before it could be set down again upon the table. Among the Greeks it was not customary to invite women to dinner parties, although the Sybarites did so, and, according to Plutarch, used to send the invitations a year beforehand, in order to give the ladies ample time to dress for the occasion. But among the Romans, women were not only admitted to banquets, as is evident from several Pompeiian paintings, but, if we may believe what contemporary poets say of them, were also especially proud of their feats of drinking; and Shakespeare is true to Roman customs when he makes Cleopatra boast of such triumphs over Antony:

> "Ere the ninth hour I drunk him to his bed;
> Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
> I wore his sword Philippan."

For Husbands.

It is the practice of most writers to pen homilies for wives. Wives have been lectured these many years about their duties, while it has seemed scarcely to have entered many minds that husbands have any duties. We have below a short lecture for husbands, given in a good spirit and worthy of every husband's perusal. We hope the wives that read it will pass it over to their husbands:

HOW TO MAKE HOME HAPPY.

Do not jest with your wife upon a subject in which there is danger of wounding her feelings. Remember that she treasures every word you utter, though you never think of it again. Do not speak of some virtue in another man's wife, to remind your own of a fault. Do not reproach your wife with personal defects, for if she has sensibility, you inflict a wound difficult to heal. Do not treat your wife with inattention in company. Do not upbraid her in the presence of a third person, nor entertain her with praising the beauty and accomplishments of other women. If you would have a pleasant home and cheerful wife, pass your evenings under your own roof. Do not be stern and silent in your own house, and remarkable for sociability elsewhere. Remember that your wife has as much need of recreation as yourself, and devote a portion, at least, of your leisure hours to such society and amusements as she may join. By so doing, you will secure her smiles and increase her affection. Do not, by being too exact in pecuniary matters, make your wife feel her dependence upon your bounty. It tends to lessen her dignity of character, and does not increase her esteem for you. If she is a sensible woman she should be acquainted with your business and know your income, that she may regulate her household expenses accordingly. Do not withhold this knowledge in order to cover your own extravagance. Women have a keen perception—be sure she will discover your selfishness, though no word is spoken. From that moment her respect is lessened, her confidence diminished, her pride wounded, and a thousand perhaps unjust suspicions created—from that moment is your domestic comfort on the wane. There can be no oneness, where there is not full confidence.—Rural World.

Ancient Sign-Boards.

In Pompeii the character of the shops is usually indicated by appropriate frescoes or reliefs in terra-cotta near the entrance. Thus, the rough sketch of a goat signified a milkman's establishment or diary; two slaves carrying an amphora slung on a pole, very similar to the old English sign of the two jolly brewers with a tun of ale, meant a wine shop. The same thing is also denoted more poetically by the picture of Bacchus pressing a cluster of grapes. Another sign of a wine shop was a bush; hence the old Latin proverb, "Vino vendibili suspensa hedera non opus est," which has passed into all the languages of Europe, and in English has taken the conciser form, "Good wine needs no bush." This simple sign came down through the Middle Ages, was adopted by the taverns of France, is frequently alluded to by the English poets, and was seen on nearly all public-houses as late as the reign of James I.; and the traveler who now visits Birmingham, in England, may stop at the Ivy Bush or the Ivy Green, whichever of the two inns he may prefer. In many of our Western frontier States, also, a grocery where liquors are sold often hangs out a green bough or a wisp of hay until such time as the more elaborate decoration of a painted board can be procured.

* * * * The mechanichal trades, also, at Pompeii had each its peculiar sign. A bakery was denoted by the terra-cotta figure of a mule turning a mill for grinding corn; a school for the training of gladiators situated at the west end of the Forum was represented by two swordsmen fighting, while the master stands by holding a laurel crown for the victor. Horace, in one of his Satires, alludes to such a sign, and tells how he admired the position of the men painted in red or in black, as if they were fighting in earnest, striking and avoiding each other's weapons as if they were actually in motion. Cicero also refers, in his work "De Oratore," to "the cook painted on the sign-board of Marius, the Cimberian distorted with projecting tongue and hanging cheeks;" and Pliny relates how a German legate, when asked how he liked the sign of an old shepherd with a staff which was on the Forum, replied that he would not take such a man as a gift, even if he were real and alive. In Herculaneum the very graceful figure of a Cupid flying through the air with two lady's shoes, one in his hand and the other resting on his head, marked the shop of a sentimental shoemaker. A boy mounted on another boy's back and receiving a good birching indicated the abode of an unsentimental schoolmaster, who evidently indorsed the old maxim (better honored, we think, in the breach than in the observance) that to spare the rod is to spoil the child. To those of our readers who are yet sufficiently juvenile to be within possible peril of similar experiences, it may afford some consolation thus to learn that this process of "hoisting" (as the English call it) is of a very high antiquity, and that the Roman youth more than twenty centuries ago shared its benefits and suffered its inconveniences. A serpent with a pine-apple in its mouth was the sign of an apothecary's shop, inasmuch as that reptile was sacred to Æsculapius. Two establishments of this kind have been unearthed at Pompeii. They contained pills, drugs, and a great variety of sediments in curiously-shaped phials, and among them a two-gallon vase nearly full of a reddish liquid balsam; also a bronze box with partitions, and a drawer containing a spatula and a tablet of porphyry, used for preparing salves.—Western Monthly for December.

MASONIC RULES FROM AN OLD MONITOR.—Never recommend an applicant unless you know him to be a good man, and who will conform with the precepts of the Institution.

Never cast a ballot in favor of a candidate unless you know him to be worthy, and free from reproach.

Never indulge in practices which will bring reproach upon the Institution.

Discovery of Ancient Ruins in Southeastern Nevada.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, in an account of the Morgan Exploring Expedition to Southeastern Nevada and Utah, says:

Fifty miles from Reese River we found the country well timbered, and in some places the valleys were susceptible of irrigation. A few enterprising farmers had already settled in one of the largest of these, whi[illegible] had named Cedar Canon. Snipe, plov[illegible] quail were abundant, and our mess t[illegible]e was well supplied with them. At this point we bade adieu to civilization. Timber trees entirely disappeared, and we entered upon large sandy valleys covered with sage, stunted bush, and a variety of sand plants. One of these, the mezquite, is a shrub, belonging to the family of the mimosa. It resembles in appearance our locust tree, is very thorny, bears yellow flowers and long pods which have a pleasant sour taste. On October 15th, in the centre of a large valley we discovered some Indian salt works, but there were no signs of their having been lately used. In the southern section of the same valley was a curious collection of rocks, mounds, and pillars, covering several acres in extent, and resembling the ruins of an ancient city. We saw some remnants of what had once been arches with keystones still perfect, and a number of small stone pillars constructed with a peculiar kind of red mortar or cement, set upright about 20 feet apart, as if they had been used to support an aqueduct for conveying water from a large stream half a mile distant, into the outskirts of the city. In some places the lines of streets were made distinctly visible by the great regularity of the stones. These streets were now covered with sand many feet deep, and seemed to run at right angles to each other. Some of the stones had evidently been cut into squares with hard tools, although their forms had been nearly destroyed by centuries of time. The impression forced upon our minds was that the place had been once inhabited by human beings somewhat advanced in civilization. Many traders noticed the existence of similar ruins in other sections of the country between the Rocky and Sierra Nevada Mountains. They may probably be the sites of once flourishing fields and habitations of the ancient Aztecs.

Poetry.

What Better Theme Than Masonry?

Masonic Song.

What better theme can claim our lays
And lend its aid to harmony;
What noble art sheds brighter rays
Than glorious Freemasonry?
What other virtues can compare
With those 'tween "compasses and square?"
For Faith and Hope and Charity,
Brotherly Love and Unity,
With Order, Peace, and Harmony,
Are found in true Freemasonry.

When first to us the light is shown
That governs true morality
Others' distress we make our own,
In natural equality.
Our steps are then taught to ascend
The ladder staves that upward tend—
Faith, first upon the muster-roll,
Hope, the sheet-anchor of the soul
And Charity, that crowns the whole
Foundation of Freemasonry..

When Craftsmen's labors we attend
We're taught the hidden mystery,
By science led to comprehend
The scope of nature's history;
From nature up to nature's God
Our minds are raised above the sod,
And Wisdom comes to shield from harm,
Strength our hurtful passions to disarm,
Whilst Beauty lends a crowning charm
To all our works in Masonry.

And next, as Master Masons, we Share the sublimest mystery,
And prove how potent then can be Fortitude and Fidelity;
The terrors of the darkest hour
Are lessened by the Mystic Power,
And Virtue's portal opens wide
Our steps to Honor's fane to guide,
Whilst Mercy pleads upon our side
To Him who rules Freemasonry.

And when, our glorious labors o'er,
We meet for brief hilarity,
Amidst our joys, our brethren poor
Remembered are in charity:
Each thankful heart expands to bless;
Each willing hand relief will press;
With Temperance God's gifts we share;
Prudence extends her watchful care,
And Justice, symbolled by the Square,
Perfects our works in Masonry.

Star of the East.

BY JULIETTE T. BURTON.

When the scene of life changes from pleasure to gloom,
And the soul sees its midnight unset by a ray;
When the spirit droops low 'neath the weight of its doom,
As the hopes that once lighted its halls die away;
Then there shine through the windows of heaven afar
Bright gleams that shed peace from a beautiful star,
The Star of the East, that most beautiful star.

When the willows are waving o'er graves wherein lie
The first born of mothers whose tears will not dry,
Or the widow bends crushed with the blight of despair,
All the comfort departed that made life so fair;
Then there comes through the vista of sorrow afar,
For the cheerless, a light from a beautiful star,

This Eastern Star blends in its mantle of light
All the colors that make up a picture as bright
As charity, patience, long-suffering, and love
Can catch from the rapture of angels above,
As it shines through the windows of heaven afar;
And we bless and adore thee, our beautiful star,

Deal Gently with the Little Ones.

A child, when asked why a certain tree grew crooked, replied, "somebody trod upon it, I suppose, when it was little."

He who checks a child with terror,
Stops its plays and stills its song,
Not alone commits an error,
But a grievous moral wrong.

Give it play and never fear it,
Active life is no defect;
Never, never break its spirit;
Curb it only to direct.

Would you stop the flowing river,
Thinking it will cease to flow?
Onward must it flow forever;
Better teach it where to go.

Antiquity of Masonry.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

That Masonry is of high antiquity even in its present form, does not admit of a doubt in any well-informed mind. Age is so wrapped up in its mysteries, so permeates its ritual, so fashions and shapes its facts, that no student of the Institution ever for a moment questions that it had its origin in a long past age. The historian who pursues the studies of his profession with an unprejudiced mind, and seeks for facts in the vast field of the past, to which his attention should be solely directed, never concludes that Masonry is a thing of to-day; he never reaches the decision that this generation or twenty generations, counting consecutively back towards the creation, produced it. On the contrary, he finds traces of its existence all along the human pathway; around the pyramids, the parthenon; wherever man has builded imposing temples to false deities or to the true God, there its footsteps are to be seen and its blasonry can be read.

And these traces are not confined to a single nation, or to a single religion, or to a single age. All civilized nations have been indebted to the Craft for whatsoever has been erected that had a reputation for beauty and grandeur. All religions have had gorgeous temples reared by its hand; all ages bear testimony to its correct taste, its rigid adherence to architectural rules, and the blessings it has bestowed upon the world. These are facts—acknowledged to be such by all who have become acquainted with the history of man through the lapse of six thousand years. None but the novice in history, who has never gone beyond the alphabet in that science, disputes it—unless it be the cold-hearted, sour-souled bigot, who never sees truth outside of his own creed, and never acknowledges virtue but in the narrow walk to which that creed presumes to circumscribe its members.

But we are not at this time to argue, much less to prove, the antiquity of Masonry. We are not of those who love things merely because they are ancient, nor do we belong to that class who go into ecstacies of veneration over an institution that has the moss of long-forgotten ages hanging upon it. Nothing is good because it is antiquated. The old may be good, but it is not good because it is ancient. Evil is hoar and ancient—sin has existed for six thousand years, and they do not challenge our respect or love. Gray hairs are not always the symbol of virtue, and hence do not invariably command our respect or veneration. Youth, virtuous and good, commands greater regard.

So with human organizations. The ancient may be exceptionable and the recent worthy of approbation. And we have often thought, when listening to a labored argument to prove the antiquity of Masonry, that the same labor, directed to some other point, would be of greater value to the Craft. Suppose it is as old as creation? What if it was born on the glad morning of creation, "when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" Does that make it any better, unless it partakes of that boundless spirit of love that pervaded creation at that auspicious moment? Suppose it was an offshoot of the fell spirit of evil that at that particular epoch is generally believed to have been concocting evil against the human race—would antiquity save it from merited condemnation? If not, then its spirit, and not its antiquity, gives value to the Institution of Masonry.

We have much admired the answer of a celebrated divine, administered to a brother of another creed, who charged that the doctrine he advocated was from the Devil. "I care very little whence it comes," was the pertinent reply of the divine, "whether from God, man, or the Devil, if it is only true! As long as it is true, I am willing to rest my faith upon it."

So do we feel in regard to the antiquity of Masonry. We care not when, or where, and very little how it originated, provided it is a benefit to mankind. Whether "our forefather, Adam," was the first Worshipful Master, or whether that honor was first worn and borne by Solomon, King of Israel. Whether it originated at the "Apple-tree Tavern, in England," in the last century, "or under the patronage of the Great Frederic of Prussia," matters little to us, and as little with the great bulk of the Fraternity everywhere. For aught we know, Adam may have had a "Lodge in some vast wilderness," after his expulsion from Paradise, or in some "sweet embowering glen" before—though we confess that historical facts do not quite clearly prove it. Or King Solomon might have fashioned Masonry while building his beautiful temple—"the house of the Lord"—which even now is held to have been the perfection of beauty. Or Sir Christopher Wren may have done the same thing for it when he was erecting the London St. Paul's. But either of these theories proved, or all of them disproved, in what manner does that affect Masonry of the present day? These are not the life of the Institution. These are not the foundations of our temple—our moral and Masonic edifice. These are not the questions to which the world demands answers.

Of what benefit to mankind is the Institution? Are its influences beneficial to the world? Is the world any better circumstanced because Masonry exists? What good may be truthfully attributed to it? How, or in what manner, are its benefactions conferred? Are its fruits good? These are the questions that, in this utilitarian age, must be satisfactorily answered. These are the queries that present themselves to the minds of those who are investigating Masonic claims to favorable consideration.

When an individual prepares himself to petition for membership, he does not study history to see how long the Order with which he seeks to identify himself has existed. He studies the by-laws to see upon what principles it is founded. He wants to know whether it is worth anything to a man to become a member; whether in its bosom he shall find friends to sympathize with him in adversity, and to rejoice with him in prosperity; whether he shall be made stronger to withstand the assaults of evil by associating with its members. If he is a good man, with honest intentions, these are the questions which he seeks to solve, and does not ask whether the Institution has existed since the gray old ages of Antiquity.

And when the time of trial comes, after the applicant has become a member in full and regular standing; when the clouds of adversity lower around him, and he almost learns to doubt God's goodness and man's fraternity, does the afflicted soul turn for aid and sympathy to those doubtful traditions of a mysterious antiquity? or does he want warm, humane, generous, fraternal hearts to feel for his distress, and to enable him to rise above them, buoying him up by the ministrations of brotherly love? What cares he, then, whether these loving and assisting brothers are members with him in an institution three thousand or three hundred years old? What he wants is their brotherly sympathy. If he gets that, the rest is immaterial. If he gets that, he gets all that he wants, expects, or asks from the Institution, and receives enough to stamp the Masonic organization as one of public benefit and of general utility. He receives enough to prove that the claims that Masons make for their Institution, that it is a humanizing, generous and fraternal band, is well taken and must be acknowledged. He gets proof that the lessons of the lodge take deep root in the hearts of members and bear fruit into human happiness.

We do not propose now to enter upon an argument to prove that Masonry is a humanizing Institution, such as man, at every step in his pathway needs. To some extent, this has been done in our previous papers, and probably will be further elucidated in those which we hope will follow. To a greater extent, we believe, is this great fact of our Institution illustrated in the lives and conduct of our members. Hence there is less need of pursuing that branch of the subject. As long as Masons are true to their obligations to virtue and brotherly love, there will be little need to argue that Masonry is beneficial to mankind. "Behold how these brethren love one another," was the beautiful and approbative expression of one who looked upon an organized fraternal band. If Masons, by their actions and daily walk, shall be able to draw from a critical and carping world the same expression of approval, there will be no need of arguments to prove the benign influence of the Order. How expressive would be the words of the founder of the Christian religion, if we could truthfully apply them to Masons, and say: "By this shall men know that ye are Masons, that ye love one another." And if every member was a true Mason, how soon it would be said of them.

And these things depend in nothing on the antiquity of Masonry. The Institution may be old, as undoubtedly it is, but that is not why we venerate it. It may be modern, as beyond question it is not, but that fact does not present a reason why we should reject it. For the benefit which it confers upon mankind, we love it—venerate it. Not because it is hoary with age, but because it is good in principle. Whether it be old, it is a great, glorious, and good Institution; whether it be new, it is exactly adapted to the wants and necessities of the people that God has created to live upon this earth. Hence, whether old and antiquated, or whether new and modern, it is worthy of, and should receive, the support of every philanthropist—of every lover of his race.

For The Masonic Trowel.

An Incident of the War.

BY MRS. W. H. TUCKER.

It was on the 17th of June, the morning was very beautiful and the surrounding landscape lovely, in the sunny clime of Georgia. The whole army of the Tennessee was drawn up in battle array. The 15th Army Corps, commanded by Gen. Logan, being in the center, we were, said my informant, at the foot of Kenesaw Mountain, where the enemy had made a stand, after having been driven from Chata nooga; we had been shelling their works for four days, resting only at night when the impenetrable gloom and darkness prevented us from continuing our terrible work. Our brave boys were worn out, and nearly exhausted. From Lookout Mountain, where we fought "the battle in the clouds," we had been fighting every day until we were checked by the enemy making a stand on the lofty Kenesaw Mountain. Their skirmishers and Signal Corps, was posted on another mountain on the right, known as Lost Mountain. We had just finished our breakfast of "hard tack" and bacon, washed down with a tin cup of some villanous stuff or compound called coffee, or as "Jack M'Cormie called it water-bewitched and coffee-begrudged," when our attention was called to an aid-de-camp galloping down a ravine, and riding up to a group of officers. He appeared to communicate something in hurried tones, and at the same time pointing with his sword up the steep side of Kenesaw Mountain. In an instant, Col. Taylor, chief of artillery, who was one of the group, clapped spurs to his horse and flew over the ground until he halted in front of a fine brass battery of six-pound guns that was in line, and calling aloud to Capt. Waterhouse, to have his men fall in, that a large body of the enemy would be in plain sight in a moment, for no doubt but the advance of the main body who were intent on charging our center.

In a moment the bugle sounded to fall in, and in less time than I write it, every squad was at their gun, and looking up the mountain, we could see a large body of the enemy emerging from a piece of woods. Capt. Waterhouse in his wonderfully clear, ringing voice threw up his cap from his forehead, and said:

"Take good aim boys, ready." The shot had been rammed home, the primers in the guns, and we were all ready for the command, "fire" when a slight motion of the hand, and six cannons would belch forth their fire, and death as if from the jaws of Vesuvius. Could it be possible; a body of men in their senses would march to certain destruction. Just as this thought passed through my brain, and I was waiting, for the word to fire, with the lan-yard in my hand to which was attached the primer, another aid de-camp came rushing to our front in full gallop and almost out of breath, he shouted at the top of his voice, which rang through those forest trees like a voice of the prophet: "Hold! hold! for God's sake don't fire I beseech, Capt. Waterhouse. It is a Masonic funeral.

In an instant the order was repeated by the sergeants to the men, the primers were removed from the guns, and all eyes were strained towards the body of troops on the mountain.

There they were, our enemies, but "brothers of the mystic tie," performing the last sad rite over the remains of a comrade and brother. Their slow, martial tread, white aprons, and reversed arms, could be distinctly seen with a field-glass, and in front of the procession we descried an ambulance containing the loved form of a precious son, father, or brother, who had gone where the clarion tone of demoniac war rushes not through his sickened brain, or the pain and agony of parting from his loved ones are not known.

In a moment I took in the panorama before me, and asked in my heart: "Whence comest thou unfathomable mystery of Masonry?" that here in this wilderness, where men are fighting to the death, men who once were brothers, and worshipped one flag, and where the evil usages of war are forgotten. Yet amidst all this the smoke of battle and the din of carnage, with an opposing army before them, and a whole park of artillery awaiting but the signal to hurl its venom of death among them.

Imagination can hardly conceive the effect this mournful procession made throughout our entire ranks.

There were a great many Freemasons in our battery, and involuntarily every one uncovered and bowed his head, and thanked God in his heart that the sorrowing party had been recognized in time to save them from destruction.

For the moment every thought of why they were there was forgotten. The beautiful faith, co-equal with their being enveloped every other emotion, and those who heretofore treated Masonry with scorn and derision, acknowledged its strong and sacred rites.

The rebellion rises up like a spectre in our midst, from the shore of Virginia to the darkened wastes of the Gulf.

The sails of armed ships of war whiten the sea, and the thunder of a thousand cannon scatters death on the shore of Columbia. Even then the star of Masonry rises faintly on the evening sky.

Kenesaw heights acknowledge the mighty voice which has vibrated through the earth and heavens with a music as powerful and a faith as firm as that which quieted the tempest of Jerusalem.

How sublimely grand the retrospect. What was it bade the Federal gun, stay the gunner's hand? What was it induced these enemies to walk fearlessly before the cannon's mouth? Why should our bravest troops lose a splendid victory, when a whole division of unprepared rebels were within range of their guns? Answer, ye anti-Masons.

Such military tactics under ordinary circumstances would have cost a commander a court-martial, and perhaps removed from his breast his well deserved, hard-earned star; but here exemplifies the veneration and supreme respect which every animate creature must and does feel for Masonry.

Those dreadful days are changed, bless God. The trumpet no longer echoes through those lovely valleys or on the grand old mountain. The death scenes have passed away, the mighty struggle is over, and many of the men who witnessed that wonderful Masonic funeral, returned to their homes and loved ones, and now enjoy the priceless boon of Freedom, which was purchased by the blood of our braves.

The remembrance of it, however, will form an amaranthine wreath around the graves of all Masonic brothers, whether they sleep in the beautiful cemetery, consecrated by the tears of loved ones, or on the side of Kenesaw mountain, where the struggling sunbeams reach the silent mound containing their treasured dust, through the interlaced boughs of the beautiful Magnolia.

Missouri.

The proceedings of the Grand Lodge—510 pages, is at hand. M. W. and Rev. John D. Vincil, presided. Few men ever presided in the Oriental Chair of the Grand Lodge who could be classed as his superior in real talent and ability. We think his defect is great severity, and if there are many such cases as the following, perhaps such severity is indispensable. We quote from his address.

BRECKENRIDGE.

> Jas. E. Hart, was in the employ of Bro. G. W. Murphy. He made use of several thousand dollars of his employer's money. When the embezzlement was found out, and Hart called on to account for it, he attempted to make his escape, and got away on the railroad, some seventy-five miles. A telegram headed him off at Macon City, and he was carried back to Breckenridge. He acknowledged all that was charged against him, and said that he "had acted criminally." He was tried in a magistrate's court and committed to jail, without the benefit of bond. Subsequently, he was released from jail, on a writ of habeas corpus, and fled the country. In the meanwhile, charges were preferred against him in Houston Lodge No. 42. Falsehood and fraud were the specifications. A mass of testimony was presented, both oral and by deposition, sustaining both counts in the indictment. Being present myself at the trial, and in the chair, I appointed counsel to defend the accused. A defense was made, of course. For who so vile now-a-days but some one will defend him; and who so guilty these times but some one will swear he is innocent? The able defense set up was, first, "falsehood is no violation of Masonic obligation." Second, "fraud could not be shown, unless we knew the intent of the accused was to defraud his brother." The taking of the money was admitted and proven. But until we could know the intention was wrong we must acquit. And, my brethren, there were members enough in that lodge, wholly blind to duty, moral obligations and sacred covenants, to declare the accused innocent. He was acquitted! And I arrested the charter.

Bro. Vincil likes to play upon words—that may be dignified in a chief magistrate, but we demur. The conclusion of the address is beautiful and will be cordially endorsed by every Mason.

> And now, brethren, in concluding this, my final address, allow me to say, that many matters have clamored for a place in its limits which I was compelled to push aside. There were numerous subjects which I was anxious to discuss, and that challenged attention, but I silenced their claims. The greatest difficulty realized in preparing this address was to know what to put in, and when to stop. My apology for its length is the great amount of matter from which to select, with the comfortable assurance to the brethren that it is the last opportunity I will enjoy of addressing them. A circumstance, while it may afford much pleasure to many, brings no less relief to me. I assumed the ermine of office one year ago, at the outspoken demand of my brethren, well knowing what was before me from the experience of the past. I have worn it as the Spartan youth was ordered to bear his shield, and return it to you who gave it me untarnished and pure. Here it is, brethren, faithfully worn in behalf of principles purer than this golden square, and more untarnishable than the diamonds that gem its surface.

Principles which, next to my religion and my God I cherish above everything that can challenge the admiration of high-born human intelligence Principles that have come to us, down the ages from the mighty and eventful past. Principles that are as undecaying as the mind, and as immortal as truth divine. Principles that will live when the moving actors in life's present drama are catalogued among the dreamless sleepers of yore. Principles that will triumph in some embodiment. if not ours, when generations yet to come will be epitaphed and their obituary written in a word—dead. That these principles are to live, and glow, and triumph, in their present Masonic embodiment, depends in a vast degree upon the strictness with which they are guarded and the purity with which they are cherished by our members.

In taking my final official leave of the Craft in Missouri, I do so with mingled feelings. My relations with the Craft in Missouri have been most amiable. This has been especially so respecting the officers of the Grand Lodge with whom it has been my good fortune to associate. To my various District Deputies, and to the Grand Secretary, my especial obligations are due, and hereby most fraternally tendered, for many favors and invaluable assistance.

And now, brethren, I here again entreat you, as my final admonition, "place the helm of the Craft in the hands of none but pure and good men." Be ye all of one mind, live in peace, and may the God of peace ever dwell with and bless you. Amid the glories of the bright future, in the house of many mansions, may we all rest from our labors, where "farewell" is never spoken.

Bro. Gouley in his report on correspondence says that either we did not read his report, or else that we are unacquainted with the English language. He broadly intimates that we intentionally mis stated him, and misconstrued what he said. We will pass this now, but shall review the whole matter hereafter, and the distinguished brother may find that we understand enough of the English language to answer him!

The tabular statement shows 324 lodges, and 16,090 members.

GRAND OFFICERS.

Wm. D. Muir, Booneville, G. M.; T. E. Garrett, Deputy; A. M. Dockery, S. G. W.; S. H. Owens, J. G. W.; W. N. Loker, G. Treas.; Geo. Frank Gouley, St. Louis, G. Secretary; W. E. Whiting, S. G. D.; J. A. Adams, J. G. D.; Martin Collins, G. Marshal; A. F. Trainor, G. S. B.; John D. Vincil, G. Orator, John B. Best, J. W. Dunn, G. Stewards, J. A. H. Lampton, G. Lecturer; John Geekie G. Tyler.

New Jersey.

Over there in the cranberry State is one Thomas J. Corson, who has set himself up for a reporter. Everything pales before him, and there is no use talking when he is about. A good sensible report could'nt look him in the face. He reminds us of a cry of fire, a runaway horse, or an Irish frolic. We guess that he is gentle, as poets usually are, and we know that he is smart. Being an M. D. amputations, blood-letting, or purging ne'er disturb his serenity, but furnish fuel for his muse.

Still, there is a streak of order occasionlly about him, as the following, taken from his correspondence report will attest:

May we not all of us be urged to a more faithful performance of duty, and a greater exercise of that sympathy for suffering which causes the great heart of humanity to throb with tumultous joy, and be incited to more constant deeds of charity, by these lines written by the broad-brimmed, large brained and warm hearted Quaker Poet of America:

Who, looking backward from his manhood's prime,
Sees not the spectre of his mis-spent time?
And, through the shade
Of funeral cypress planted thick behind,
Hears no reproachful wisper on the wind
From his loved dead?

Who bears no trace of passion's evil force?
Who shuns thy sting, O terrible remorse?—
Who does not cast
On the thronged pages of his memory,s book,
At times, a sad and half-reluctant look;
Regretful of the past?

Alas!—the evil which we fain would shun,
We do and leave the wished-for good undone;
Our strength to-day
Is but to-morrow's weakness, prone to fall
Poor, blind, unprofitable servants all
Are we alway.

Yet, who thus looking backward o'er his years,
Feels not his eyelids wet with grateful tears,
If he hath been Permitted, weak and sinful as he was,
To cheer and aid in some ennobling cause,
His fellow men?

If he had hidden the outcast, or let in,
A ray of sunshine to the cell of sin,—
If he hath lent
Strength to the weak, and, in an hour of need,
Over the suffering, mindless of his creed,
Or home hath bent—

He hath not lived in vain, and while he gives,
The praise to Him in whom he moves and lives,
With thankfull heart;
He gazes backward, and with hope before,
Knowing that from his works he nevermore,
Can henceforth part.

Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

The Grand Lodge of this Commonwealth held its one hundred and thirty-sixth annual communication at the Masonic Temple, in this city, on Wednesday, the 8th of December. There was a full attendance of the officers, and a large representation of the lodges.

A large amount of business was transacted, and much of it was of more than ordinary interest, both local and general. Among the reports adopted was one on the petition of colored persons in this State claiming to be Masons, and asking to be recognized as such by the Grand Lodge. The report was adverse to their request, and leave was given them to withdraw it. The voting in the Grand Lodge on the subject was unanimous, there not being a dissenting voice. We give the report in full, as follows:

> To the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge:
> The committee to whom was referred the petition of Lewis Hayden and others, would respectfully report that the petitioners are black men who, though they are not members or initiates of Lodges under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge, nor of regular lodges within the jurisdiction of any Grand Lodge in correspondence with it, still claim that they are Masons and desire to be recognized as such by this Grand Lodge. They plead—in the term of the petition—"for equal Masonic manhood, in the hope that we be permitted to establish our claims to Masonic rights by whatever means the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge may suggest."
> There are three classes of the signers of the petition, namely; First, Lewis Hayden and twenty-four others, who style themselves "Master Masons of Boston"; Second, Anthony G. Jourdain, Jr., and twenty-five others, who designate themselves as "members of Union Lodge No. 7, of New Bedford"; Third, Thomas Thomas and twenty others, who claim to be "officers and members of Sumner Lodge No. 12, of Springfield." The petitioners do not avowedly represent either of these lodges, or any other; so that their statements and prayer should be regarded as the expressions of individual persons rather than the representations and request of the lodges mentioned in the petition.
> The petition refers to the origin and progress of the so-called Freemasonry to which the petitoners belong, and embraces a copy of a charter which certain black men, therein recognized as Masons, obtained in 1784, from the Grand Lodge of England, and received by them in 1787.
> Your committee have examined the charter and believe it is authentic; but as they do not deem it to be necessary to investigate the historical statement contained in the petition, they have not inquired into its legal Masonic effect, nor whether any proper organization under it ever took place. The petitioners include only a portion of the persons who claim to derive privileges from this instrument, when it is obvious that the granting of their prayer, for the reasons they advance, would equally benefit their associates who have not joined in the petition, and over whom, therefore, this Grand Lodge could have no control. Under these circumstances it is not necessary to inquire into the validity of the proceedings of the persons named in the charter or whether the petitioners have any just claim to be considered their successors.
> Lodges professing to be Masonic, existing in this commonwealth without the sanction of this Grand Lodge, are irregular and spurious, and the members of them are, of course, denied Masonic intercourse with members of regular lodges. The lodges named in the petition stand in this relation to regular lodges, and they and their members, including the petitioners, are not recognized by the Craft.
> Our constitutions make no distinction on account of the color of persons who desire the benefits of Freemasonry; and there are no rules or regulations whereby the petitioners, if "worthy and well qualified," are excluded from our Fraternity, if they seek admission through duly organized lodges.—Freemasons' Monthly Magazine.

Canada.

Our brethren in the Dominion are again at cross purposes. Scarcely had our brethren in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia entered upon a career of prosperity and union, ere the sounds of discord arose in what was formerly known as Upper and Lower Canada. A very brief statement of the Canadian condition must suffice for the present.

Until the formation of the Grand Lodge of Canada, there existed in the Upper and Lower Provinces, Provincial Grand Lodges under the jurisdictions of Scotland, England, and Ireland. The Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia had their lodges, or Provincial Grand Lodges, also. It is well, in order to a clear understanding of the whole matter, to keep in mind that neither New Brunswick or Nova Scotia have ever been identified with Canadian Masonry. On the contrary, when the British Provinces were brought together in the Dominion, both New Brunswick and Nova Scotia organized Grand Lodges of their own, and have been recognized. But as long since as 1858 or '9, a large portion of the lodges in the two Canadas threw off their allegiance to the British Grand Lodges, and organized an independent Grand Lodge, called the Grand Lodge of Canada, Col. Wm. Mercer Wilson, Grand Master.

The Grand Lodges in the United States recognized it immediately, and after various impediments had been removed, it was also recognized by their mother Grand Lodges. We believe that nearly all the lodges in the two Canadas ultimately went into the new Grand Lodge. It was practically so, at least. That Grand Lodge has prospered, but the creation of the Dominion, and the partition of the British Territory into divisions somewhat analogous to our system of States, has created a desire to imitate us in the matter of Grand Lodges.

Let it be borne in mind that there has never been in the United States a separate and distinct Grand Lodge for all or any portion of them. In Canada there is a Grand Lodge, fully organized, regularly recognized, and holding jurisdiction over all the British territory except New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. From this point we intend to keep our readers fully informed as to what has, and will hereafter, transpire. On the 24th September last, several brethren met in Montreal, and joined in requesting Grand Master Stevenson to call an especial communication of the Grand Lodge of Canada, in order that the expediency of forming a Grand Lodge for the Province of Quebec might be considered. It resulted in a refusal to do so.

Thereupon a circular was issued calling a convention at Montreal on the 20th of October. Twenty one lodges, hailing from Quebec, Montreal, Dunham, Stanstead, Richmond, Sherbrooke, Stanbridge, Granby, Three Rivers, West Farnham, Levi's, Lennoxville, Coaticook, Frelighsburg, and Danville, were represented, and V. W. James Dunbar, of Quebec, was elected Chairman, and W. Edson Kemp was elected Secretary.

Passing over all the preliminary proceedings, the convention adopted a constitution, and elected the following officers: J. H. Graham, Richmond, G. M.; J. S. Bowen, Quebec, Deputy; M. R. Meigs, Bedford, S. G. W.; J. P. Peavey, Montreal, J. G. W.; Rev. C. P. Reid, Sherbrook, G. Chap.; Samuel McClung, Three Rivers, G. Reg.; H. G. Gear, Montreal, G. Treas; Edson Kemp, Nelsonville, G. Secretary; W. B. Seeley, Dunham, G. Tyler. After installation by the Senior P. M., the Grand Lodge was proclaimed to be duly constituted.

The subordinate officers and a Board of General Purposes were appointed. In order the more fully to secure recognition, the brethren so organized, issued a circular letter on the 20th of November, and among many reasons set forth in justification of their proceedings, are the following:

> That for a number of years previous to the formation of what is still called the Grand Lodge of "Canada," and until July 1st, 1867, the territory over which that Grand Lodge claimed to exercise jurisdiction, formed and constituted but one Province, called "The Province of Canada," and having but one Legislature or Parliament; but by the Proclamation of the "British North American Act," on July 1st, 1867, the "Province of Canada" as then existing, was, to use the very words of that act "severed" into two separate and distinct Provinces, called the "Province of Quebec," and "The Province of Ontario." These Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, thus formed, were also by the Proclamation of the aforesaid "British North American Act," joined (together with the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick,) into one federal union which was declared "to form and be the Dominion of Canada;" so that since the 1st July, 1867, the two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, have been and are, as distinct and separate as the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, or as are any two States of the American Union, while the Legislature of each Province is similar to the Legislature of each State of the same, and the Dominion Parliament is somewhat analogous to the Federal Congress of the United States of America.
> That although the condition of Masonic affairs in British North America has been carefully and anxiously considered for a long period, yet no solution of the admitted difficulties has been suggested or proposed, which has been at all satisfactory to the majority of the brethren in the Province of Quebec and elsewhere throughout the country, except the formation of an independent Grand Lodge in each of the four Provinces constituting the Dominion of Canada. For two years prior to the political changes which took place in 1867, Grand Master Simpson, of the Grand Lodge of "Canada," both at public and private Masonic gatherings in the cities of Toronto and Montreal, and also in his address to Grand Lodge, in July, 1866, directed the attention of the Craft to the important political changes then anticipated, and their consequent effect on the name, status, rights, and jurisdiction of the "Grand Lodge of Canada," at the same time favoring the notion of endeavoring to extend the jurisdiction of the "Grand Lodge of Canada" over the whole of British North America!! His learned and able successor, who was also the first Grand Master of the "Grand Lodge of Canada," M. W. Bro. W. M. Wilson, in his address to Grand Lodge in July 1867, a few weeks after the Queen's Proclamation inaugurating the Dominion of Canada, directed especial attention to the then anomalous state of Masonic affairs caused by the recent political changes that had taken place, and appointed a committee of seven to consider and report thereon to Grand Lodge on the following day. Four members of this special committee from the Province of Ontario (viz.: M. W. Breth. Wilson, Harrington, and Simpson, and R. W. Bro. Moffatt), reported in favor of maintaining the status in quo of Grand Lodge while awaiting further developments, and the three members of the committee from the Province of Quebec (viz.: M. W. Bro. A. Bernard, R. W. Bro. A. A. Stevenson, and R. W. Bro. J. H. Graham), reported in favor of the formation of an independent Grand Lodge in each of the four Provinces constituting the Dominion of Canada. That since that time every effort has been made by the Grand Lodge of Canada to unite the different lodges in the Dominion, under their government, but without success. The action of the lodges in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as is shown in the next section, has been decidedly against any such union, while the efforts of the Grand Lodge of Canada to invite the lodges working in the Province of Quebec, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodges of England and Scotland, have been equally unsuccessful. And although the present Grand Master of what is yet called the "Grand Lodge of Canada," stated in his address to Grand Lodge in July last, that he had been given to understand that a propositton to adhere to the "Grand Lodge of Canada," would be favorably considered by those lodges in the Province of Quebec, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodges of England, and Scotland, yet when the three lodges (two R. E. and one R. S.) in the City of Quebec, were requested to meet the Committee appointed by the "Grand Lodge of Canada," to consider the subject of amalgamation, not one member of either of these old and influential lodges accepted such invitation; but on the contrary, two of the three, by their duly appointed delegates, co-operated in the formation of the Grand Lodge of Quebec, and have since solemnly ratified the action of their representatives, and formally declared their allegiance to the new Grand Lodge; and the amalgamation movement was not more successful in the city of Montreal, than it had been in the city of Quebec.

Among the many other important incidental reasons which induced the Freemasons in the Province of Quebec to follow the example of all other parts of the Masonic world, by the formation of a Grand Lodge in the said Province, there may be mentioned the vast length of territory included in the two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, extending through some twelve degrees of longitude, from the State of Maine on the east, to the State of Michigan or Central Ohio on the west; the meetings of Grand Lodge itinerating over such vast distances, and causing an enormous and impoverishing expense to many of the lodges, especially those less wealthy in the country parts, in sending delegates thereto; the impracticability very often, of carrying up appeals and the like before Grand Lodge except at a ruinous expenditure to many brethren, of time and money, and hence cases often postponed, or going by default; the impracticability on account of the necessarily inherent dual conflicting Provincial interests and preferences, of securing permanently located offices for Grand Lodge and owned by it; the utter impractibility of erecting any edifice for the use of Grand Lodge in any locality which would be satisfactory to both Provinces; the like impossibility of erecting a Masonic asylum for which a large sum of money was raised, and appropriated, and notwithstanding the "Asylum Trust," have annually for a long time, urged the importance of further action by Grand Lodge, have indicated localities, proposed plans, suggested "ways and means," yet for the above-mentioned, and other obvious reasons it has hitherto been found impossible to take action thereon; and the same has been true and under the double-majority regime, would continue, to be true in regard to a proposed Masonic Orphan School, Masonic Farm, and all other such like schemes of practical Masonic benevolence; any one of which seeming expedient and desirable, can, without doubt, be successfully carried out in each Province by their respective Grand Lodges.

And had the brethren of the Province of Quebec been willing for any longer period, to continue in the same unsatisfactory position as for the past two years especially, there would always have existed the painful suspense arising from the ever-impending and ever-threatening probability that whenever they should see fit, a constitutional and customary number of lodges would assemble and assert their inherent and traditionary rights by constituting themselves into a Supreme Grand Lodge for the said Province of Quebec.

After the entire failure of the Utopian Dominion scheme, and the consolidation and amalgamation scheme, the majority of the brethren and lodges in the Province of Quebec, having the highest good of the Craft at heart, and believing that a sufficient length of time had been given to the consideration of the subject, after the most anxious and careful deliberation, decided, that they were fully justified in acting upon the only simple and constitutional solution of our long standing and complicated difficulties, by the formation of one independent and Supreme Grand Lodge in and for the Province of Quebec; and therefore with a unanimity seldom paralleled in the formation of grand lodges, the Grand Lodge of Quebec has been formed in order that the Craft in the Province of Quebec, in common with their brethren elsewhere throughout the Masonic world, may secure and enjoy all those inestimable blessings and privileges which necessarily flow from that unity in Grand Lodys allegiance and jurisdiction, which ought always to exist within the same territorial and political boundaries.

In our February issue, we will give audience to "The Grand Lodge of Canada." We shall express no opinion at present.

England.

The quarterly communication of the Grand Lodge of England was held in London, Dec. 1, the Earl of Zetland in the chair, and after confirming the minutes of the previous quarterly, the M. W. Grand Master announced that H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, Hon. Past Grand Master desired admission, and the Grand Wardens, Grand Deacons, the Grand Director of ceremonies and twelve Grand Stewards, were appointed to introduce him. The Prince appeared in plain M. M. dress, and was received with rounds of stormy applause. Upon reaching the position assigned him, the G. M. eloquently addressed and welcomed him. To which the Prince modestly and appropriately responded.

Having been presented with the regalia of a P. G. M., and upon being invested, he was again repeatedly applauded. The Earl of Zetland then signified to the Grand Lodge, that after a service of twenty-six years as Grand Master, and on account of his age, he desired to be excused from further service as Grand Master, and requested that his name should not be put in nomination again.

Accordingly, the Earl De Grey and Ripon, a Minister of the Crown was placed in nomination, which will be acted on at the annual communication in March.

The Powers of a Grand Master.

BY CIPES.

There is nothing in Freemasonry concerning which misapprehension seems more extensively to prevail among Freemasons, than the office and powers of a Grand Master. On the one hand, a Grand Master seems often to be regarded as if he were merely the Master of a Grand Lodge, whose office derives its existence from that of the Grand Lodge; on the other, it appears to be supposed that he possesses an absolute power, which he may exercise in the most arbitrary manner and without control. Both of these notions are utterly erroneous, are contrary to the whole spirit of Freemasonry, and betray great ignorance at once of its nature and of its history.

The office of Grand Master existed long before there was any Grand Lodge, and derives its origin from the very constitution of the Masonic Fraternity. His powers are great, but they are limited by the very landmarks of the Order, as well as by the regulations of the Grand Lodge over which he presides; and in the exercise of them he is subject to the control of assembled brethren, according to that principle of liberty and brotherhood on which the whole system of Freemasonry is based.

The fourth landmark of the Order is the government of the Fraternity by the Grand Master, elected from the body of the Craft. "No brother can be a Warden, until he has passed the part of a Fellow Craft; nor a Master, until he has acted as Warden, nor Grand Warden, until he has been Master of a lodge; nor a Grand Master, unless he has been a Fellow Craft before his election." The fifth landmark is the prerogative of Grand Master to preside over every assembly of the Craft, wheresoever and whensoever held. It is in virtue of this landmark, derived from ancient usage, and not of any special enactment, that the Grand Master assumes the chair, or, as it is called in Scotland, the throne, at every communication of the Grand Lodge, and that he is also entitled to preside at every communication of any lodge holding charter of the Grand Lodge, when he may happen to be present. The sixth landmark is the prerogative of the Grand Master to grant dispensations for conferring degrees at irregular times, without the usual probation, so that a candidate may be initiated at once. This prerogative anciently belonged to all Masters, before the enactment of a law requiring probation. The R. W. Masters of lodges no longer possess it, but the Grand Master possesses it unimpaired. The seventh landmark is the prerogative of the Grand Master to grant dispensations for opening and holding lodges, "lodges under dispensations," which are created by him at his pleasure, and which he in like manner can dissolve. The eighth landmark is the prerogative of the Grand Master to make Freemasons at sight, which follows of necessary consequence from that just noticed, for whenever a Grand Master grants his dispensation to an unchartered lodge to dispense with the necessary probation, and personally presides at the conferring of the degree, he virtually makes a Mason at sight.

Such are the powers of the Grand Master; ancient and unquestionable powers, secured by the very landmarks of the Order. Beyond these, however, he has no power but what is conferred by special statute or regulation of the Grand Lodge over which he has been elected to preside. Nothing can be more contrary to all principles of Freemasonry, than the notion apparently entertained by some, that the Grand Master can make a Freemason "at sight," without the presence or concurrence of any of his brethren; that he can, if he so chooses, retire with the candidate into a private room, and there at once confer the degrees of Freemasonry upon him. A Freemason can only be made in a lodge, and the Grand Master's only mode of exercising his prerogative of making Freemasons at sight, is by summoning to his assistance at least six other Masons, constituting a lodge by which the degrees are then conferred on sight, without any previous probation. This commonly takes place when sovereigns or princes are admitted into the Masonic body. When the purpose for which the lodge has been constituted is fulfilled, it is dissolved by the Grand Master. A lodge thus convened and constituted for a special purpose, is called an occasional lodge. The Grand Master's prerogative, according to the seventh landmark, entitles him to convene such a lodge at his pleasure, but he has no right to confer Masonic degrees except in a lodge duly constituted. Individually, he has no more power in this matter than any other member of the Craft; he must act with concurrence of a number of brethren sufficient to constitute a lodge. The power of convening an occasional lodge for a special purpose has been often exercised, especially in England, when a member of the Royal Family was to be made a Freemason, but it has never been exercised otherwise than in the manner just described. The Grand Master's prerogative of making a Freemason at sight, is thus subject to a most important and necessary limitation, a limitation without which it might be abused to the entire subversion of the first principles of the Order, and would in fact be, in its very nature, inconsistent with them.

The Grand Master presides at any communication of a lodge holding charter at which he may happen to be present. But he presides because his brethren have appointed him to preside. He is elected to his office, which may be likened to that of the President of a Republic, rather than to that of an absolute monarch, who occupies his throne by right of conquest or by hereditary descent. He has no despotic authority. In the lodge, he is amongst brethren, not amongst subjects. He is the chairman of the meeting, and it belongs to him to maintain order. He may call a brother to order who is guilty of any irregularity in conduct or in speech, and he is entitled to expect the fullest support of the assembled brethren in doing so. He is entitled to interrupt any brother who, in speaking on any question, introduces things plainly irrelevant to it, and if necessary to compel him to be silent. It belongs to him, also, to put questions to the vote, and to declare the result, but he has not the power of preventing a question from being brought before the lodge. When the nature of the question is such as is proper for the lodge to consider, he has not the power of preventing the fair discussion of it; he has not the power of determining it himself, but must put it to the vote; and if there is any uncertainty as to the mind of the lodge, the roll must be called, that each brother present may vote in answer to his name. The Grand Master has not the power of refusing to allow the roll to be called when there seems to be a difficulty of ascertaining the judgment of the assembled brethren, for this power, if admitted, would make him virtually despotic, and the bringing of a question before the lodge at all, would be a mere farce. In like manner, if a pretext is taken by any brother against the decision of the lodge, it must be taken. IT IS THE PRIVILEGE OF EVERY BROTHER TO PROTEST WHEN HE THINKS IT NECESSARY TO DO SO, and the Grand Master has no more power than any other member of the Craft to shut his mouth, and to refuse him the privilege of protesting.

Nothing could be more fatal to the interests of Freemasonry than to invest the Grand Master with despotic power, or in other words with power to debar the members of the Fraternity from the exercise of the rights which belong to them as such. It would, in fact, be a subversion of the whole system of Freemasonry. The Grand Master is the officer and organ of the Craft, and is responsible to his brethren. He is placed at the head not merely of the Grand Lodge, but of the whole Craft. He is never styled "Grand Master of the Grand Lodge," but always "Grand Master of Masons." The election of the Grand Master by the Grand Lodge, is a mere arraugment of convenience, which was first adopted in England in 1717, and has since been adopted in Scotland and other countries. The power exercised by the Grand Lodge in the election of Grand Master is to be regarded as a mere delegated power. As to his responsibility to the Craft for the discharge of the duties of his office, nothing can be plainer than the language of one of the regulations adopted in 1721: "If the Grand Master should abuse his power, and render himself unworthy of the obedience of the lodges, he shall be treated in a way and manner to be agreed upon in a new regulation; because hitherto the ancient Fraternity have had no occasion for it, their former Grand Masters having all behaved themselves worthy of that honorable office." No new regulation on this subject, however, has yet been made or found necessary. Grand Masters having always conducted themselves in a manner generally satisfactory to the Craft, showing respect to the landmarks, and duly recognising the rights and privileges of their brethren.

Freemasons are free men. Their whole system is one of liberty, although it is one of order also, and in no community have order and liberty ever been more perfectly reconciled. Their office-bearers, particularly Masters and Wardens, Grand Masters, and Grand Wardens, are appointed for the maintainance of order, and to secure to every member of the Craft the full enjoyment of his rights and privileges. The Freemason is under no monkish vow of absolute obedience, he is not like a Jesuit bound to obey the commands of a superior, in whose hands he is taught to regard it as his highest merit to serve as a mere tool—as a stick in a man's hand. The Grand Master of Masons does not occupy a position in the least degree resembling that of the general order of the Jesuits.

The views which we have stated as to the office, powers, and responsibilities of the Grand Master, are founded on the essential principles of Freemasonry and on its ancient landmarks. The regulation of 1721, just quoted, affords the strongest possible confirmation of them. It might not have been necessary to state them at all, if notions very opposite to them were not prevalent, notions the prevalence of which is extremely to be regretted, because they are inconsistent with that sense of liberty and dignity which every Freemason ought to possess; and because, if the Grand Master himself in any measure adopt them, they necessarily lead him to an extreme and arbitrary exercise of authority, on occasions such as must sometimes arise in every lodge or Grand Lodge, the very occasions on which a full recognition of the rights of every individual member is most important.—London Freemason.

Horses freeze to death in the streets of Montreal.

Publicity of Masonry.

Freemasonry is usually regarded as a "secret institution," and designated as such by writers, as well outside of as within the Order. This ideal of Masonry is an error, if the term is construed strictly, for it never was and is not now, a secret institution—that is, an association whose existence and designs are kept secret from the rest of mankind. From the very earliest periods of its operations, it was known to the profane. While it was yet an operative association, and engaged in the construction of public buildings, its existence had a greater publicity than at present; for its employers, who were sometimes the authorities of the church, and often the national government itself, were necessarily cognizant of its being. Its laws and regulations, too, were well known to the public, and its wonderful achievments in architecture were visible to the community. It was not, then, certainly, a secret institution; for how could that be secret which was known to the government of the country and to "all the people round about?" As an organisation, its members held private meetings, at which none but members were permitted to be present; but these meetings were for the transaction of the private business of the society only, in which none outside of the Order had the slightest interest. But such private meetings did not constitute the organisation a secret one.

Masonry is not now a secret institution. Its existence, and the time and places of its meetings, are published in all the newspapers of the day; the transactions of its Grand Lodges are put in print, and any person, be he a Freemason or not, can read them if he desires. It has its press in nearly every State and kingdom, and papers and magazines and books devoted to its interests are constantly issued, and for sale in public places. Surely it is anything but secret.

Nor are its designs or doings or laws secret—they are all published to the world, and all may learn what they are. Its designs are to assist the needy and provide for the helpless; while it promotes social enjoyment, creates and matures friendships, restrains waywardness and immorality, disseminates knowledge, and enforces industry, temperance, integrity, and principles of honor among its members. These are its objects, and they are proclaimed to the world. Some who are not members of the Order profess to know more of its intentions than the members do, and declare it is a very wicked institution, and that the above are not its objects. But who should know best, those who are admitted into all its private meetings and see and hear all that is said and done, or those who are never permitted to enter a lodge? Its transactions, as we have said, are published to the world, and all may learn what they are. The asylums and homes it has supported, where the widow, the orphan, and the helpless find a shelter and support, are not kept in secret. "Their works praise them," while the words and writings of Finney, Beecher, etc., defame and slander them. If it were disposed to be boastful of its deeds, it could point to them with pride, and challenge the approval of every friend to humanity; but it prefers that its charities shall remain unknown, save by the recipients. It has learned from the Great Light upon its altar not to be the herald of its own munificence.

But this reticence of its charities does not make it a secret society, for none can pretend ignorance of its existence or its aims. It is true that none but its members are permitted at its meetings; but this rule it has a right to enforce, and its doing so is in harmony with a wise discretion. Families do the same; so do churches, legislators, governments, and all social organizations. The preachers in some of the churches, that are just now ready to explode with new-born zeal against secrecy are themselves as guilty of secrecy as are the Freemasons. They have their family secrets, which they would not for the world that the others should know; and they have their secret counsels in church, in which they discuss the evils of secrecy in the Craft! If to keep secrets be a sin, per se, then are these super-sanctimonious gentlemen the greatest sinners in the land; for they have, also, their professional secrets, the secrets of the confessional, and secrets communicated by the sick and dying. But the cry of secrecy is a false pretence, and only uttered for effect.

In addition to the reasons above given why Masonry should not be considered a secret society, is the fact that we go out before the world at our funerals and festivals, laying corner-stones, consecrating halls, monuments, &c. On such occasions we form processions, with music and banners and marshals, each member dressed in Masonic clothing to proclaim his membership, and every thing possible to let the world know what we are and who we are. Are these the acts of a secret society? We are as public as the church, as well known as are political organization, or scientific clubs, or literary societies. They all have their secret meetings, for matters pertaining exclusively to their own membership. Freemasons do no more than this, yet Masonry is called a secret institution, while these others are all public! Why this discrimination? Is it not simply to attach odium to a social and charitable association? These very men who make the charge know it to be untrue; but in their code of moral ethics, "the end justifies the means." They can not gain admittance to our private meetings and their suspicious minds imagine all sorts of things, and conclude such meetings are for the purpose of devising plots and treasons and crimes. Corrupt themselves, and ready to engage in any nefarious acts, they conceive others to be as bad as themselves, and hence the cry of secret societies, as though there must necessarily be something criminal in the members of a society holding a meeting for private business.

Is it a crime to hold private consultations on matters in which other than members are not interested? If so the church, and social organizations as well, are quite as guilty as the Freemasons. We make the declaration understandingly, and defy contradiction, that in no Masonic meeting ever held in the United States, was the subject of politics or party introduced or discussed. A lodge would lose its charter instanter, if such proceedings were had, in any Grand Lodge jurisdiction in the country. No question of party, or office, of sect or religion, was ever mooted in a lodge of Freemasons. Nothing is ever done or said in which any other than members are interested. We have our forms and ceremonies about which outsiders know nothing, for it does not concern them, and they have no right to know. Let them come, as others do, and ask for admission; if they are men of mature age, of reputable standing, are not "atheists, irreligous libertines," and are willing to obey the laws and to conform to all the usages of Masonry, they will doubtless be admitted. Our assertions on these matters may be doubted; indeed the whole theory of hostility to the Order is based upon the assumption that we do not tell all, or withhold a part—that our statements, in short, are not true. We can't help it; we make the statement to the public, and tens of thousands of the purest and best men of the land will attest its truthfulness.—Dispatch.

Brother Jacob Norton.

In our last issue, we gave the place in our editorial columns, which we should have otherwise given to Michigan matters, to Bro. Norton, as we design to do equal justice to all parties. It seems we misjudged, or rather did not come to a "logical inference," when we, with others, ascribe the authorship of the "Hash" criticisms, in the Masonic Monthly, to Bro. Norton. But we could not see how the editor—Bro. Evans—could be traveling in Europe, and at the same time reading exchanges and writing fault-finding, captious criticisms thereon, in the United States. It is a fast age, and the editor of the Monthly may be a fast man, but we were not prepared for results like these. We had rather inferred that some one was acting as editor pro tem.; and, judging from the style and spirit of the articles bearing the signature of Jacob Norton, as compared with the criticisms denominated "Hash," we thought we could divine their origin. But, we have often been told that it is the easiest thing in the world to be mistaken, and we may have been mistaken in our inferences. But as the denial of the authorship is not direct, when we compare the style of the first paragraphs in the article before us, with that of the "Hash" articles, while we confess that the gloved hand feels soft, like that of Esau, yet the style of the articles would seem to indicate the voice of Jacob in both!

But, as above stated, we may be mistaken; and if so, we would transfer our objections and criticisms to Bro. Evans, who should share the blame, even in the former case.

That we may give our readers more ample proof of the objectionable nature of the Hash articles, in the Masonic Monthly, to which we objected, and the captious, fault-finding spirit in which they are couched, we give the following extracts, taken from the August number of that magazine.

> "The Freemasons' Monthly Magazine, by Chas. W. Moore, for June, turns up at this time. A mere mention of it does to fill up our Hash with, but no more. It is a very dry morsel, and adds nothing to the savoriness of our dish. It is the oldest of the existing Masonic journals in the United States. It has not like wine, improved with its age. It has been fading out for some years. It apparently receives very little editing, and may be said to edit itself. Once in a while, it shows signs of reviving life and energy, but, as a rule on such occasions, ever on the side of an abuse, an error, or a prejudice. It seems to be the organ of those whose lamps have gone out, no more to enlighten our paths"

Again, on pages 106 and 107, we find the following, in reference to Bro. H. G. Reynolds, Grand Master of Illinois, and the THE TROWEL, which he has so ably and successfully conducted:

> "THE MASONIC TROWEL, Springfield, Ill., for June. This publication is not one of the classics. It never will be; it aims not to be so. It could not be, if it would. Dr. Mackey tried hard to lift it up, for a while, with his curious, but not useful, yet loose, speculative talk about the plants of the ancient mysteries. Dr. Mackey being no longer engaged in the inflation of this journal, it has fallen, ker chunk, down to its proper level. Above that level, it never aims to shoot. Its level is that of mediocrity. The mediocrity compose a large class. Therefore, THE TROWEL must suit a large class. * * * We do not mean to say that brother Reynolds has no ambition, never soars. He is a man of vaulting ambition. He has already vaulted as nigh as the thirty-third round of the ladder of the A. & A. Rite, but that did not dizzy his head. He is altogether too commonplace and matter-of fact to be dizzied. He has never forgotten that 'the Third, or Master Mason's Degree, is the ruling and governing degree in Freemasonry.' We willingly thus testify to his loyalty. He is ambitious of rule.'

Now we press the matter, whether the above is written in the spirit and dignity of the gentleman and the Mason? If we concede that these journals are not conducted just as they would be, if under the control of Bro. Evans, should their editors be treated to such a dish of hash, every month? Would it not be more generous, to concede the fact that men differ in policy, and in taste also; and therefore all should be entitled to be heard; and, also, to read the journals of their choice? It is a fact, patent to all, that a large class of Masons in the United States, prefer the journals complained of to the Masonic Monthly, and, in this land of boasted liberty, they should be permitted to choose for themselves.

In reference to the matters discussed in Bro. Norton's article, we do not care to enter into a controversy with him. In fact, in many things, we should agree with him. Every Mason knows that sectarianism and partyism should be banished from Masonry—entirely so.

If lodges were dedicated to the Saints John, because these Saints John were Christians, and in order to make Masonry indorse Christianity, then could the Jew complain. But our monitors inform us, "that, although our ancient brethren dedicated their lodges to King Solomon, yet Masons professing Christianity dedicate theirs to St. John the Baptist, and St. John the Evangelist, who were eminent patrons of Masonry." Now, if dedicating a lodge to a patron of Masonry be objected to, on the ground that said patron was a Christian, would it not be equally objectionable to dedicate to a Jew, as was King Solomon? "He was an Israelite in his religion," might be objected by the Mahometan, the Budhist, or the Christian. Then Bro. Norton would reply, in the language of the monitor, "Solomon was the Founder and Patron of Masonry, and hence lodges were dedicated to him."

In our experience, we have not found Israelites to object to celebrating the festive days of Saints John; nor do we believe the thing is of common occurrence, unless it is where the Masonic Monthly is read, whose articles are well calculated to stir up discords between Jew and Christian—all of which is, in our opinion, most unmasonic. We have alwas been of opinion that such articles were in keeping with sectarian prayers, which are sometimes most injudiciously made in lodge-rooms.

But as we said in our article of criticism, we esteem the Masonic Monthly, as an able exponent of Masonry, its rabid, snarling, scathing criticisms on other journals excepted. We thank Bro. Norton, for the prompt manner in which he came to us, with his own defence. He wields a ready pen, and has undoubtedly been an earnest student of Masonry. Should he see cause to write for our colums, in future, we shall give him place, unless we should judge the articles objectionable in which case, they would be returned.—Michigan Freemason.

Frederic and Freemasonry.

Frederic the Great always firmly believed that Masonry was an institution useful to the State, because he often said it prohibits Masons from intermeddling in political matters, it requires them to serve their country, and its object is the perfect moralization of its members In one of his letters, written on the 30th of January, 1777, to the National Grand Master, Prince Frederic de Braunswig, he thus expresses himself: "I cannot but infinitely applaud the spirit which leads all Masonic brethren to be good patriots and faithful subjects; and under a Grand Master as enlightened as your Most Serene Highness, who to superior talents unites the most tender attachment for my person, I cannot but promise myself the most fortunate result, from your devoted exertions to increase virtue and true patriotism in the hearts of my subjects."

In another letter, written by the same prince 14th of February, 1777, to the Venerable on the Master of the Lodge of Royal York de l'Amitie, at the Orient of Potsdam, we find these expressions: "The Masonic Society, whose sole object it is to make, germinate, and produce fruit of every kind of virtue in my States, may always count upon my protection. It is the glorious duty of every good sovereign, and I will never fail to fulfill it."

Profanes have, therefore, falsely asserted that this prince once said, in a conversation, in regard to Masonry. "It is a great nothing." It is true that he separated from the Order, but the reason was this:

In the first year of his reign he established a lodge of twenty-four members, whose labors he directed as Master. It was composed of his most eminent statesmen and generals, and those most devoted to his person. Among them was Gen. Wallrave, his favorite and most intimate friend. After the conquest of the province of Schelswig, Frederic commissioned him to repair the old fortresses and build new ones in that province. That of Neise being the most important, on account of its excellent strategical position and its mines, was especially recommended to him by the king.

Seduced by bribes of money, Wallrave entered into an intimate correspondence with the Austrian Prince Kaunitz, the sworn enemy of the king of Prusia, and made known to him the plan and secret mines of to important fortress.

This being discovered, the monarch could not permit the traitor to go unpunished; and this traitor, whom he had loaded with favors, and made him his brother, was about to be proceeded against for the crime of high treason. Frederic reflected on this preplexing case, and finally came to a determination worthy of himself, and at the same time truly Masonic.

The Royal Master convoked the lodge, and pronounced there an eloquent discourse upon morality. He spoke to the brethren with enthusiasm of the duties of Masons toward their brethren. Toward the close of his discourse his affectionate language was changed for words full of fire, which caused in his auditors great astonishment, and filled them with emotion. The King Mason, profoundly pained, arose from his seat, and majestically pronounced these Masonic words:

"One of the brethren here present has committed a horrible crime—a crime for which he merits capital punishment. The Mason has violated the laws of our Order, and failed in his duty to his country. He has broken his Masonic oath, and become an ingrate and traitor toward me, his Venerable Master—toward me, his king, his brother, his friend, and his benefactor. As a king, I wish not to know this: as Master I wish to pardon him; as a brother and friend, I wish fraternally, to offer him my hand and raise him from the abyss into which he has fallen; as a man I wish to forget the past. I ask only that he avow his crime here, among us, in the family. I wish him to promise to forsake the path he has taken, to repent, and all shall forever remain a secret between us, and the least mention never made of it. But if he remains silent, unwilling to accept the forgiveness that, as a Mason I offer him, then I declare to him that I shall be obliged to leave this lodge forever: and that as the king, his Master, and the first magistrate of the country, I shall be forced to do my duty, and deliver him into the hands of justice to be tried for his offence."

These earnest words moved and penetrated the hearts of all the members, who afflicted and trembling, gazed upon one another; but no one dared to speak, or could guess to whom this stern and yet just royal sentence of their venerable Master could be addressed. The traitor himself was silent.

After some moments of silence the king repeated his words, but more calmly. The members still responded by silence alone. Then with tears in his eyes, the great king, with a smothered voice, uttered these words:

"As a brother Mason, I have preformed my duty; but, alas! I see that even among this small number of Masons Masonic feeling does not govern, that neither vow, nor sacred duties, nor sworn fidelity, nor the gratitude due a benefactor, are strong enough to restrain men to stifle their evil passions, to prevent them from wronging their fellows. I close this lodge forever, and will never again take up the gavel!"

He closed the lodge in the usual form, and expressing the most touching sentiments, with bared head he replaced the gavel in the East.

In the ante-chamber of the lodge, upon retiring, he demanded of Gen. Wallrave his sword, and ordered him to be arrested and placed in custody for trial. He was condemned to thirty years imprisonment, and died before expiating his offense. Once he wrote from the prison to the king, beseeching his pardon, refering him to the 88th Psalm of David. The king answered by sending him the 101st Psalm.—Le Franc Mason.

A Relic of Solomon's Temple.

At a recent convocation of Union Lodge No. 60, of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Baltimore, there was presented to the Lodge, to be laid up in its archives, a portion of one of the stones of Solomon's Temple.

The foundations of one side of that world renowned edifice were laid in a valley, and the wall of the temple on that side went down a distance of ninety feet. The stone presented to the lodge was a part of this wall, and was obtained at a distance of seventy feet below the surface of the hill on which the temple was built.

What revolutions has that stone witnessed! As a part of the foundation of the temple built by the Worshipful Grand Master of Israel, it supported the magnificent edifice at whose dedication the Great King stretched forth his hand to Heaven as he offered to the living God that wonderfully sublime prayer for his people.

In the course of years that people fell away into idolatry; few were the worshippers of Jehovah left in Jerusalem; on the hill towering above the vale of Hinnom rose the splendid temples of the Zodiac and of Venus, and the Gehenna was white with the bones of the victims of Moloch: in the temple itself the prophets of the Most High were slaughtered before His very altars, and from the gorgeous porch gleamed afar the glittering horses of the Sun.

In spite of the partial return to the true religion in the reign of Josiah, the people became rapidly worse and worse, till they were carried captive, and suffered the terrible penalties of their crime, as had been often foretold by Moses and the prophets. The first temple was destroyed; but its foundations were left untouched, and this stone helped to uphold the second temple, built after the return from their captivity, and adorned with the greatest magnificence by King Herod. This was the temple destroyed by the Romans, and though they ran the plow over the upper portion of the foundations, the lower were untouched, and were still undisturbed when the apostate attempted to rebuild the edifice, and was driven off in terror by the flames bursting forth from the bowels of Mount Moriah.

When the Master Mason beholds this stone, his imagination carries him back to the time when the Great and Good Junior Warden placed it in position. He beholds him, square in one hand and gavel in the other, setting it true by the plumb in its bed of well-tempered mortar. He sees the foundation go up gradually till it reaches the level of the top of the Holy Hill. He sees the temple walls arise without the sound of hammer, or of any tool, and the majestic pillars, Jachin and Boaz, planted in their places; he sees the beautiful structure roofed in, and the temple almost completed—when his soul is horrified at a deed of unequalled atrocity, the wail for which is yet heard among all true Master Masons, and which will be lamented as long as the Order exists that knows no latitude or race, and confers its blessings upon all mankind from the rising to the setting of the sun.

Such are some of the reflections that arise in the breast of the Master Mason as he gazes with reverence upon this relic of hoary antiquity. It must suggest much more to the brother that has received further light by progressing to the Royal Arch, in which many more interesting facts are disclosed about that sacred edifice.

Union Lodge No. 60, of Baltimore, should be proud of owning but a part of one of the stones of that glorious structure, more celebrated than the Pyramid of Cheops, the Pantheon, or the Parthenon. Would that every Lodge in the country were possessed of a fragment, however small, of the joint work of the genius of King Solomon, of Hiram of Tyre, and of Hiram Abif!—Norfolk Journal.

Reference to the Death of Comp. Philip Mason.

On the 25th day of April last, our beloved companion, Philip Mason, departed this life, at his residence in the town of Connersville, full of years and of honors. He had served his brethren and companions ably and faithfully. How to speak of him as he justly merited, I find not. From my first acquaintance with him in 1842, when I first met him in Grand Lodge, to his death, it was my good fortune to enjoy his confidence and friendship in a large degree. Of his attachment for, and devotion to Masonry, none ever doubted—always ready, always faithful—never faltering when anything was to be done to promote the harmony, prosperity, and usefulness of the Brotherhood; well versed in in everything pertaining to the history, symbolisms, and teachings of Masonry. His name first appears upon the records of the Grand Lodge as representative of Warren Lodge No. 15, at the convocation of 1828. In 1829 he was elected Junior Grand Warden: in '34 Senior Grand Deacon; in '35 Grand Treasurer; in '36 Grand Lecturer. In 1830, '33, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, and '44, he was elected Grand Master. In order to be relieved from the continued labors and responsibilities of official position, he absented himself from the Grand Lodge in 1845. A record worthy the aspirations of the most meritorious, or even the most ambitious. In 1845 his name first appears upon the record of the Grand Chapter as the representative of Maxwell Chapter No. 18, which he represented as its High Priest the two succeeding years. In 1861, '62, and 63, he was elected Grand Scribe. In 1868 he was for the last time with us as High Priest and representative of his chapter. No companion has been more honored, and none deserved more than did Comp. Mason. He scrupulously observed all the laws of courtesy that characterizes the intercourse of gentlemen and Masons, doing unto others as he would have them do unto him; a clear and discriminating mind, sound judgment, and never knowingly in the wrong. His memory deserves much of us who survive him, and it will be cheerfully accorded by all who knew him. Let the Grand Chapter take such steps as will place upon our records a lasting memorial of the merits of our departed companions.—Hazellrigg, Indiana.

Elegant.

One truth we have learned, and teach—that all men are children of one Heavenly Parent, whom to love supremely is our first duty. But, "if we love him that begetteth, we also will love them who are begotten of him." This is the true test of our love to the Father. For His sake, then, and for theirs, we should ever strive for the good of our fellow-men. To do this with effect, it becomes us to be more and more select in our companionship. One unworthy, or uncongenial companion is a clog—and many such are, what the old Romans so expressively denominated baggage, the "impedimenta" of the great army of Masonry.

Nor is it necessary for us to adopt strange or extreme opinions. Truth never lies in such. Because we recognize all men as children of a common Father, it does not follow that we must acknowledge them equal, in all respects, temporal as well as eternal. This were to falsify the plain record of His will. All nature, as well as His holy revealed word, teaches the contrary. The stars are all made by Him, and yet, "one star differeth from another in glory." Angels have their degrees in station before him; and on the face of human society are impressed, by the same hand, the great moral relations of parent and child, master and servant, magistrate and subject. Even in the same family, one child differeth from another in sex and in gifts. Accepting His will as our law, our duty is to work within its defined limits; making constant effort for the good of our fellow-creatures in the stations He has assigned them. And He will bless the effort, and us in the effort.—Samuel Lawrence, G. H. P. Ga.

Masonry Among the Indians.

The evident doom of the Aborigines of this country to extermination, while it does not fail to excite a sympathetic feeling in every one, most of all should strike a tender chord in the Mason's breast. They are not what they once were; civilization has only approached near enough to brutalize them with the vices that accompany it, as the crowd of dissolute camp-followers accompany an army. Our great national novelist, Cooper, has been rediculed by some for idealizing his Indian characters, but we believe his pictures to represent much more nearly the Indians of former days than their descendants do now. Whether there are lodges of brethren of the mystic tie now among the degraded Indians of our western borders, we do not know, but that there are individual Masons among the better classes of them we do know, and we are equally certain that once there existed fraternities who possessed like Freemasons, an esoteric knowledge which was confined solely to the initiated. De Witt Clinton, once G. G. High Priest of the United States, related on the authority of a respectable native minister, who knew from examination, the existence of such a society among the Iroquois. That there were mysteries among the Mexican and Peruvian tribes, is equally well known. Whoever is within the magic circle indicated by the mystic tie, has our own genuine love and deepest sympathy, and even the nation that they call their own has claims upon us, for their sake, which others have not.

Tecumseh, the famous Shawnee orator and warrior, and equally noted for his temperate habits and adherence to truth, was made a Mason while on a visit to Philadelphia; and more than once, when under trial, did he prove himself true to the Brotherhood. Past Grand Master Scott, of Virginia, in an address delivered before the grand lodge in that State, in 1845, related an interesting incident in Tecumseh's life, which he stated was well authenticated, and vouched for by several witnesses then living. "During the last war with England, a detachment of Americans were overpowered in the Northwest, by a superior combined English and Indian force, and compelled to surrender. Scarcely had they laid down their arms when the Indians began to insult, strip, and maltreat them. At length the tomahawk and scalping knife were raised and Tecumseh entered upon the scene at the height of the barbarity. He made no motion to check his followers, but, on the contrary, encouraged them in their work. Many of his best warriors had fallen previously by their Kentucky rifles, and this was an Indian's revenge. But a cry of a Mason and a brother reached his ear, in a language that he could not but comprehend. In a moment he sprang among his followers with his tomahawk uplifted, and uttered the life-saving command—'let the slaughter cease; kill no more white men.'" This is but one of the several authentic incidents in the Masonic life of the brave Tecumseh.

We have another noble example of Indian Masonry, in the person of General Parker grandson of the great Indian Chief, Red Jacket, a pure-blooded Indian and at the same time an educated gentleman and a Mason. During the late civil war he became famous on General Grant's staff, and proved himself to possess the war-like blood of his ancestor. At a Masonic banquet in Chicago, prior to the war, he spoke most touchingly of himself, as almost the lone remnant of what was once a noble race. As he found his people thus wasting away, he asked himself: "where shall I go when the last of my race shall have gone forever? Where shall I find home and sympathy when our last council-fire is extinguished? I said, I will knock at the door of Freemasonry, and see if the white race will recognize me as they had my ancestors when we were strong, and the white man weak. I knocked at the door of the Blue Lodge; and found Brotherhood around its altar; I knelt before the great light in the chapter, and found companionship beneath the Royal Arch; I entered the encampment, and found a valiant Sir Knight willing to shield me there, without regard to race or nation. I went further, I knelt at the cross of my Saviour, and found Christian Brotherhood, the crowning charity of the Masonic Tie. I feel assured that when my glass is run out, and I shall follow the footsteps of my departed race, Masonic sympathizers will cluster around my coffin, and drop in my lonely grave the ever-green acacia—sweet emblem of a better meeting!"

Joseph Brant, the famous Mohawk Indian and Mason, was still another example of the practical power of our principles. During the Revolutionary war, at the battle of the Cedars, near Montreal, Col. McKinstry, of the Continental troops, was taken prisoner by the Indian allies in the British service. After a council, it was resolved that he should perish at the stake, by the usual protracted Indian tortures. When fastened to the fatal tree, as a last resort, he made the great mystic appeal of a Mason in the hour of danger. The Chieftain Brant was present, and in a moment saw, understood, and responded to the sign. He at once commanded the savages to liberate him, and was obeyed. Then, with fraternal care, he conducted him in safety to Quebec, whence he returned to his home on parole. He survived for several years after, and often, with deep emotion, related how he was snatched from the jaws of death by an Indian Mason.

Rough and Perfect Ashlar.

It ought to be our constant study to demonstrate what Freemasonry really is by our own conduct; to show that the solemn ceremonies, the august rites, in which we have participated, tend to make us better men in every relation of life. A great responsibility therefore rests upon the conscience of every upright brother when he proposes what our Continental freres call a "profane" for admission to our mysteries, and nothing but a thorough conviction of the moral fitness of the neophyte should induce him to incur this responsibility. We have too many "rough ashlars," too many warped and worm-eaten planks, in the building; there are individuals in the Masonic Order now who ought never to have been admitted, and whose continued connection with a Fraternity like ours is a reproach and a disgrace. If we cannot get rid of such men, let us at least be more careful for the future; let us reflect that every one who enters our portals becomes a member of a society whose principles are founded upon honor and virtue, and that the fact of his being a Freemason will entitle him to the recognition, companionship, and friendship of the best men of every clime and creed.

We have no right to admit men tainted with ignoble vices into a brotherhood of the free, the wise, and the good. We have no right to confer the inestimable privileges of our Order upon persons whose deeds will give the lie to all its teachings; we have no right to leaven the mass of truth and integrity with samples of mental and moral depravity. The desire to increase our numbers must not be allowed to sway our minds. Freemasonry does not depend upon numerical strength for its influence; nay, the reverse is the case when the material is otherwise than "perfect ashlars." This is a subject which comes home to every Mason; many must have seen with sorrow instances like those to which we refer, and it behooves all to make a vigorous effort for reform in this direction, for let us be assured that with true men as the pillars of our temple, Freemasonry can never be shaken from its lofty seat, but will remain throughout the revolving cycles of time a perfect monument of Wisdom, Strength, and Beauty.—London Freemason.

Iowa—Sensible.

The Grand Council Royal and Select Masters of Iowa, met at Mt. Pleasant, October 21. One year before, it was seriously proposed to disband, and the question was to come up for decision. The Grand Puissant met the whole question with ability and decision, and stated more objections than we should have thought of. Dr. Guilbert—a stern ruler in power—an agrarian when not in power—was on hand, and made report both on the address and as a member of the Committee on Jurisprudence, in both of which he indulged in the Guilbert half good natured and half sarcastic vein, and drove hard for disbandment. He was defeated.

Minnesota.

We are under many obligations to some one—R. W. Bro. W. S. Combs, Grand Secretary, we presume—for a bound copy of the re-publication of the proceedings of Minnesota Grand Lodge from 1853 to 1869. M. W. Breth, A. E. Ames, A. T. C. Pierson, Geo. W. Prescott, and C. W. Nash, have served as Grand Masters; R. W. Breth. J. G. Lennon, H. Reynolds, G. W. Prescott, A. T. C. Pierson, C. W. Carpenter, and W. S. Combs, as Grand Secretaries.

The Old and the New.

The year 1869 is gone. Many are its events; its history is made. Much may be forgotten, and very much should be remembered.

Glancing briefly, we will advert to a few prominent events. The nation has a new administration, and the shaping adviser of the President, Gen. Rawlins, a true Mason and a generous man, has left us. Several distinguished men have died.

The Pacific Railway spans the continent from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and commerce is unrestrained by mountain or desert.

Our public debt is slowly diminishing, and we trust that the burdens of the people will be speedily and materially lightened.

Concessions to the people are wrung from Emperors, and National religions are falling before the demands for freedom of conscience.

The papacy has proclaimed its hate of Masonry and liberty of conscience, and assembles its votaries to proclaim the infallibility of its decrees; they hesitate; God reigns, and no true Mason need fear to place his trust in Him.

Masonry has flourished during the past year, and though denounced by fanatical preachers, rejected candidates, expelled Masons, papal devotees and mocking atheists, it has gone on all the better for such opposition, fulfilling its mission of mercy, peace and humanity.

We have entered upon a new year. Its events are mostly in the future, its history is to be written, and its character is yet unknown. A few general words to our brethren must suffice for the present time.

Masonry in its membership, character and efficiency, is a vast improvement upon itself thirty years ago. Then we had no grand lodge. There were not more than eight or ten lodges in the State. Thirty years ago next April five of those lodges met in convention at Jacksonville and formed the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Their entire membership was less than one hundred. They came from the south, from the east, and from foreign lands. They did not think alike nor work alike. They brought the habits, the political views, the religious notions and the Masonic theories of the peoples, countries and lodges from whence they came. The country was new. The freedom, license and lawlessness of border life, had their influence. Speculation was rife. Political discussions were rancorous. The Fraternity had no means of general information, and lodges and brethren were measurably a law unto themselves. Masons were but men, and it is not singular that they were affected by the times. Far be it from us to depreciate the lodges or brethren of that day. The wonder is that they have succeeded so well. But education has spread its benign ægis over our State. Religion has modified, moulded and formed society. Our agriculture is the wonder of the world. Mechanic arts are rapidly developing. Railroads have annihilated distance, equalized values, and increased the importance of time.

The telegraph informs us of events near or distant as they transpire. Whole communities become cosmopolitan, and intelligence is the main feature of the age.

In the short space of thirty years we number in Illinois six hundred and thirty lodges, over thirty-five thousand affiliated Masons, and our revenue exceeds $30,000.

Brethren!! Now is the time for caution. Be at peace and in harmony in your lodges, or else let them be closed.

There is no spectacle more painful to a true Mason than to see a body bound by the strongest obligations to observe the laws of harmony, falling into discord and confusion. The Grand Lodge of Illinois has no use for such lodges nor will she permit them to exist.

We exhort you to reject no man for his faith or politics, who can meet our requirements, and we do seriously exhort you to admit none but such as will be a credit to the profession of a Freemason.

Let the secrecy of the ballot be preserved under all circumstances. Let no brother disclose his vote when there is a difference. It is a violation of Masonic honor.

Let all your dealings with each other be conducted in the spirit of a large charity.

Be just and honorable in the world. Let all your acts be worthy of imitation.

Strive to make your neighborhood the better for your living in it; let society feel the weight of your influence always on the side of justice, law, mercy and order.

The Ninth Volume.

In 1862, without money or credit, we commenced the publication of The Masonic Trowel. At that time there were but two Masonic journals, showing any vitality, in the United States. The Voice of Masonry had flourished at Louisville, but the breaking out of the late civil war caused a temporary suspension. It was subsequently removed to Chicago, but had a precarious existence until it passed into the hands of W. Bro. John C. W. Bailey, its present proprietor. The Trowel was started for a purpose, but while it succeeded in its purpose, the Editor was nearly crushed, and barely escaped the grave. It was not originally intended to publish The Trowel after the purpose for which it was started should be consummated. Matters culminated in 1863, but it was then thought by our friends that it ought to be continued. With varying success it has continued until the present, and from that time, in addition to all the ordinary purposes of a Masonic journal, we have kept two points constantly and steadily in view.

1. To maintain, at all times, and under all circumstances, the clearly expressed will of the Grand Lodge, as supreme and paramount law; bearing in mind that there are certain landmarks and charges that are fundamental and unchangeable.

2. The equality of all lodges and all brethren in this jurisdiction without regard to former differences.

To what purpose we have labored in these directions, is for others to say.

From the Voice of Masonry, since it passed into Bro. Bailey's hands, we have received fair and considerate treatment. We extend a kind hand to him, and wish him abundant success.

The Mystic Star was first started by Rev. Bro. Chaplin, at Fort Wayne. We gave it cordial indorsement, and in his hands, both at Fort Wayne and Chicago, it was an able co-laborer in Masonry. The admission of another proprietor changed its tone, and the withdrawal of Bro. Chaplin was the signal for inuendos and insinuations in regard to The Trowel and its conductors, wholly unsupported by any treatment of ours, or anything done by us. The recent attacks upon us are unworthy of the conductors of any respectable political paper, much more a Masonic one.

The character of that paper and the quality of its articles are matters of which its readers are the judges—not we. If its reverend editors will deal in charity and fairness, we shall wish them, and all other Masonic journalists a hearty Godspeed. But if they have a disposition to evoke further remark, they can rest assured that we are ready for the task.

We are now surrounded by Masonic journals. In addition to the Voice and Star, we have the Evergreen in Iowa, the Freemason in Missouri, the Kentucky Freemason, the Home Advocate in Indiana, and farther away, the Mirror in California, Record in Tennessee, The Freemason in Michigan, and our old-time acquaintance, The Review in Cincinnati. These make ten Masonic journals, where but one could be truthfully said to be alive in 1862. All this indicates great prosperity and a desire for information, and what is as laudable, a disposition to know what is done in one's own jurisdiction. These journals, with the exception of the Review, and the Voice, occupy the field formerly supplied by The Trowel. The Evergreen, Record, and the Freemason in Missouri and Kentucky, all started within a year or two of each other. At that time, our circulation was nearly 13,000. Those journals took from us nearly 3,000 subscribers. The journals in Michigan, Indiana, and Pennsylvania, took 1,500 more. The transfer of the National Freemason from Washington to New York, took away 500 more. This left us a common field with the Voice and Star in Illinois, and with all other journals in Wisconsin, Minnesota, and west of Iowa and Missouri. This diminuition of 5,000, and a strong competition, has kept us in a laboring position to retain our circulation.

We are gratified to announce at this writing (Jan. 8) that our circulation in Illinois has increased more than 1,000, and not one-tenth of our prospectuses have been returned. Our circulation abroad is augmented full five hundred, and we confidently expect to be able to announce in February full 12,000 circulation.

We are no longer Grand Secretary of any Masonic body. We have renewed our strength. We have girded ourself for the work before us. We intend to maintain the landmarks; to defend our constitutions; uphold the honor and proclaim the humane mission of Masonry. For fanatical anti-Masons and reverend scorners, we have no respect, and as they show neither decency or common civility, they need not expect mercy at our hands.

And we have some Masonic journalists who ought to put on an anti-Masonic dress. Masonic clothes become them about as well as the dress of a sheep becomes a wolf. The inevitable tendency of their teachings, is destruction to all that is noble, moral, and stable in Masonry, and is as destructive to society itself. We intend to expose them in every possible way and manner. In the midst of political corruption, the banner of Masonic morality must be unfurled; while murder, seduction, and an unholy severance of domestic ties find aid and comfort from a portion of the religious press, it becomes our duty to stand upon the Masonic ramparts and boldly proclaim that the laws of Jehovah, as laid down in the Holy Writings, must be obeyed. Let Masonry be elevated to a higher and still higher position, until its cementing influence, shall bring men of various minds into friendly conference, men of different religious views into a holy union, and all the classes which compose the human family, into one common fraternity. The Trowel will labor to these ends as it has never labored before, and we ask only a fair hearing, and a liberal, generous support.

Lincoln, 210, and Logan, 480.

We attended the session of the Legislature for '46-7, and one of the first things that attracted our attention was a contest over the removal of the county seat from an old town adjoining and now a part of Lincoln, to Mount Pulaski. The removal was made, but the location of the C. A. & St. L. road brought the old location into favor again, and, through the exertions of Col. Robert B. Latham and others, the county seat was removed to the present prosperous town of Lincoln, the third place in size between Chicago and Springfield and the fifth or sixth between Chicago and St. Louis. The points will probably rank as follows: 1. Springfield; 2. Alton; 3. Bloomington; 4. Joliet; 5 and 6, Lincoln and Carlinville; which of the two last is largest we do not know. Bloomington would probably contest with Alton, and perhaps with propriety, for the second position.

Quite early in the history of Lincoln, application was made for a dispensation, and in October, 1856, a charter was granted to Lincoln Lodge No. 210, of which Col. Robert B. Latham was the first Master, Joseph F. Benner, S. W.; Robert Leslie, J. W.; S. Kahn, Treas.; and Jno. T. Jenkins, Secretary.

Bro. Latham served as Master until December, 1859, and was elected in 1860, 1861, 1864, 1866, 1867, and 1868. He now retires because he will serve no longer.

Bro. Benner was elected Master in 1859, and again in 1862, and also served as Secretary for some time.

Bro. S. Kahn is the only Treasurer the lodge has ever had.

The present W. M., Bro. Parker, is the late S. W., and is admirably fitted for the position, being well skilled in the work, and has both experience and ability.

The numerical strength of Lincoln Lodge, and the rapid growth and prosperity of town and country, seemed to justify the formation of another lodge, and in 1866 a dispensation was granted to Bro. Robert F. Benner and his associates, for a new lodge, and in the following October a charter was granted to Logan Lodge No. 480, Robert F. Benner, W. M. He has served as such ever since.

Lincoln Lodge has about eighty members, and Logan about sixty.

Having resolved upon a public installation, the 11th instant was fixed upon as the time and we were invited to perform that service.

Upon our arrival we were met by a committee and conducted to the Spitley House, where we found our old friend of the St. Nicholas, James W. Sponsler, Esq., in full blast as a first-class landlord. Such is our opinion, and the opinion of Judge Scott, who is a good judge of a hotel, as well as a good judge of the circuit court.

We visited Logan Lodge 480, and were kindly welcomed.

The hall is a capital one, light, well finished and elegantly furnished, with nice ante-rooms, and all the appliances for comfort and work. Both Lodges are in good financial condition, and we found good work in 480, and know by inspection in 1863 that the work is good in 210.

At 7 P. M., the large audience-room of the M. E. Church was filled by brethren, ladies and citizens, notwithstanding a stormy rain.

Rev. Father Anderson, now 82 years old, a native of Virginia, who was made a Mason in Jonesboro, Tennessee, officiated as Chaplain. He was initiated in 1816, and came as a traveling preacher of the Methodist connection to Illinois in 1829, and was a colleague of the celebrated Peter Cartwright, in his first year of service here. Although the old veteran stands erect, yet he totters as he walks, rises with difficulty, and his voice has the tremulousness of age.

In his prayer he alluded most feelingly to the beneficent character of Masonry, besought a blessing upon it, and the officers to be installed, and most gracefully closed with a solemn petition to the "Throne of the Heavenly Grace," that the young men of the Order might prove themselves every way worthy.

Col. Robert B. Latham officiated with unusual ability as Marshal. Four pieces of music were executed with remarkable skill. As we took no notes, we are at a loss in regard to names and pieces, and must make them, with other names not remembered, matter for a future article. We would here remark that the returns we desired have not yet been furnished. We hope the Secretaries will send them forward.

After music, prayer, and music again, the officers of Lincoln Lodge No. 210 and Logan Lodge No. 480, were duly installed. Another piece of music and the oration followed.

Hon. and R. W. Bro. John M. Scott, of Bloomington, was elected W. M. of Bloomington Lodge No. 43, in 1851, and for several years afterwards. He represented the lodge in 1854, and was appointed S. G. Deacon at that and the subsequent sessions. A large practice fell into his hands as attorney, and upon the accession of Hon. David Davis to the Supreme Bench of the United States, Bro. Scott was elected judge of the circuit court, and at the the regular election he was again chosen. He has the counties of Logan, De Witt, and McLean for his circuit, and holds court ten months in the year. Just, honorable, and the very type of a gentleman, not a breath of slander has ever been uttered against him. Such was the choice made by our brethren for orator. His oration was splendidly delivered, fascinating in style and matter, and was wisdom, strength, and beauty combined. No language can fairly describe it; argumentative and beautiful; logical and classical it certainly was. We shall publish it if we can get it.

Another song, and the audience adjourned to the Spitley House, where Bro. Sponsler had an entertainment of a different kind.

Judge Scott presided at one table, with the new Masters and their ladies on his right and left, while we presided at the other, flanked by the Chaplain and Marshal with their wives, and full two hundred were ready for the good cheer.

After an invocation to the Deity, all fell to with a right good will. Oysters in every shape, varieties of meats, salads, and eatables, substantial and fanciful, with elegant cakes and castles, ornamented with squares, compasses, books, levels, plumbs, swords, and any quantity of Masonic emblems and devices, graced both tables in elegant profusion. Sponsler was at home, happy and glorious. We bespeak for him the good will and patronage of all our friends who visit the beautiful, thriving and enterprising town of Lincoln.

Slow Express.

Since the consolidation of the "Merchants' Union" and American Express Companies there has been a general and large raise of the transportation rates, and, what is worse, is the inexcusable and growing carelessness of the agents. I here give two specimens of their carelessness out of over one hundred cases that have happened to me in the last sixteen months.

On November 26th a brother in Santa Fe, New Mexico, sent me some money by Express, and the same day sent me a letter by mail notifying me of the remittance sent. The letter was received December 7th.

On November 27th a brother in Anderson, Texas, sent me some money by Express, and a letter of explanation by mail. The letter was received December 7th.

Neither one of these remittances have yet been received, January 1st, 1870. Surely Express ought to be as fast as the mail.

Publisher.

Public Works, Chicago.

We are under obligations to R. W. Bro. Cregier, D. G. M., for the eighth annual report in relation to public works. It covers 207 pages, and developes the real growth and enlargement of the wonderful city of Chicago. Valuable plates are inserted at various places, showing fairly what the work is, and its power over natural obstacles.

The amount expended for public works during the past year is $3,026,156.70.

The amount received on account of water alone is $647,240.78.

A Nice Present.

The Trowel office is under great obligations to Sir James W. Sponsler, 32°, proprietor of the Spitley House, Lincoln, for a beautiful and large cake, covered with Masonic emblems: our boys vote him A, 1; the proprietor votes him landlord A, 1; but the editor votes the Stipley House and all connected with it A, 1.

If anybody wants to stay at a first-class hotel call on Bro. James W. Sponsler, late of Springfield, at the Spitley House, Lincoln.

Ponderous.

The Evergreen says The Trowel is ponderous. Webster gives the following definition of the word: important; momentous; forcible; strongly impulsive; very heavy; weighty. One thing is certain; no one will ever charge the Evergreen with that quality. If it escapes the terms trivial, frivolous, boyish, and powerless, it will do well.

Jacob Norton.

This Masonic mountebank, after destroying what little character the Chief had given to the Masonic Monthly, now mounts the stump in the Evergreen. After deriding Scottish Masonry in the St. Louis Freemason, denouncing Capitular and Templar Masonry in the Monthly and other journals. he now seeks audience in a well-known Scottish and Templar periodical, to vent his spleen upon R. W. Bro. C. W. Moore, to cast his slime upon the venerated Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, and to denounce all Masons adhering to Christian forms of worship as "canting zealots and hypocrites" who regard neither pledges or obligations. And the mean. sniveling coward sneaks out under the cry of persecution. This may suit the editor of the Evergreen and his readers, but we don't believe it does, and when Bro. Guilbert shall have reviewed the writings of this bag of inconsistencies in various papers, it strikes us that he can have little sympathy with one who claims everything for his sect and ignores all rights, all opinions, and all honesty in everybody else.

Notice.—If any subscriber to The Trowel fails to receive any number of his paper which he has paid for, he is earnestly requested to notify me of the fact, and duplicate copies of the missing number or numbers will be sent him. Great care is taken to have The Trowel properly directed and securely wrapped when it is mailed to the subscribers, and I believe the post officials generally are careful in mailing the papers. But some mistakes will happen at times when crowded with work, which are not always detected in the office. I am anxious that every subscriber to The Trowel should have every copy that he pays for.

H. G. REYNOLDS, Jr.,
Publisher of The Masonic Trowel.

Iowa.

Thanks to Sir Knight Guilbert, of Iowa, for a copy of his report on correspondence in the Grand Commandery of that State. He is quite musical over the Grand Encampment U. S., gives Sir Grand Recorder Miles a wipe, and Munger, of Kentucky, a square lick, walks into titles, in his notice of Louisiana, and under that cover takes a general splurge.

Massachusetts is brought up with a round turn, and, oh! how he wallops Gouley! What he, Guilbert, hold a commission from Gouley! Not if he knows it; no, sir! And New York, New Jersey, etc.; what a slashing! Read.

Order of the Eastern Star.

New chapters of the Eastern Star have been organized and chartered as follows:

Ruth, at Pontiac, Bro. Jas. E. Morrow, W. M., W. Patron; Mrs. Louisa Lacey, Matron; Mrs. W. Amanda Wentz, Associate Matron.

Eastern Star, at Bloomington, W. Bro. Goodman Ferre P. M., W. Patron: Mrs. Dr. Lee Smith, W. Matron; Mrs. Sarah E. Boynton, Associate Matron.

Bethany, at State Line, A. M. Porter, W. Patron; Mrs. Abigail D. Hurd, W. Matron; Miss Julietta D. Porter, Associate Matron.

Officers of Masonic Bodies.

We publish this month a very large list of officers of lodges in this State. We have returns from a few chapters, and will publish the three first officers of all such Masonic bodies as may be returned to us.

And we very earnestly solicit a list of officers of lodges, chapters, councils, commanderies and Scotch Rite bodies, wherever our paper circulates. Send promptly.

Serious Disaster.

The hall of Manteno Lodge No. 607, at Manteno, Kankakee county, together with the charter, books, all papers on file, and the jewels and furniture were entirely destroyed by fire on the 25th day of October last. This is a serious calamity. We are not advised as to the intention of the brethren in the future.

Prove and Take.

We have in our possession the jewel mentioned by John E. Welch, page 188., Dec. Trowel, on which is the name of W. West, Springfield, Ill.

Dedication and Installation.

The early settlement of our oldest towns and cities reveal some curious and noteworthy circumstances well worthy of mention and preservation. Charles G. Cotting was born in Ashburnham, Mass., June 30, 1804, emigrated with his parents to Chester, Vt., in 1820, where he became an expert mill-wright under the tutelage of the celebrated Thwing of Barre. In Nov. 1825, the lodge at Newbury conferred upon him the symbolic degrees, and not long after he was exalted in Lebanon Chapter, at Bradford, Vermont.

He married a noble wife in Richmond, Vt., and after accumulating some means by his industry and skill in the State of New York, determined to emigrate to the West. Illinois was then far-famed, although but sparsely settled. The valley of Fox River is beautiful beyond description, and noted for its varied landscapes and scenery, its enchanting groves, bluffs and valleys, and its limped, swift, and clear streams of pure water. Along the entire length of the river, it is the abode of a dense population, the seat of thriving towns, and the habitation of enterprise, thrift, wealth, learning, refinement, religion and Masonic lodges.

In the northeastern part of McHenry county, and within a mile of the Wisconsin line, runs a rapid beautiful stream, called the Nippersink, a tributary to Fox River. About three miles from its mouth is the charming town of Richmond, where Bro. Cotting located with one or two others in 1837. A mill came into being, a town followed, and now at sixty-five, surrounded by his children, blessed with the companionship of a model wife, known as mother, for her kindness to the poor and her assiduity and attention to the sick, our brother lives the patriarch, with an abundant competence, fine health, and an honored name.

Following St. Marks and Marengo, Bro. Cotting with others, procured a dispensation for a new lodge, which was chartered in Oct. 1854. He was Master until Dec. 1856, when he was succeeded by his son-in-law, Dr. Robert F. Bennett. The Grand Lodge was honored with his presence in 1854, 5 and 6. The practice of Dr. Bennett is so extensive, that he finds little time to attend upon lodge meetings, and none for Grand Lodge. During his Mastership, another brother came upon the stage, and represented the lodge as Senior Warden. We allude to R. W. Bro. Alonzo Ransom, now D. D. G. M. Death had bereft him of a companion, his means were small, and health very infirm. Combatting all these he mastered the degrees, and ascended to the Oriental Chair in Dec. 1857. Progressing cautiously, he has gathered a comfortable property, and is again mated with a lovely and intelligent wife. For thirteen successive years he has been annually elected Master, and has represented his lodge thirteen times. A few weeks since, we were invited to dedicate their hall and install the officers elect, and the 29th of December was set apart for that service.

On the 28th we took the Fox River Valley train at Elgin, of which Bro. Newcomb is the polite and efficient conductor. Here we found Bro. Vining, Route Postmaster, who was formerly W. Master at Dundee. A surprise was in store for us when we arrived at Richmond. Breth. Bennett and Ransom, by command of Bro. Cotting took us captive, and under a stiff guard of full twenty-five brethren we were taken to the lodge, where our entrance was greeted with music and song. Our welcome was hearty, strong, and good. We were pleased but whipped for once. But a good night's rest at our home with the patriarch, restored all our equanimity and courage. The following morning our old friend, Bro. John Fenner, a member of No. 4, in this city, who is spending a serene old age with his nephew in the neighborhood, came in to greet us, and we had a long, familiar chat with the veteran, and literally lived Springfield over again.

In the afternoon, the brethren with their families assembled at the lodge-room, when Bro. Ransom presided as Master, and we were assisted by grand officers as follows: C. G. Cotting, Deputy; Geo. P. Wodell, G. S. Warden; James Robbins, J. G. Warden, and a full complement of other officers.

The music was excellent, and the hall was dedicated in due form.

The installation took place in the evening. A brother acted as Marshal in the afternoon and evening whose name has escaped us, but he did his duty with uncommon ability.

In the evening brother the Hon. Wm. A. McConnell, a member of the State Board of Equalization, acted as Chaplain. By an industrious and honorable course of life he has amassed a large estate, and in every respect has the entire confidence of all.

As he, a layman, officiated as Chaplain with so much humility, fervor, and pathos, before a church crowded with ladies and citizens, we could not help asking ourselves, if a malicious attack made upon such a man, would not be resented by every man in McHenry county. And his remarks were to the very point. The music at the lodge-room and church was by full and cultivated choirs, and was excellent. We installed the officers as follows: Alonzo Ransom, W. M.; George P. Wodell, S. W.; William Parsons, J. W.; Wm. A. McConnell, Treas.; C. G. Cotting, Sec.; Stephen P. Potter, Chap.; Chas. H. Arkills, S. D.; John A. Rotnour, J. D.; Isaac Kilgore, and A. B. Clapsaddle, Stewards; Felix Hugg, Tyler.

Bro. McConnell took the degrees in 1856, and has been Treasurer of the Lodge ever since.

After various kinds of service as Warden or Deacon, Bro. Cotting was elected Secretary in 1862, and has served as such until the present time.

After the installation services were over, Bro. McConnell made a few sensible remarks, full of point and good council, and was followed by Bro. Wilcox, of McHenry, in an eloquent and able speech. The services were closed by singing and prayer, and were impressive and in good order. For the good care and comfort in Bro. Cotting's family—for the hospitality of Bro. Ransom and his lady—for the many tokens of kindness, good will, and respect which we received, we shall ever be grateful. The beautiful town of Richmond, its prosperous lodge, its enterprising people, and its old fashioned, warm hospitality will ever linger as a green spot in our memory

Several brethren were present from Woodstock, Chemung, Hebron, McHenry and Genoa, Wis.

Visit to Wenona.

On the 23d of December we visited Wenona Lodge No. 344, and installed its officers elect.

The retiring Master, W. Bro. W. R. Phillips, is a native of this city, and learned the trade of a harness maker here. He has served the lodge faithfully and successfully for several years. His successor, Bro. B. Fowler, Jr., has served before, and is supported by the old Senior Warden, Bro. Southworth; the Junior Warden's name we have forgotten, and the return is not yet at hand. Judge Cowan serves as Treasurer, and his son-in-law, Bro. Parrott, as Secretary. After the installation, Bro. Fowler addressed the brethren as follows:

> Officers and Brethren—In accepting and assuming the duties of W. M. of this lodge, I am not governed by my own better judgment; neither am I prompted by any vain thought of worthiness, but am simply obeying the expressed will of my brethren. Feeling my own inability to perform the duties of the office, I naturally turn to you who have had the experience of years, and ask of you the benefits of that experience, and your patience and forbearance. And may the Great Master above own and bless our humble efforts.

The ceremonies were in public, and in the lodge-room. Bro. Little, a member of Streator Lodge, officiated as Marshal, and Bro. Phillips, as Chaplain. About fifty ladies were in attendance.

The supper was prepared by the lodge, and by the members of the Eastern Star. It was excellent, munificent, and well served.

There are about sixty members of the Eastern Star Order, and it is expected that a regular chapter will soon be organized. At a late hour, R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson arrived, but too late to confer any degrees.

We were guests at the hospitable mansion of Bro. Thomas Cowen, formerly Judge of the County Court, and we were at home. The Judge is a noted mathematician, and his wife came to Putnam county, while a small child. They have an amiable family, and fortune has smiled kindly upon them.

The frank and kindly hospitality enjoyed will be a green spot in our memory while life lasts.

The lodge is large and prosperous, and we wish it the same success in the future which has attended them in the past.

Bloomington.

De Molay Commandery No. 24, Knight Templars, at Bloomington, Ill., was organized by dispensation granted by Sir Geo. Cromwell Lanphier, then Grand Commander, April, 1867 and by charter, October of the same year, and although but a little over two years old, wields some eighty swords in defense of the sublime principles of our Order, and is one of the most flourishing commanderies in the State. Under its banner ranges some of the oldest and most honored of the Craft, among whom I might name Sir Knights Goodman Ferre, Judge Stillwell, Baughen, Dodge, Parsons, and a host of others.

At a regular meeting held at their asylum, December 24th, the following Sir Knights were elected for the ensuing Masonic year:

J. D. Harbert, E. C.
B. R. Baughen, Generalissimo.
A. A. Lamb, Capt. Gen.
Rev. J. C. Rybolt, Prelate.
J. Brewster, S. W.
H. D. Harris, J. W.
J. C. Ellis, Treasurer,
J. M. Chapman, Recorder.
M. G. Harbard, Standard Bearer.
E. R. Maples, Sword Bearer.
H. B. Wright, Warder.
S. Rouch, Capt. of the Guards.

Under the command of Sir Knight Dr. Harbert, I predict that, within the year, De Molay Commandery, in drill and work, will be second to none in the State. Traveler.

For the Masonic Trowel.

The officers of Palatine Chapter 117, R. A. M., were installed on December 31, 1869, by Comp G. W. Barnard, of Chicago, N. P. Keyes, H. P.; S. P. Brown, King; R. S. Williamson, Scribe; M. S. Johnson, Capt. Host; J. H. Williams, P. S.; J. H. Pahlman, R. A.; Capt. F. J. Filbert, Sec'y.; A. Droskowsky, Treas.; H. Webster, H. Snow, and M. Blum, Masters of the Veils.

After the installation services the members partook of a splendid banquet, which was in readiness in the dining hall below, and a pleasant time and fraternal feeling in general was had. In the evening a splendid party was given in the new and splendid hall of Mr. Mosser, which was delighted with the music of Nevens & Dean's Band, of Chicago. The pleasant time had will long be remembered by all that partook in the festivities. F. J. F.

Missouri.

Thanks to Sir Grand Recorder Gouley for a copy of the proceedings of the Grand Commandery of Missouri, held at St. Louis, October 5. Missouri has fourteen commanderies and 507 Sir Knights. Seventy-seven were created. St. Louis Commandery has 119 members.

R. E. Sir Jas. F. Aglar, St. Louis, is Grand Commander; V. E. and Rev. Sir J. D. Vincil, Deputy; and Eminents Jas. Carr, G. G.; Samuel Russell, G. C. G.; Rev. W. M. Rush, G. P.; W. K. Spinney, G. S. W.; G. W. Tindall, G. J. W.; W. N. Loker, G. Treas; G. F. Gouley, St. Louis, G. Recorder; Wm. Bosbyshell, G. St. B.; J. E. R. Millar, G. Sw. B.; Wm. H. Stone, G. W.; John Geekie, G. Guard.

Saint Joseph, Mo., Jan. 8, 1870.

M. W. H. G. Reynolds: :

Dear Sir and Br∴—If space will permit, your St. Joseph patrons would be pleased to see in The Trowel the names of the principal officers of their lodge and chapter. The elections took place in December, and resulted as follows:

St Joseph Lodge, No. 78. A. F. and A. M.—Philip Arnholt, W. M.; John Pinger, S. W.; Joseph H. Anderson, J. W; Andrew B. Frazer, Sec.

Zeredatha Lodge No. 189, A. F. and A M.—Edward Dutton, W. M.; John L. Jourdan, S. W.; Thomas J. Burgess, J. W.; D. M. McDonald, Sec.

St. Joseph Royal Arch Chapter No. 14.—C. A. Rowley, H. P.; Edward Dutton, K.; Wm. L. Craig, S.; D P. Wallingford, Sec.

The competency of the new officers and their determination to preserve and protect the sacred character of Masonry, bespeaks for the Craft a prosperous year's work from the best materials the country affords. Such officers, sustained by zealous brethren, can accomplish much good. The lodges contain more than a hundred members each, and the chapter about half that number. Out of the large amount of good material offering there is sufficient to sustain another lodge and chapter, and leave for the old ones as much work as they can conveniently do. Perfect peace and harmony exist in the lodges. The Blanchard, Finny & Co. bugaboo has not reached us, or, if so it has not appeared in visible form. It travels towards the west slowly.

W. R. Penick.

Tidings.

Items.

We are gratified with the reception of the first number of the Masonic Mirror, published at San Francisco. It is a good magazine, and steps out modestly, but firmly into the ranks of Masonic publications.

Hon. Horace Capron, Commissioner of Agriculture, will please accept our thanks for a copy of his report.

We have received from Hon. James M. Lewis, Commissioner of Immigration and State Lands in Arkansas, a pamphlet stating the natural resources of that State. It is exceedingly interesting. Copies can be had by applying to the Commissioner at Little Rock.

Ninety-seven thousand German immigrants have landed at New York during the year.

There are two Jewish congregations at Portland, Oregon.

There are thirteen hundred parishes and hamlets in England and Wales in which no liquor is sold.

It was the opinion of Robert J. Walker that New York city must soon command the commerce of the world.

There are ten thousand local Methodist preachers in this country.

Pat. Doolan bowed low at a cannon ball, which whizzed just six inches above his head. "Faith," said Pat., "one never loses anything by being polite."

The postage on a single letter of a half ounce or under between the United States and Great Britain and Ireland, is six cents.

Few vices attend upon benevolence; few virtues upon selfishness.

"How Stubbs became Byles," and "An Old Story in new Clothes," are funny, very. Well worth reading, and both with a good moral. But they are decidedly funny.

The cars leave Bloomington at 4:00 p. m., and arrive at Pekin at 6:10 p. m. Leave Pekin at 9 a. m., and arrive at Bloomington at 12:15 p. m.

John Turner, Senior Grand Warden Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, is State's Attorney for Juneau county, President of the town of Mauston, School District Clerk, and publisher of the Mauston Star. The advertisements in his paper show that he has a lively business as attorney, and we know that he is a live man.

The Chicago, Danville and Vincennes Railroad is now completed from Chicago to Momence, in Kankakee county, and is rapidly proceeding southward. It will be a valuable and profitable road.

The hog may not be well posted in arithmetic, but when you come to the "square root," he is there.

We received a great many invitations to attend festivals, soirees, and celebrations December 27, for which we return thanks, and should have been really glad to have accepted all of them.

R. W. Bro. J. Emmett Blackshear, M. D., will please accept our thanks for an early copy of Report on Correspondence in Georgia.

The Daily Inland Empire contains a notice for a meeting of Freemasons at Hamilton, Nevada, to make arrangements for the formation of a new lodge. We have fifty subscribers at that post office.

The entire taxes for this year in Lee county, including the tax on the C. & N. W. Railroad, is $225,696.68. Of this $2,057 is upon dogs.

A second lodge is about to be started in Japan. A petition has been sent to London for a dispensation to meet at Yakohomo, under the name of "O Tentosama," a Japanese term referring to the sun.

The population of British Columbia has dwindled down from 20,000 to 8,000 in the last three years.

The population of Texas is said to be 750,000.

Gold is reported to have been found on the Delaware lands, about sixteen miles from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Sir Isaac Newton's house, in London, is for sale.

The area of Asia is 16,681,000 square miles, and the population is estimated at 698,725,000.

"If there is anybody under the canister of heaven that I have in utter excrescence," said Mrs. Partington, "it is the slanderer, going about like a boy constrictor, circulating his calomel upon honest folks.

The Daily Inland Empire is a spicy and enterprising affair, published at White Pine, Nevada. Sixteen dollars a year. The White Pine News, weekly, is another, published at Treasure City. $5.00. Thanks to Bro. Henley for copies.

Three Little Books.

Messrs. Dick & Fitzgerald, Publishers, 18 Ann street, New York, have sent us three books:—"How to amuse an evening party," has play-room games, board and slate games, table and toy games, comic diversions, parlor magic, and a great variety of tricks and amusing scenes: 30 cents in paper covers; 50 cents in boards.

"Howard's book of 1400 conumdrums, riddles, enigmas, amusing sells," etc. Same price.

"How to cook potatoes, apples, eggs and fish 400 different ways." Same price.

Families in the country, where there are children of various ages, will find the first book will give them abundant variety for their innocent plays, and we are sure that the "old children" will have many a hearty laugh at their frolics.

Soldier's Monument—Freeport.

We ought to have noticed the laying of the corner-stone of the soldier's monument at Freeport before this. It was laid by R. W. Bro. M. D. Chamberlin as Grand Master, assisted by a full complement of grand officers on the 18th of October. The day was fine, and the turn out was large. An oration was delivered by Gen. Dornblazer.

The Little Corporal.

This nice work for juveniles keeps up with the times, and is true to its name. Its circulation counts by the tens of thousands, and the children and youth watch wistfully for its coming.

Price one dollar per year.

The National Sunday School Teacher, published by Adams, Blackmer & Lyon, 155 Randolph street, Chicago, is a live, sound, vigorous and able publication. Aside from its value as a Sunday School publication, it is of great value to us in our Masonic researches and studies. $1.50 per year. We vote for less comments, and more exposition. It is indispensable to every Bible class and to every Sunday School teacher.

Good Health.

We are quite sure that we can render our readers no better service than to induce them to subscribe for this valuable journal. It is emphatically a "journal of physical and mental culture." Published by Alexander Moore, 21 Franklin street, Boston, at $2 yearly.

We are in receipt of the above annual for 1870. Published by A. Winch, 505 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. Sixty eight large pages, and full of valuable information. Price 20 cents.

Widow of F. M. Blair.

A proposition to donate $5 by every chapter in Indiana, to Mrs. Blair, failed to pass in the Grand Chapter of Indiana. In that, neither the living nor the dead will rejoice.

The Gavel

Is a new Masonic publication, in magazine form, published at Toronto, Canada. It seems to be in the interest of the Quebec party. Its originals are well written, and its spirit quite fraternal.

Tennessee.

The proceedings of the Grand Chapter greet us early. Everything is well done. Comp. John W. Hughes, Clifton, is G. High Priest; John Frizzell, Nashville, Grand Secretary; and George S. Blackie, Nashville, Assistant Grand Secretary.

The Beauties and Benefits of Masonry.

The following pleasing traits of the good effects of Masonry have been communicated to us, and which we have much pleasure iu recording in this journal:

About a twelvemonth ago as the train from Nagpore was on its way from Bombay, a gentleman at Tanna sought admission in one of the second class carriages which was pretty full, but those within would not allow it but insisted in rather uncourteous language on his getting into another carriage; but he persisted and walked in with his carpet bag, which the others could not prevent, as there was room for one more. The parties looked daggers at each other for some time, when the last comer seeing a copy of the Masonic Record near one of the principal growlers, askod his permission to peruse it, and opening the book, drew his attention to his name which appeared in the proceedings of one of the Bombay lodges; the owner of the book turned over another leaf, and pointed to his name in the proceedings of a lodge in the Central Provinces. A low but animated conversation then took place between these two, and by the time the train reached Bombay they were fast friends, much to the surprise of the other gentlemen, who were non-Masons. The brother from Nagpore found in his brother of Bombay a willing and obliging cicerone, who introduced him to several lodges in Bombay, and both attribute their good fortune in forming one another's acquaintance to the accidental meeting of a copy of the Record. This is one of the fruits of publishing proceedings of lodges, &c.

Another case is that of two Masons who, contrary however to the principles of the Order, but from some worldly circumstances, bore an inveterate hatred to each other. It happened that both were traveling in the same train, but in different carriages. Whilst the train stopped at a station, one of the two, in opening a bottle of soda-water, the bottle burst and cut an artery near the wrist, which bled most profusely; the other, on hearing of the accident, came at once to the injured man, and forgetting all past differences for the moment, exerted himself to staunch the bleeding, and rendered every assistance in his power, and remained near him till the train reached Bombay. May we earnestly hope that the bitter feelings of resentment which existed for years between those two brothers will be buried in oblivion after this providential incident; for we deem it providential, because if it had not been for the accident of both traveling together, and the one having a knowledge of surgery, the other may have bled to death before reaching Bombay.

The third case is that of a brother who, after having faithfully served the government for fifteen years, was sacrifieed and deprived of his situation, to save his superior, who was the real party in fault. This brother brought his hard case to the notice of an influential brother, who at once interested himself, and the injured brother was very soon provided for.—Record of W. I.

The Western Monthly.

Published at 18 Tribune Building, Chicago, at $3.00 per annum, has a beautifal engraving of Hon. Sidney Breese, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois, which is followed by a lengthy ahd elegant biographical notice. We select the following extracts:

"On the twenty-fourth day of December, 1818, he reached Kaskaskia, and commenced reading law in the office of Mr. Kane, and the same time attending to all the current business of the office of Secretary of State. The total population of the State at that time did not exceed forty thousand; and such was his position in the office, and such the frequent necessary intercourse of the counties with the seat of government, that the young clerk personally knew every prominent man in the State. He was a close student and had an able perceptor, and even before he had attained his majority was admitted to practice. He chose Brownsville, the county seat of Jackson county, where he opened an office, and the first term of the court brought thirty suits. As has been the case with other eminent men, his first appearance in court and before a jury was such a decided failure that in his chagrin he resolved to abandon the profession, and was only prevented by the earnest appeals of Conrad Will, then the most prominent man in the county, who was a most devoted friend. In 1819 the Legislature provided for the removal of the seat of government to Vandalia, and by request of the Secretary of State, Mr. Breese removed the office to that place in November, 1820. That memorable expedition across the plains was described in a letter read by Judge Caton at the laying of the corner-stone of the new State House. In 1821 he returned to Kaskaskia, and resumed his profession. Sitting in his office one day, reading, he was surprised at the entrance of a stranger, who asked him if he would like to be postmaster of the town. An explanation showed this stranger to be an agent of the Post Office Department, who thought a change necessary. The result was that a month later he became postmaster. Postage on single letters at that time was twenty-five cents, and the commissions were a valuable addition toward the expenses of living. In 1822 he was appointed by Governor Bond circuit attorney, when he resigned as postmaster. At the election of that year, Edward Coles was elected Governor, over Chief Justice Phillips. Mr. Breese, during the canvass, had supported Phillips, and expected to be removed; but Governor Coles re-appointed him, and he held the office until four years later, when he was removed by Governor Edwards. In the same year of his removal, President Adams appointed him United States Attorney for the State of Illinois. The office at that time was not a valuable one, the total emoluments not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars. His successor was Samuel McRoberts, who died a Senator of the United States in 1843.

"In 1831 he proposed to the Judges of the Supreme Court to report all their decisions. The result was "Breese's Reports," printed at Kaskaskia in 1831, and which was the first book printed in Illinois. The reporter himself "set up," it is said, more than one page of the volume. In 1832 he volunteered as a private in the Black Hawk war, and when the battalion met at Beardstown he was elected major. Judge Smith, of the Supreme Court, was elected lieutenant colonel. The force marched to the Illinois river, near Peru, and entered Camp Wilborn. Judge Smith having resigned, Major Breese was elected lieutenant colonel of the regiment, which was attached to the third brigade, under the command of General J. D. Henry. In this camp, Albert Sidney Johnson, who was killed at Shiloh, General Robert Anderson, who was killed at Sumter, and Zachary Taylor, afterwards President of the United States, held positions in which they were ranked by the volunteer colonel.

"After the war, and in the following year, he was leading counsel for Judge Smith, of the Supreme Court, who had been impeached by the House of Representatives for misdemeanors in office. Though among his associates for the defence were Governor Ford, Judge R. M. Young, and J. W. Whitney, Esq., the pleas to the articles of impeachment, which were models of pleading, were prepared exclusively by Mr. Breese. The defence was successful. In 1835, on the establishment of circuit courts, Mr. Breese was elected Judge of the Second Circuit, then comprising Madison, St. Clair, Monroe, Randolph, Washington, Clinton, Bond, Fayette, Montgomery and Shelby counties."

"The Judge has found time to collect and reduce to writing the most interesting items of the early and current history of the Northwest, and particularly of Illinois, and of the men and times of his day; and this history we understand will shortly be put in press.

"To sum up, it may be said that Judge Breese unites the scholar with the statesman; the polished gentleman and the warm-hearted cordial companion with the gravity and profundity of an able and experienced jurist. The history of Illinois, both of its material prosperity and of its judiciary, is a monument to his labors and his purity, which will endure after the more noisy fame of politicians shall have been forgotten.

"To the people of Chicago, Judge Breese has been in an especial manner commended by the ability and the firmness with which as a Judge he has on repeated occasions interposed the judicial arm to protect them from spoliation. Inflexible in his justice, corruption and combination have failed to overawe the court of which he is so bright an ornament."

The Chief Justice is Past Master of Seott Lodge No. 79, at Carlyle.

Be Silent.

It is too often the case that discussions are permitted in lodges in relation to the ballot, and hard words uttered by the friends of rejected applicants. As a caution in all such cases, we must be permitted to give the following circumstance, related to Bro. Pierson by the late Philip C. Tucker, at the time G. M. of Vermont:

"An application had been made by a well known and very popular young man. On the evening that the petition was to be acted upon, there was an unusually large attendance. The ballot was spread, and to the surprise of all his friends a negative appeared; a second ballot was had, with a like result; but before the W. M. could declare it, several of the brethren had simultaneously risen, each declaring that there was either a mistake, or personal pique had operated, and demanded another ballot; at the word 'dark in the South,' brethren sprung to their feet declaring that it must be a personal pique; that the young man was well known, and his character above reproach; so brother after brother was allowed to make remarks, until the circle from which the negative must have come, was narrowed to but three or four; another ballot was demanded and conceded by the W. M.; the ballot was had, each of the friends of the applicant watching closely those who had not spoken; as the word dark was pronounced a scene of confusion ensued very seldom witnessed in a Masonic lodge. Reasons were demanded, and even the W. M., giving way to the storm requested the brother who had been signalled as casting the negative, to give his reasons for so doing. The storm was hushed as an old brother, a physician, arose, and protesting against such a violation of the rights of a Mason, avowed that he did it; he had hoped and desired to exercise his rights unknown and unquestioned. As he resumed his seat, other than complimentary remarks were indulged in by the brethren. Finally, the W. M. interposed, requesting of the brother, for the satisfaction of the lodge, to assign his reasons. Amidst profound silence, the old brother again rose, and after rebuking the brethren for their unmasonic course, said: "I had hoped to keep my reasons a perpetual secret, but you, brethren, and you, W. M., will ever remember that you have, as it were, forced me to speak. I know this young man to be a libertine. I know that he has seduced the daughter of a member of this lodge; the father does not know it—he is your W. M.—Georgia Correspondence.

St. John's Day.

Masonic lodges in ancient times were dedicated to King Solomon. Tradition inform us that they were thus dedicated from the building of the first temple at Jerusalem to the Babylonish captivity. From that time to the coming of the Messiah, they were dedicated to Zerubbabel, the building of the second temple; and from that to the final destruction of the temple by Titus in the reign of the Emperor Vespasian, they were dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

Owing to the many massacres and disorders which attended that memorable event, Freemasonry fell very much into decay. Many of the lodges were broken up, and but few could meet with sufficient members to constitute their legality. Under these circumstances, a general meeting of the Craft was held in the city of Benjamin, when it was observed that the principal reason for the dicline of Masonry was the want of a Grand Master to direct its affairs. They therefore deputed seven of the most eminent of their members to wait upon St. John the Evangelist, who was at that time Bishop of Ephesus, to request him to take the office of Grand Master. He returned for answer that, though well stricken in years (being upwards of ninety), yet having been in the early part of his life initiated into Masonry, he would take upon himself that office. He did so, and completed by his learning what St. John the Baptist had accomplished by his zeal. After his decease, the Christian lodges were dedicated to him and St. John the Baptist, both of them beingnry garded as eminent Christian patrons of Masoh of Since then Masons have ever celebrated the 24th of June in commemoration of St John the Baptist, and the 27th of December in commemoration of St. John the Evangelist.

Of Masonic Temples.—We perdict sooner or later that every State of this Union will have a Masonic Temple within its borders. There is something of a sublime character in the idea of worshiping in a temple dedicated to the ever-living God, and consecrated to this devotion. It is a sacred place where poor mortals who are living in open rebellion to His laws, can assemble and realize His unbounded love for them. Masons, by thus assembling in these magnificent edifices, acknowledge more than they admit by daily conversation. Man, however, will show in his life, how far he is governed by a moral principle—a power that can influence him only by his consent. This admission of or acquiescence in the requirements of the moral law, by an individual, brings his life into a state which is in harmony with the commands of his Creator. He is in the love of obedience, and loves his neighbor as himself. When a man is in this upright condition, he has surrendered all that is envious, selfish, and vile in his nature to the benign law of reciprocity. In the building of these temples for worship, Masons present to the outer world a type of that which lurks within their mind—the idea of a moral Masonic temple, an edifice not made with hands, an inner place for devotional exercises; and they are taught to believe, "since everything around us is the work of God, and is designed to keep Him constantly in our recollection everything should put us in mind of Him."—Oregon Correspondence.

AN INDEX TO ALL THE LAWS OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, both Public and Private, which are not printed at large in Gross' Statutes of 1869. Compiled by the Publisher. One vol Sheep, $3.00.

Although so recently published, we are prepared to speak of it understandingly, for we have watched its passage through the press with more than the usual degree of interest. When it is remembered that the laws of this State are scattered through no less than fifty-five different volumes, but imperfectly indexed and wanting in every element of system or arrangement, it will readily appear to the most casual observer that an examination of our laws in the original statute books has always been most emphatically a work of time.

It may be safely said that there is not in the State a practical attorney who can not recall the time when he would gladly have paid many times the cost of this work, if thereby, the days and sometimes weeks of fruitless search for some particular act, could have been avoided. But with this index at hand, the student and practitioner can, if he will, take up any subject which has ever engaged the attention of our legislature, and trace with the greatest ease and certainty the gradual growth and development of the various statutory provisions which have been at any time, or may now be in force. This is not only true of the general acts, but also those of a private and special character. There is no estimating the convenience of a work of this character to those persons, by no means confined to lawyers, who are interested in the powers conferred on the thousands of private corporations located in different portions of our State. Business men have, heretofore, been debarred from making such examinations for themselves and have had to rely upon their attorneys. Especially valuable are the arrangement and classification of the Railroad charters Insurance charters, and Corporations generally. In short, there is no act, or class of acts, ever passed by the State Legislature and printed which cannot, by means of this Index, be found as readily as a word in the dictionary.

For convenience the work is divided into two parts:

Part I is a classified synopsis of all the Public Statutes which have been enacted in the State of Illinois, since its admission in the Union, in 1818. This synopsis is made to perform the office of an index, by being arranged in chapters, numbered and entitled to correspond with those in "Gross' Statutes," and will show: 1. A concise statement of the general subject, or subjects, embraced in each act. 2. The date of the approval of the act, and 3. The book or books and the page where it may be found printed at large. This part of the work is brought down to the close of the session of 1869.

Part II is a classified synopsis of all the Private and Local Statutes which have been enacted and printed in the State of Illinois, since its admission into the Union, in 1818. The classification is by counties, with sub-titles, and the whole is then alphabetically arranged. The only private acts, not comprised in this Index, are the private acts of 1869, not yet in print.

Of "Gross' Statutes" we have heretofore spoken in terms of commendation, but we take especial pleasure in calling the attention of the public to these companion volumes, for within them is comprised the whole range of State legislation. What is not printed at large in the one is fully and accurately indexed in the other.

We are very sure that we fairly express the opinion of every member of the bar who has examined these two works when we say that for simplicity of design, laborious painstaking research and clearness of execution they stand as monuments and clearly mark an epoch in the legal literature of this State. The gentlemen Gross have rendered the profession and the people of the State an invaluable service for which we trust they may be amply rewarded.

Laflin, Butler & Co.

This, as hundreds of our printer friends know, is one of the oldest (if not the oldest) paper houses in the West. Established twenty-six years ago, when the whole paper business west of Buffalo was not as large as the local trade of Chicago now is; they have, by fair and honest dealing, established a reputation and business inferior to none. While publishing the Upper Mississippian, at Rock Island, Ill., twenty-five years ago, the editor is confident that he purchased paper of them, which was transported by coach, two bundles to each trip, a distance of nearly two hundred miles through sparsely settled prairies in northern Illinois. We have received from them a circular, which we publish below, and which explains itself. It revives memories of times gone by, and warms up in our hearts a friendship begun a quarter of a century ago. We congratulate Messrs. Laflin, Butler & Co., on the evidences of their prosperity, and cordially recommend them to the printing fraternity:

Nos. 114 & 116 Wabash Ave. Chicago.

Gents: We would beg leave to inform you that we have removed to our new and commodious quarters, Nos. 114 and 116 Wabash Ave., east side Wabash avenue, corner Madison St., where we would be happy to see all our customers and friends. We have, with our increased facilities for room, an increased quantity of help, and will be better able to fill orders promptly than heretofore.

Soliciting a continuance of your patronage, and promising increased exertions to please in future, we remain,

Yours truly,
Laflin, Butler & Co.,

The Pope and the Virgin.

The Pope, considering himself under the special patronage of the Blessed Virgin, glories in the fact that the "Immaculate Conception" will ever be associated with his reign. There is a marble tablet erected on your right hand as you enter St. Peter's, near the chair of St. Peter, in the sacrarium proper, bearing the names of the prelates who co-operated in the promulgation of the Immaculate Conception. Once the Pontiff pointed to this when speaking to Francis II., ex-King of Naples, and said, "Present generations point to this (meaning St. Peter's) as the monument of Leo Magnus, but future ones will point to that stone as mine." He has a reliquary with an excellent painting of the Madonna of the Rosary on the reverse side, which he believes has special virtues. He presents it for the reverential kiss of intimate friends, and lays it on their foreheads, in much the same way that a peasant lays his forehead on the bronze toes of the statue of St. Peter. He calls the Virgin "madre mia," and, in the public services of the Sistine Chapel, the most gorgeous selection of music is made for the Salve Regina for which he has special devotion. It is recorded that once, when the minister went to him with a most momentous financial question, he replied, "Let us say a Salve Regina." When on his rare walks, the suite is obliged to group round and uncover to say a Salve Regina before every image of the Madonna they pass.

Character of Pius IX.

To sum up this paper: He is, in some respects, the foremost man of his times, not by personal greatness, but by official position. His character is spotless and amiable, generous and kindly, sympathizing with suffering, lenient to error, bountiful to need. A prince whose rule has been disastrous to his subjects, but who, nevertheless, has retained their love as "the good old man." Vain, yet not wounding others by his vanity. A liberal patron of art and science, and—according to his idea of it—of education. A limited theologian, yet propounding such knotty enigmas to students as perhaps ten generations will not solve. Causing the Papacy to excite universal wonder and attention even in the decline and almost fall of its national prestige. Littleness and greatness, vanity and humility, generosity and self-love, large heartedness and obstinacy; these and many more contradictions make up the Pope's character. When he dies, he will be pardoned by the people who have most suffered from the errors of his reign, for the sake of the good he promised to do, and might once have done.

Sincerity Centennary.—On the 25th of November, the Lodge of Sincerity at Plymouth, celebrated the hundredth anniversary of its existence. An able speech was made by Bro. R. R. Rodd, P. M., the closing of which will strike responsive chords in the breasts of many veteran Masons in this country. The closing is as follows:—

"For myself, Masonry has brought me much pleasure and much advantage; it has softened asperities which otherwise would have been active; it has awakened sympathies which otherwise would have been dormant; it has taught me duties which otherwise might never have been acknowledged; it has given me influence, which, I trust, I have exercised for good, and which otherwise I should never have possessed. My regret is that I have done so little, and so much of that little wrong. My hope and prayer are that in the brief space of life still permitted to me, I may do more, and do it better."

Deserved all he Got.

Bro. Mayor was made the recipient, at the installation in La Harpe Lodge No. 195, of a very neat and timely present, in the shape of a No. 1 Elgin watch, put up in a heavy coin silver case. The whole including heavy silver chain costing about $75.00, donated by the many friends in the lodge who wished to demonstrate in a substantial manner their appreciation of his efforts to render himself capable of governing his lodge, and teaching to acceptance the science of the mystic Brotherhood. It was presented through our Secretary with a few appropriate remarks, taking Bro. Mayor entirely by surprise as the arrangements had been so perfectly made that he had not had a hint of it until the presentation.

Fraternally and respectfully,
L. S. Cogswell.

Recognition.—We are gratified to learn that the Grand Chapter of Maryland has recognized the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, and thus established peace between the two bodies. The M. E. Comp. B. B. French, of Washington, has been elected Grand High Priest of the latter.

The Siege of Damascus.

BY MARIA J. BISHOP.

Damascus had surrendered, and the frightened Christians, long deprived of help, had reluctantly lowered the Cross, as the Crescent flashed along the walls. The richer merchants and citizens had left the place, under a safe conduct from Saladin, and those who remained—chiefly the poorer class and women—sought in vain to escape through the strongly-barred and guarded portal.

It was the evening of the conquest, when an emir, whose jeweled turban, and the rich baldric which bound his breast, proclaimed as a leader in the Saracen host, entered the pavilion of the Moslem monarch. His dark, flashing eye and the perfect symmetry of his form and features were not unlike those of the former, while the restless glance and proud curl of the lip told of ambition more eager, if not more boundless, than his brother's.

"How, Melek?" said the soldan, without lifting his eyes from the dispatches before him. "Do the Christians rally, or has the success which the prophet hath granted, subdued, at length, their proud spirit?"

"They sue for mercy, my lord," replied the emir; "and, sooth to say, it pities me to see the poor and weak trembling to remain, yet unable to pay the tribute gold. I would give Damietta as their ransom!"

"Go, Melek; let them take oath they have not the required gold; give them a drachma, and dismiss them at the gate."

All night the wretched fugitives poured through the city gate; old men tottering on the arm of some son or daughter, women, whose pale cheeks and unbound tresses told their distress, children, hand in hand, bowed their lips to the cross, and passed the heathen guard, receiving a piece of silver at the gate, until, at length, the tall spires of the minarets began to glitter with the coming dawn.

"Back! back!" cried the guard, as the fugitives still pressed on; "the ransom is ended!"

A wild shriek rose in concert from the throng, as, wild with terror, they saw themselves hemmed in by the scimitars of the troops.

As the sun rose clear, banners were seen advancing, and, heading his splendid guard, Saladin advanced, borne on his jet-black steed. His kingly eye swept for a moment the crouching throng of fugitives, then, turning to Melek, he said:

"Brother, you have performed your alms; now let me bestow mine." And, waving his hand, he ordered the gate to be flung wide, bidding the crowd pass through.

Placing a guard in the mosques and palaces, Saladin, in a few days, left the city, knowing his passage to the city would be contested. Meanwhile the Christians were not idle. A large body of Templars had moved across the desert, under their indomitable leader, Reginald de St. Aldemar, and, leaving a few of their number to defend Jerusalem, had rapidly crossed the plains of the Jordan. While Saladin had drawn towards the mountains, the bravest of his emirs, Mustapha Achmet, with ten thousand Kurds and Saracens, hastened to intercept their path.

The plains around the city were crowded with Christian fugitives, when, like a black cloud, the Moslems swooped upon them. Rapidly the Saracens swept down from the surrounding hills, until the plain was white with flashing turbans, their dark, swarthy brows and jeweled vestments moving strangely among the motley crowd of Jews and Christians. Suddenly on the heights which skirted the Lebanon Range, the tall forms and mail-clad horses of the Templars appeared like a serried phalanx.

The terrified women and children saw their danger, and clung to one another in despair. The Templars saw it, too, and instantly staying charge, pressed back their horses until they reared.

It was a goodly sight, as they ranged rank on rank, the noblest soldiery in Christendom, their long lances held in rest, and their noble countenances seen through the raised visor. The glittering cross of the order flashed in the beams of morning, as it towered over the crested helms below.

For a moment all seemed uncertain. The crowd of helpless beings, at the mercy of the foe, blanched the brows of those who would have faced a thousand infidels.

A moment only intervened, and Mustapha, whose cruelty equalled his renown, ordered the helpless band to be massacred. As the death-shriek arose, the trumpets of the knights sounded. A shout arose that shook the rocks around:

"For the Temple! for the Temple! Ha, Beauseant!" And, in thundering charge, they swept down upon the heathen host.

Back and forward surged the tide of battle—swords met and mail rang on mail. The countless throngs of Saracens, borne back by the irresistible charge of the knights, again and again rallied, and hung like dark masses of clouds on the horizon.

Apart from the main tide of battle, one knight had long contended with unequal odds. Many a swarthy foe fell before his arm. As he turned to rejoin the ranks, a cry of pain met his ear; and, pausing near the spot, the tones of a female voice were distinctly audible. Advancing in the direction whence it proceeded, he beheld a being of singular loveliness kneeling in the tangled shade of the forest. Her face, of exquisite beauty, was clouded by pain and fear, and the heavy masses of her hair, which vailed her slight figure, were wet with blood.

Eustace de Vincent gazed for a moment on the sufferer, and then, to a few entreating words spoken in Norman French, promised the promised the protection sought. Binding up, with the skill taught by the rules of his order, the arm of the maiden, he consigned her to the guard of his squires, with orders to convey her from the field, and, remounting, galloped back to the host.

The day pressed hard upon the Templars, outnumbered six to one. They fought long and well, but, as their war-cry grew fainter, the horde of Saracens yelled louder and louder. In vain they charged with sweeping blows, the scattered front of the foe. In vain they thronged to fill the places of the fallen. Fresh enemies assailed them, and the field, heaped with the slain, seemed yet alive with countless foes.

At length, facing the foe, with the guarded banner in the midst, slowly they began the retreat. Avoiding their charge, like that of a roused lion, the Saracens kept at bay, their unerring arrows, from a distance, making some steeds run masterless o'er the plain. One by one the champions fell, and their war-cry, "For the Temple:" quivered from white lips, as they were trampled under the horses' feet.

At length Aldemar, with a band of twenty lances of the hundreds he had that morning led, arrived at the margin of a stream that wound its thread of silver through the sands. The "Ullahs" of the infidels rang faintly, as they plunged into the wave, and, for a moment halting, looked again towards Damascus.

Among the survivors was De Vincent, who held the rank of Preceptor, and was accounted one of the bravest knights in Christendom. Turning to the leader, from whose side the blood flowed rapidly, he said:

"Yonder city, most noble master, claims my vow. Christians are dying there—one I have pledged to save. With six lances, or alone, I must return to redeem my word."

"Go, my brother, if mercy calls thee," said the dying leader, as, falling from his horse, his eye rested for a moment on the banner-cross, then glazed in the fixed stare of death.

Trailing their lances in the dust, six knights followed De Vincent, leaving the remainder to guard the body of the fallen chief.

Winding through circuitous paths, a few hours brought them under the walls of Damascus, and, at an angle of the wall where a sally-port had been left unguarded, De Vincent stationed his forlorn hope. Midnight had scarcely arrived, when the postern was opened, and a young man, whose black hair and beard spoke Oriental lineage, stood before the knights.

"Silence, and the city is yours!" he said. "Follow me!"

Swiftly leading the way up a winding stair, which opened on a sort of court-yard, they found themselves in the presence of the guard, who, secure in fancied safety, were sleeping heavily. A thrust, quickly given, prevented all outcry, and, from the door of a small tower emerging upon the rampart, the knights, closely following each other, sounded their terrible war-cry, and charged the astonished Saracens. A fierce conflict ensued, as the panic-struck foe fled before their dauntless assailants.

"Fly, Andreas, and raise the standard of the Cross on the wall!" said the girl, as she stood listening to the clash of arms, which reached the most distant quarter of the city.

"Nay, brother, do you falter?" she added, as the youth who had opened the postern hesitated; "then will I."

She sprang to the rampart, and, with her arm bound by a scarf, seized a battle-ax, and dealt blow after blow on the heathen banner-staff. Andreas hastened to the aid of his heroic sister, and, striking down a Turk stealthily advancing towards her, soon, by their united efforts the Cross once more arose above the walls.

Cries of triumph soon echoed below, as De Vincent, opening the gates, welcomed back the Christians, who thronged to the aid of the Templars; and as the knight, now commander of Damascus, trod the rampart, he recognized, in the form fallen before the standard, his protege of the battle-field, whose white garments had rendered her too conspicuous a mark for the heathen shaft; and as the soldiers raised the light form upon their breekles, a moan burst from the lips of all, as they gazed on the still, marble face. The Greek girl was dead.—Flag of our Union.

Sweet Oil for Poisons.—A plain farmer says: It is now over twenty years since I learned that sweet oil would cure the bite of a rattlesnake, not knowing it would cure any other kind of poison, both on man or beast. I think no farmer should be without a bottle of it in the house. The patient must take a spoonful of it internally, and bathe the wound for a cure. To cure a horse, it requires eight times as much as it does for a man. Here let me say, of one of the most extreme cases of snake bite in this neighborhood—eleven years ago this summer—where the case had been thirty days' standing, and the patient was given up by his physicians. I heard of it and carried the oil and gave one spoonful, which effected a cure. It is an antidote for arsenic and strychnine. It will cure bloat in cattle by eating too freely of fresh clover; it will cure bites of bees, spiders, or other insects, and will cure persons who have been poisoned by a low running vine in the meadows, called ivy.—Ohio Farmer.

The Charms of Married Life.

In that chair yonder, not the one your feet lie upon, but the one beside you, closer yet, were seated a sweet-faced girl, with a pretty little foot lying out upon the hearth, a bit of lace running round the swelling throat, the hair parted to a charm over a forehead fair as any of your dreams; and if you could reach an arm around that chair-back without fear of giving offense, and suffer your fingers to play idly with those curls that escape down the neck; and if you clasp with your hand those little white taper fingers of her's which lie so temptingly within reach, and so, talk softly and low in the presence of the blaze, while the hours slip without knowledge, and the winter winds whistle uncared for; if, in short, you were no bachelor, but the husband of some sweet image—would it not be far more pleasant than a cold, single night sitting, counting the sticks, reckoning the length of the blaze, and the hight of the falling snow? Surely imagination would be stronger and purer if it could have the playful fancies of womanhood to delight it. All toil would be torn from mid-labor if but another heart grew into this present soul, quickening it, cheering it, bidding it ever God speed. Her face would make halo rich as a rainbow, a stop of all such noisome things as we lonely souls call trouble. Her smiles would illuminate the blackest of crowded cares; and darkness, that now seats you despondent in your solitary chair for days together, weaving bitter fancies, dreaming bitter dreams, would grow light and thin and spread and float away, chased by the beloved smile.

Your friend, poor fellow, dies—never mind; that gentle clasp of her fingers, as she steals behind you, telling you not to weep, is worth ten friends. Your sister, sweet one, is dead—buried. The worms are busy with all her fairness. How it makes you think earth nothing but a spot to dig graves upon. It is more; she says she will be a sister, and the waving curls, as she leans upon your shoulder, touch your cheek, and your wet eyes turn to meet these other eyes—God has sent his angel, surely! Your mother, alas, she is gone! Is there any bitterness to a youth, alone and homeless, like this? But you are not homeless, you are not alone; she is there; her tears softening yours, her grief killing yours; and you live again to assuage that kind sorrow of hers.

Then these children—rosy, fair-haired; no, they do not disturb you with their prattle now—they are yours. Toss away there, on the green sward; never mind the hyacinth, the snowdrops, the violets, if so be any are there; the perfume of these beautiful lips is worth all the flowers in the world. No need to gather wild bouquets to love and cherish; flower, tree, gun, all dead things; things lovelier hold your soul. And she, the mother, sweetest and fairest of all, watching, tending, caressing and loving, till your own heart grows pained with tenderest jealousy, and her's itself with loving. You have no need of a cold lecture to teach thankfulness; your heart is full of it. No need now, as once, of bursting blossoms, of trees taking leaf and greenness, turning though kindly and thankfully; forever beside you there is bloom, and ever beside you there is fruit, for which eye, heart and soul are full of unknown, unspoken—because of unspeakable—thank-offerings.—Donald G. Mitchell.

Never Despair.

The opal-hued and many perfumed morn
From gloom is born;
From out the sullen depth of ebon night,
The stars shed light;
Gems in the rayless caverns of the earth
Have their slow birth;
From wondrous alchemy of winter hours
Come summer flowers;
The bitter waters of the restless main
Give gentle rain;
The fading bloom and dry seed bring once more
The year's fresh store;
Just sequences of clashing tones afford
The full accord;
Through weary ages, full of strife and ruth,
Thought reaches truth;
Through efforts long in vain, prophetic need
Begets the deed.
Nerve then thy soul with direst need to cope;
Life's brightest hope
Lies latent in Fate's deadliest lair—
Never despair!

The New Age.

Is a sixteen page weekly about the size of one and a half of THE TROWEL. It is the organ of Odd-Fellowship on the Pacific, and is published at San Francisco, at $5 per annum. Frank B. Austin, Editor. No better paper is on our exchange list.

THE MASONIC TROWEL.--The December number of this most excellent monthly has been received. It is replete with interesting matter and Masonic information. It is most ably edited by Harman G. Reynolds, Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois: is published at Springfield, Illinois, at the exceedingly low price of $1.25 per year. This journal deserves the patronage of the Masonic Fraternity throughout the United States, and we commend it specially to every brother who desires "light in Masonry." THE TROWEL is by no means local or sectional in its matter, but gives general information and statistics from all parts of the United States.—Tribune, Va.

In Memoriam.

THROUGH DEATH TO LIFE!—and through this vale of tears,
And through this thistle.field of life, ascend
To the great supper in that world whose years
Of bliss unfading, cloudless, know no end.

The Rev. James Davidson, Past Grand Orator and Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, a faithful Methodist preacher, an eloquent orator, a brave man, and a finished gentleman, departed this life at Decatur, on Monday, the 10th instant, and was consigned to the tomb, at Oak Ridge, at his special request, by Elwood Commandery No. 6, of this city, (of which he was a member,) M. W. Bro. and E. Sir William Lavely, Commander.

The stormy weather and another rheumatic attack prevented our attendance. The deceased was a native of England, and was by trade a machinist. As early as twelve years of age he was known as the boy-preacher. He came to this country when 21 years old, and in 1851 married Miss Anna Davison, of Quincy, and leaves her and an adopted daughter 13 years old.

He preached until the commencement of our late civil war, when he entered the service as chaplain, and was subsequently promoted to the position of colonel. He was wounded at Chattanooga, and was soon appointed president of a court martial. After leaving the service he was assigned to the charge of the First Methodist Society this in city, and labored with it very successfully for three years. A year ago last September he was assigned to Decatur, where his health rapidly failed him. Hoping to prolong his life, and perhaps effect a restoration to health, he was appointed presiding elder last September. But, his work was nearly finished, and now, early in life, he has "gone up higher." His faith was firm, his end joyful and serene, and the glorious example he leaves behind is more precious than gold, gems, or any earthly diadem.

Died.

At Salem, Ill., Col. STEPHEN G. HICKS, formerly a member of Mt. Vernon Lodge No 31. The deceased was several times a member of the Legislature.

At New Douglas, Madison county, December 25, Brother JOHN J. WILBER, aged 55 years.

The deceased was a member of Madison Lodge No. 560, and a member of the M. E. Church. He was born in New York in 1814 and came to Madison county in 1836, where he married, and has raised a respectable family. His life was pure and useful, and his death was calm and serene.

Married.

On the 16th inst., at the residence of the bride's parents at McLean Station, by Rev. L. J. Ingersol, of Wabash, Indiana, Mr. HENRY C. COOK, Senior Warden of Tazewell Lodge No. 586, A. F. and A. M., and Miss M. ALLENNEIT DILLON.

It is Noble to Create.

BY WM. ROUNSEVILLE.

What is noble? When the Maker
  From his high omnific state,
By his power the world created—
  That was noble—to create!

That is noble, midst the bustle
  Of the world, its love and hate—
Be it toil of brain or muscle—
  That is noble—to create!

That is noble, when a statesman
  Rears for liberty a state,
Where his followers live in freedom—
  That is noble—to create!

That is noble, when the artist
  Picture paints to nature mate,
Glorious beauty on the canvass,
  That is noble—to create!

That is noble, when the hammer
  Fashions by its ponderous weight,
The machine-assisting labor,
  That is noble—to create!

That is noble when the plowman
  Toils from early dawn till late,
At his bread-producing labor,
  That is noble—to create!

That is noble, when the miner,
  Down in darkness, tempts his fate,
To unearth the precious treasure,
  That is noble—to create!

That is noble, when the student,
  With his knowledge never sate,
Toils to solve important problems,
  That is noble—to create!

That is noble, when the seamstress
  Deftly forms each seam and plait,
To produce a robe of beauty,
  That is noble—to create!

That is noble, when the whisper
  Love has spoken, conquers hate!
And is born a loving spirit,
  That is noble—to create!

What is noble? All is noble
  That is useful, good, or great,
Wrought by brain, or hand, or spirit,
  It is noble to create!

"The Blue and the Gray."

The ladies of Columbus, Mississippi, on last Memorial Day, decorated the graves of the Confederate and Federal dead. This work of Charity and Love, was commemorated by the following beautiful lines, which appeared in a New York paper. The soul of its author, whoever it may be, was fired by a living coal from the true altar of poesy.

By the flow of the inland river,
  Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of the grave grass quiver,
  Asleep are the ranks of the dead;
    Under the sod and the dew,
    Waiting the Judgment Day;
    Under the laurel, the Blue:
    Under the other, the Gray.

These in the robings of glory,
  Those in the gloom of defeat,
All with the battle-blood gory,
  In the dusk of eternity meet;
    Under the sod and the dew,
    Waiting the Judgment Day;
    Under the laurel, the Blue;
    Under the other, the Gray.

With the silence of the sorrowers
  The desolate mourners go,
Lovingly laden with flowers
  Alike for the friend and the foe;
    Under the sod and the dew,
    Waiting the Judgment Day;
    Under the roses, the Blue;
    Under the lillies, the Gray.

So with an equal splendor
  The morning sun-rays fall,
With a touch impartially tender,
  On the blossoms blooming for all;
    Under the sod and the dew,
    Waiting the Judgment Day;
    Broidered with gold, the Blue,
    Mellowed with gold, the Gray.

So, when the morning calleth,
  On forest or field of grain,
With equal murmur falleth
  The cooling drip of the rain;
    Under the sod and the dew,
    Waiting the Judgment Day;
    Wet with the rain, the Blue;
    Wet with the rain, the Gray.

Sadly, but not upbraiding,
  The generous deed was done;
In the storm of the years that are fading,
  No braver battle was won;
    Under the sod and the dew,
    Waiting the Judgment Day;
    Under the blossoms, the Blue;
    Under the garlands, the Gray.

No more shall the war-clouds sever,
  Or the winding rivers be red,
They banish our anger for ever,
  When they laurel the graves of our dead.
    Under the sod and the dew,
    Waiting the Judgment Day;
    Love and tears for the Blue;
    Tears and love for the Gray.

The Kingdom of Home.

BY WILLIAM RANKIN DURYEE.

Dark is the night, and fitful and drearily,
  Rushes the wind like the waves of the sea;
Little care I, as here I sing cheerily,
  Wife at my side and baby on knee:
    King, king, crown me the king;
    Home is the kingdom, and Love is the king!

Flashes the firelight upon the dear faces,
  Dearer and dearer as onward we go,
Forces the shadow behind us, and places
  Brightness around us with warmth in the glow.
    King, king, crown me the king;
    Home is the kingdom, and Love is the king!

Flashes the love-light, increasing the glory,
  Beaming from bright eyes with warmth of the soul,
Telling of trust and content the sweet story,
  Lifting the shadows that over us roll.
    King, king, crown me the king;
    Home is the kingdom, and Love is the king!

Richer than miser with perishing treasure,
  Served with a service no conquest could bring;
Happy with fortune that words can not measure,
  Light-hearted I on the hearthstone can sing,
    King, king, crown me the king;
    Home is the kingdom, and Love is the king!

Watchwords of Life.

Hope,
While there is a hand to strike!
Dare,
While there's a young heart brave!
Toil,
While there's a task unwrought!
Trust,
While there's a God to save!
Learn,
That there's a work for each!
Feel,
That there's strength in God!
Know.
That there's a crown reserved!
Wait,
Though 'neath the cloud and rod!
Love,
When there's a foe that wrongs!
Help,
When there's a brother's need!
Watch,
When there's a tempter near!
Pray,
Both in thy word and deed!

The Secrets of Masonry.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

We suppose the time has gone by when the most devout believer in a mysterious energy in Masonic rites, will claim that when an eavesdropper, unknown to the workers, chances to be within hearing, the work will spontaneously cease, and no amount of mental or bodily exertion will again set it in motion, until the cowan be removed. And yet, as silly—as foolish—as groundless as this assumption is known to be, we have heard it seriously stated by Masons. They claimed that there was a mysterious intelligence, under control of no one, and acting independently of the will or desire of members, which took cognizance of the danger of detection and sturdily refused to allow the Masonic work to go on until the listener was discovered and placed beyond the power of producing harm.

When such claims are put forth, we do not wonder that they are treated with ridicule by the wise, and viewed with feelings akin to terror by the timid and superstitious. Those who put forward such statements as the facts of Masonry, are the deadly enemies of the system which they profess to love. We all agree as to this matter.

But are we perfectly consistent when we assume a mysterious importance for the secrets of Masonry, which though they do not reach to the supernatural, as in former times, yet are presented in such guise as to make them the chief part of the Masonic system? Do we not make our secrets play a more important part than they deserve? Do we not claim for them virtues which we ought to know they do not possess? And do we not weaken, instead of strengthen our Order by these claims? So it seems to us.

The secrets of Masonry in our view are much like, and can be correctly illustrated by the scaffolding which is put around the foundation of a building, to aid in its erection. It is no part of the real building, though a necessary appurtenance. It does not add to the beauty of the structure, nor to its strength, nor to its symmetry. And yet it is necessary to the production of them all. The building can not be reared without it. The grace and symmetry, the strength and solidity, are gained through the means of the scaffold, and yet do not depend upon it.

Are not the secrets of Masonry much like the scaffolding about the stately edifice? They are not necessary to its beauty, for all the splendid lessons of Masonry would be equally beautiful, were they given upon the housetops. The impressive ceremonies would be fully as impressive if performed on a public stage. The moral influences would be as potent if every secret was made generally known. The great facts upon which Masonry is founded do not depend in the least possible degree upon the secrets that are contained in the bosom of the organization. They were facts before the secrets of Masonry had an existence; they are facts now, unchanged by the other fact that wise men have made them subservient to the good of our Institution; they will continue to be facts when Masonry shall have resolved itself into that general brotherhood above, when all secrets shall be revealed. So the beauty, the influence, the facts of Masonry are neither dependent on the secrets connected with them. They could exist without them.

Then the secrets of Masonry should not be allowed to assume a prominent place in the pantheon of the Fraternity. We should not regard Masonry as principally or even considerably made up of secrets. We ought not to press them forward as the strong points, that is, to ward off an attack in defensive, or carry devastation into the ranks of an enemy in offensive war. We may use the secrets of the lodge to aid us in the erection of our moral and Masonic edifice, but we should ever remember that they do not constitute that edifice. They are necessary adjuncts to the erection of the structure, but the structure is of more importance than the scaffolding by which it is surrounded, and will outlast it many generations.

But if we should inquire what are the secrets of Masonry, we should find the answer to harmonize with what we have hereinbefore stated. What are they? The signs, grips, and tokens, the words and modes of recognition. What else? Our ceremonies are secret, and our ritual is hidden from public view, but Masonry would be just what it is now, if they were not. Then the answer just resolves itself into this, that the secrets of Masonry are those modes of recognition by which we know each other; by which we know a true Craftsman from an imposter; by which we prove ourselves worthy and well qualified; by which we show that we have visited the sacred places of the Fraternity, and have knelt at the altar of the common Father.

These are convenient means to secure the ends desired. They are all well and needful; they are wise in conception and valuable in practice, and yet Masonry could do better without them, than it could to ignore the first great principle, the first great living truth upon which it is founded. Strike out the bond of fraternity, and what use of the grip and sign? Annihilate in the mind of a Mason the element of truth, and of what benefit would be the token? Extinguish the belief in the existence of God, and where would be our trust and dependence in each other?

Crafty enemies always attack the least strong part of the intrenchment. The secrets of Masonry are the point of attack in every case of a war against us. We submit that this is in some degree to be attributed to the fact that we ourselves have been accustomed to put them forward as the chief good of the Institution, when, in fact, they are only the frame work around it. We defend them as though they contained the very heart and life of Masonry. We give them a prominence that warrants others in the belief that they are vital to the Fraternity. In that we err. In that we draw the fire of the enemy upon the weakest part of our fortifications, and needlessly expose ourselves to defeat.

Let us quit this disastrous manner of maneuvering, and adopt one more reasonable—more wise—more successful. The principles of Masonry are impregnable. No amount of argument, sophistical or sound, can overthrow them. They are the mason-work—the solid walls of our Institution. Let our enemies attack these if they will; let them batter them as they may, and though all the secrets of the Order were proclaimed on the housetops, yet not one stone of the grand old edifice will be removed. It will stand as it has for centuries stood, hoary by time, but with the cope-stone firm in its place, with not a particle of the cement removed with not one stone thrown down.

As a friend of humanity and an ever ready helper in the work of ameliorating the condition of the helpless and distressed, it is with feelings of sincere pleasure that I have become aware of the lately rapidly increasing popularity of an order so fraught with good, as that of the Eastern Star. My attention has been called to articles, not alone in Masonic journals, but also in daily newspapers, which seem to hail the reviving of this Order with pleasing anticipation. I have also been the recipient of letters from Masonic lodges in different parts of the State, desiring to ascertain the manner of procedure in obtaining charters and other necessary appurtenances for the proper formation of chapters of that Order. The Bloomington Pantagraph announces that there is one about to be organised in that city. The Masons of Peytona are also actively engaged for the same purpose. There is also a chapter in excellent working order in Elgin. While the residents of both North and West divisions of Chicago are discussing the necessity of establishing lodges in those vicinities, that they may be of easy access to their residents, as the only one in working order in Chicago, at present, meets in Blaney Hall, which is situated on the South Side, though composed of members from all parts of the city. The Masonic Craft generally are becoming aware of the need of an institution which shall, in a great measure protect them from imposture and fraud daily practiced upon an order so widely known for its charities as that of Masonry. Perhaps a little insight into the work and aim of this Adoptive Rite of Masonry may not be uninteresting to some of your readers.

The objects held in view and impressibly designated by the rites and ceremonies of the Order, are to assist, comfort, and cheer any near and worthy female relatives of Master Masons, who may happen among our Father's afflicted ones, whether by sickness, bereavement, or poverty, and hope by thus establishing themselves into distinct bodies with signs, passes, and means of recognition known only to the initiated, and admitting none into its mysteries but the worthy and true of either sex, though otherwise eligible. To not only protect themselves against imposition, but accomplish an amount of good second only to that of the Ancient and Accepted Craft. The noble aim of these zealous workers for the cause of humanity should recommend them to worthy consideration of every good and true Master Mason. The beautiful, religious, and instructive ceremonies of the Order are founded upon Scriptural incidents, and arranged into the several degrees, with the taste and skill of an experienced and masterly style. While the several characters portray the grand and noble virtues of heroism, fidelity, and endurance, the grand features are devotion to God, and a firm adherence to the right, and create an impression which can not fail to fill the mind with exalted and noble purposes. While the quaint style and graceful manner of the conferring of the several degrees combine to render them peculiarly attractive and pleasing to the recipient. And I doubt not but that this institution is at no lengthened period destined to become one of the finest and most useful in the world.

W. M., Matron of Miriam Chapter.

The Canada Imbroglio.

In our January number, we gave a hearing to the newly formed Grand Lodge of Quebec. In view of the facts, Grand Master Stevenson convened the Grand Lodge of Canada in "Special Emergent Communication" at Montreal on the first day of December last. Fifty-seven grand officers, deputies, and past grand officers, together with representatives from a constitutional number of lodges were present.

In the address of the Grand Master, he sets forth the reasons for convening the Grand Lodge, and then recites and comments upon the correspondence looking towards the formation of the Grand Lodge of Quebec; when the call for a convention was made, the Grand Master suspended all the brethren whose names were appended to the call, and issued an edict forbidding any participation in the new movement.

Suspensions, arrests of charters, and much unpleasant controversy ensued.

The Grand Master of Vermont had been sent for to install the officers of the contemplated Grand Lodge; he visited Montreal, and, in company with the representative of the Grand Lodge of Vermont, had an interview with Grand Master Stevenson, and returned without attending the convention.

All the correspondence of the Grand Lodge of Quebec, with all its circulars and addresses, are set forth consecutively in the Grand Master's address, and he concludes as follows:

"Having thus placed before you such facts as appeared to me to be necessary to a clear understanding of the true position of affairs, it yet remains for me to submit as briefly as possible the views I entertain, after most anxious and careful consideration, in reference to the legality or expedicncy of the recent secession. When the Confederation Act came into operation in 1867, a very general feeling prevailed among the Fraternity within this jurisdiction, that the political changes then made, would to a greater or less degree affect our position as a Grand Lodge, and that a corresponding change would be necessary to adapt ourselves to the new state of affairs. This feeling gave rise to the discussion at Kingston, which has already been sufficiently alluded to. Many brethren, who, at that time, held the opinion that we ought to make some change, were yet unable to adduce reasons sufficient to satisfy their own minds, on what ground such changes were rendered necessary. There were no precedents, so far as known, either in the Old World or on this Continent, and thus the solution of the problem was rendered much more difficult than it otherwise would have been. Since that period, it is within my knowledge, that some brethren of eminence who then entertained such views as those above indicated, have, on maturer reflection and a closer study of the case, been led to the conclusion that the political changes which took place in connection with the Confederation scheme, did not, in any manner or degree, alter or affect the status or position of the Grand Lodge of Canada. The name may be anomalous—(though there are good and sufficient reasons why even this should not be changed)—the jurisdiction and authority remain precisely as before. That this must be so, will be manifest when we consider the self-evident truth, that an act of Parliament can neither create nor destroy a grand lodge of Freemasons. If this be correct, and I maintain it is, then it follows as a natural consequence, that the Confederation Act, passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, did not, in the most remote degree, interfere with the standing, position, or operations of the Grand Lodge of Canada, and the same may be said respecting other organizations existing in this country, apart from and wholly independent of governmental support or control. The Canada Presbyterian Church, for instance, is still the Canada Presbyterian Church, notwithstanding that the territory, within which its operations are carried on, is now known as Ontario and Quebec, instead of as formerly, Upper and Lower Canada. The Canada Wesleyan Methodist Conference is another case in point, and many of others could be added.

"I am well aware that it is held as a general principle, by eminent authorities on this continent, that Masonic boundaries should be coterminous with political boundaries. This has been the rule in the establishment of grand lodges in the United States. But the United States furnishes no parallel to the case under consideration, and therefore comparison is entirely out of the question. The arguments which would be applicable to a number of separate, independent, and sovereign States, claiming to exercise exclusive legislative authority and supreme governmental control in all matters, except such as they themselves reserve and depute to the general or United States Government, lose all their point and efficacy when applied to our subordinate Colonial or Provincial condition, where all the power is vested in the general or dominion government and Parliament—where only local matters (or such as are in the United States termed municipal) are entrusted to the local governments and their legislatures, the Lieutenant Governors of the various provinces deriving their appointments from the Governor General of the Dominion. In our case, which would be the political boundary to which Masonic government would require to conform? The Dominion or the Provincial? If the former, we possess not the power, as there are two other grand lodges established within the Dominion, whose existence could not be ignored, and whose co-operation we could not at present expect to obtain; if the latter, then every new division of territory, or change of name which might take place in either of the provinces, would necessitate similar changes in the jurisdiction and names of the respective grand lodges. Would this be wise? Would it be expedient? Would it be common sense? Surely there are few to be found prepared to answer in the affirmative.

"I can easily understand, that in the organization of a grand lodge for a particular kingdom, State, or territory, it is well to conform to the name of the kingdom, State, or territory over which that grand lodge intends to exercise Masonic jurisdiction and authority, but I most respectfully submit, that after a grand lodge is once established and recognized, its existence, jurisdiction, and authority, can neither be destroyed, altered, or in any degree affected by either political or governmental action.

"Entertaining these views regarding our position, I can see no ground for the opinion put forward by some, that the Province of Quebec is 'vacant' or 'unoccupied territory.' That it was occupied from 1855 until confederation took place, is admitted on all sides, how then can it be said to be unoccupied NOW? Has any one been able to demonstrate why it has become to be unoccupied since, when it is acknowledged that it was occupied before confederation? If the Grand Lodge of Canada existed in and exercised authority over the Province of Quebec, as well as Ontario, previous to confederation, by what process of reasoning can it be made to appear that she only exists in and exercises authority over one of these provinces SUBSEQUENTLY to that event? When and to whose care has she confided the other?

"Investigate this subject as carefully and closely as you may, you will, I think, be irresistibly led to this conclusion, that if the Grand Lodge of Canada exists at all (and surely no one will deny that) its existence, jurisdiction, and authority extends now over every foot of the territory claimed and conceded at its establishment in 1855, and it is to-day as much the Grand Lodge of the Masons of Quebec as it is of the Masons of Ontario; and that, therefore, a second grand lodge can not at present be legally established in either one or other of these two provinces.

"But, were it otherwise, are the circumstances surrounding the Masons residing in the Province of Quebec such as would render it expedient or desirable that the present Grand Lodge should be dismembered? Is their position such as would warrant them in breaking off from us and setting up for themselves? Look at the number of lodges—scarcely forty—including those working under English authority, with, in most cases, a comparatively limited membership. The population, consisting largely of French Canadians, especially in the country parts, forbids the possibility of any very great increase for some time to come. Add to this the further fact—that legislation in that province will doubtless be made to accord, more or less, with the views of a powerful ecclesiastical hierarchy, which places Freemasons in the same category with all other secret societies, of whatever nature; conscientiously regarding all alike as unmixed and unmitigated evils, which it is the duty of every good citizen to assist in exterminating. Under the Grand Lodge of Canada, all is secure; but, if a division took place, the Masons of Quebec would not only be shorn of the strength which their connection with the Masons of Ontario affords, but they would also be deprived of the protection which they now enjoy, and which they can only hope to enjoy while continuing to be part and parcel of the Grand Lodge of Canada. It becomes, then, every prudent brother to consider well, before attempting to affect a change, which, in my humble opinion, would not only be most detrimental to, if not wholly destructive of, the best interests of Freemasonry; but would, in all probability, place in jeopardy its very existence in this province. Yet, it is a lamentable fact, that many brethren, without the slightest consideration or forethought, should be found willing, nay, even eager, to assist in the pursuance of such a suicidal policy.

"What could the brethren of Quebec gain by a separation? Strength? Influence? Power? Dignity? Greater means of usefulness, or enlarged facilities for carrying on their charitable and benevolent operations? Nay, in all these respects they would be infinitely worse off than at present. They have always had their fair share, and more than their share of grand lodge offices and honors. Their grievances have, in every instance, been carefully considered and properly redressed. Every application to grand lodge, from any quarter, for assistance from its ample fund of benevolence, has been responded to in the most generous and liberal spirit. The utmost deference has at all times been paid to the views of the eastern brethren, on all questions coming before grand lodge; and, through the magnanimity and fraternal consideration of their brethren, they have been enabled to exercise an influence in grand lodge affairs, entirely disproportioned to either their numbers, ability, or importance. What more could they possibly desire?"

The Committee on the address submitted the following propositions:

1. That the Province of Quebec has been fully occupied, Masonically, since 1855, and is still so occupied by the Grand Lodge of Canada.

2. That the Province of Quebec, being fully occupied, Masonically, by the Grand Lodge of Canada, the formation of a second Grand Lodge within such territory, is illegal and unconstitutional, so long as such occupation continues.

3. That while unanimously and emphatically condemning the action of the brethren who have presumed to form the so-called "Grand Lodge of Quebec," within the territory Masonically occupied by the Grand Lodge of Canada, this Grand Lodge at the same time expresses the hope that the seceding brethren will see the propriety of returning to their allegiance to it, and assures them that in doing so they will be received with cordiality and brotherly good will; but at the same time it deems it due to its own dignity, and its duty to the loyal Masons and lodges in the Province of Quebec, as well as to the Craft generally, to withhold any hope of recognition to the so-called "Grand Lodge of Quebec," and to express its opinion that on a proper presentation of the facts of the case, no recognition by other grand lodges in correspondence with this Grand Lodge, ought to be accorded to it.

4. That all Masonic communication with the brethren and lodges acknowledging allegiance to the so-called "Grand Lodge of Quebec," be prohibited; and that all those who fail or neglect to comply with the provision of the previous resolution, by returning to their allegiance to the Grand Lodge of Canada, within a period of three months, be summoned to appear before Grand Lodge at its next annual communication, to show cause why they should not be expelled from the privileges of Freemasonry.

5. That in the opinion of this Grand Lodge, the action taken by the M. W. the Grand Master, in the trying circumstances in which he has been placed owing to the contumacious conduct of certain brethren in the province of Quebec, in seceding from the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Canada, merits the highest approbation of Grand Lodge, having been characterized by a strict regard for the Constitution of Freemasonry, and for the honor and dignity of the high position he occupies; and that all the acts, which, in the discharge of his high duties, he has done in this most painful emergency, be, and the same are hereby confirmed.

We are unprepared to express an opinion in full, or any opinion by which we may be hereafter committed.

But, considering the mode of organizing grand lodges in the United States, the brethren of Quebec may have considered the precedent a sufficient justification for their course; besides it does not seem that there has been a consistent course pursued in the past by those who now compose the Grand Lodge of Canada with the present condition of affairs, and it seems to us, that due consideration may lead to better results.

As the matter now stands, we feel quite sure that the Masonic legal position is with the Grand Lodge of Canada. We do not say that it holds the rightful position. That is a matter for further reflection.

Then, in brief—the Grand Lodge of Canada was formed from lodges located in the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and in lieu of the provincial grand lodges then existing. It occupied the whole territory. No other grand lodge can be legally formed in that territory while the Grand Lodge of Canada exists without its consent.

The Grand Lodge of Canada has been recognized by her mother grand lodges; no other grand lodge, formed upon her territory without her consent, can rightfully receive recognition.

But, it is alleged, that there are various lodges which have never been under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Canada. When the Grand Lodges of Scotland, England, and Ireland recognized the Grand Lodge of Canada, in accordance with Masonic precedent, they yielded their hold upon the territory, and of consequence, upon all lodges upon it. The Grand Lodge of Illinois does not recognize any lodge within the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Canada, which is not subordinate to it.

These, it seems to us, are strictly legal views. Is the present condition of affairs on the part of the Grand Lodge of Canada right? All Masons have an interest in the matter. It is important that harmony be restored. To this end, as Grand Master of Masons in Illinois, we propose that the whole matter be submitted to a Board of Advisement, to be agreed upon by both parties. There are several eminent brethren in the States to whom both parties could submit their cases, with an almost absolute certainty of arriving at a conclusion in which all will concur.

Among them, we name the Hon. John L. Lewis, of Pen Yan, N. Y.; Hon. J. H. Drummond, of Portland, Me.; Hon. E. H. English, of Little Rock, Ark.; Hon. H. L. Palmer, of Milwaukee, Wis.; and we could name several in Illinois, but would prefer to do so in another way. The brethren above named are eminent in the legal profession, all Past Grand Masters, and men of talents and large Masonic attainments.

Arkansas.

Grand Chapter.—Far West, Union, Whitfield, Bellevue, Woodlawn, Olive, Monticello, Warren, Forrest Home, Gray, Tillman, Bransom, Barber, Quitman, Dover, English, Dalcho, Blocher, Mountain Home, South-west, and Providence Chapters were represented in Grand Chapter Oct. 28.

Luke E. Barber, G. H. P.; W. D. Blocher, Gr. Secretary.

The Grand High Priest reported that he had issued dispensations for new chapters at Helena, Hot Springs, Clarksville and De Witt. They were all chartered. The address of Comp. Barber can hardly be excelled, either in its classical scholarship, its sound advice, or its tender and touching allusions to his official life.

He speaks encouragingly of St. John's College, and is strong in the belief that as Arkansas advances in material strength and educational development, St. John's College will be a notable triumph. With such brethren as Barber and English at the head it ought not to fail.

The work in all the degrees was exemplified.

E. H. English was elected G. H. P., M. L. Bell, Deputy; E. H. Whitfield, Gr. King; F. J. Cameron, Gr. Scribe; Luke E. Barber, Gr. Secretary; R. L. Dodge, Gr. Treas.; J. B. Groves, Grand Chaplain; W. Reynolds, Gr. Marshal; David Bruton, G. C. H.; John Hill, G. P. S.; E. A. Warren, Jr., G. R. C.; J. J. Whiteside, I. M. Moore and W. W. Adams, G. M. of Veils; James Tunnah, Gr. Sent.; S. W. Williams, Gr. Lecturer.

A uniform code of by-laws was adopted.

The Order of High Priesthood was conferred on three candidates. L. E. Barber, Grand President.

Grand Council R. and S. M.—Occidental, Adoniram, Friendship, Cephas, Pike, Berlin, Searcy, English and Blakeney Councils were represented at Little Rock, Oct. 30.

E. H. English, G. P.; W. D. Blocher, Gr. Recorder. No address.

Warrants were granted for new councils at Fayetteville and Augusta.

E. H. Whitfield was elected Grand Master; G. A. Dannelly, Deputy; M. L. Bell, G. I. M.; J. W. Jordan, G. P. C. W.; L. E. Barber, G. Recorder; R. L. Dodge, Gr. Treas.; E. A. Warren, Gr. Capt. Guards; T. R. Welch, Gr. Chaplain; G. McCowan, Gr. Marshal; John Hill, G. Steward; James Tunnah, Grand Sentinel.

The work was exemplified upon ten candidates.

Ohio.

Cincinnati, Steubenville, Lancaster, Chillicothe, Newark, Columbus, Reese, Piqua, Mansfield, Zanesville, Franklin, Athens, Hillsboro, Springfield, Connell, Hamilton, Lina, Lebanon, Marion, Painsville, Norwalk, Georgetown, Sandusky, New Carlisle, McConnellsville, Moriah, Toledo, Bellefontaine, Canton, Cleveland, Wellsville, Morton, Hock-Hocking, Conneout, London, Akron, Alliance, Mahoning, Bosworth, Clinton, Medina, Delaware, Findlay, Cunningham, Kilwinning, Wright, and Belmont Councils, R. & S. M., met in Grand Council at Cleveland, Ohio, October 15. Charles Brown, G. M. This Grand Council has 54 subordinates, over $2,000 annual revenue, and pays over $1,300 mileage. 2,139 members.

The transactions relate to local matters, and indicate a degree of harmony and prosperity equal, if not superior, to any other grand council.

Comp. Cunningham submitted a short report on correspondence. By it we learn that the Grand Council of Tennessee refuses to disband. Joseph R. Conrad, of Atwater, G. M.; Calvin Halladay, Deputy Henry C. Landes, Ill. G. M.; Henry Theobald, G. P. C.; F. J. Phillips, G. Treas.; John D. Caldwell, Cincinnati, Grand Recorder; J. L. Coleman, G. C. G.; Jacob Randall, G. Sentinel.

Missouri.

Grand Council.—St. Louis, Weston, Marion, Monticello and Sedalia Councils were represented in St. Louis, Oct. 8th, Martin Collins, M. P., Grand Master. No address.

Geo. Frank Gouley submitted a fair report on correspondence.

Martin Collins was elected Grand Master; John G. Foss, Deputy; J. M. Fox, G. T. I.; John Glenny, G. P. C. W.; J. E. R. Millar, G. C. G.; Rev. D. T. Wainright, G. Chap.; Wm. N. Loker, Gr. Treas.; G. Hon. John Dean Caton.

The Western Monthly for February comes freighted with good things. A beautiful, life-like picture of Judge Caton fronts an interesting sketch of his life. When Masonry was struggling for position in this mighty State of Illinois, he was Master of Occidental Lodge No. 40, and was thorough Master of the Barney work, and could to-day detect any error in its phraseology. Last month we made liberal extracts from a notice of Judge Breese; with equal pleasure do we make kindred extracts in honor of one of nature's noblemen.

JOHN D. CATON.

The career of ex-Chief-Justice Caton, of Illinois, has been signalized by arduous labors and by deserved success. If the details of his life could be laid before the world, they would afford a record to be commended to every young man who is struggling with adversity and is desirous of creating for himself an honorable name. At the age of fifty-two he voluntarily resigned the highest judicial position in the State, at a time when his mind was capable of putting forth its most vigorous manifestations, and when his physical powers were unimpaired. He has stamped the impress of his mind upon the jurisprudence of the State; and in the volumes of the reports which contain his decisions, there is not a page which his warmest friends would seek to blot, not a sentence which betrays the spirit of the partisan judge.

John Dean Caton was born on the 19th of March, 1812, in the village of Monroe, Orange County, New York. His father's name was Robert Caton, whose immediate ancestor, of the same name, was born in Ireland and emigrated to Maryland before the Revolutionary War. He ultimately settled in Virginia, and became possessed of a plantation on the banks of the Potomac, where the father of the subject of our memoir was born, March 22, 1761.

Robert Caton was married three times, his last wife being Hannah Dean, and the issue of this marriage was four children—two daughters and two sons—the elder of whom is the subject of this notice. At four years of age, young Canton left the place of his birth, which he did not again revisit until after the lapse of thirty-two years. This change in his circumstances was brought about by the death of his father, when his mother, with four orphan children, removed to near Brothertown, in what was then the town of Paris. Here she rented part of a house, about an acre of land attached, of one of her brothers. Her straightened circumstances required the exercise of the strictest economy; and every member of the family, so soon as able, was required to contribute to make the little patrimony self-supporting. Here Caton's boyhood was passed, and here in the village school his mind received the first rudiments of knowledge. He was kept pretty constantly in attendance upon this school until he was nine years old; but he confessed that, from his disinclination to study, this became a difficult task.

Mrs. Caton, as well as her husband, belonged to the Society of Friends; and among the visitors to her humble abode was Solomon Bass, who resided at Smyrna, Chenango county. Attracted by the appearance of the boy, or wishing the relieve the mother of a portion of her heavy burden, he persuaded her to let the lad accompany him home, promising to bring him up as a farmer. This was in March, 1821.

Friend Solomon's farm was anything but an earthly paradise. It was situated in the midst of hills, covered with gloomy forests, in which a small clearing had been made and a rude cabin erected. The boy found ample occupation in bringing water to the house from a neighboring stream, in driving cattle up the hillsides to enable them to browse, in cutting fire-wood, and in tending the fires of the sugar-camp, where the sap of the maple was gathered and evaporated. So onerous were the tasks imposed upon him by friend Solomon, in carrying pails, that to this day the man cannot straighten the muscles of his fingers; and so great the exposure to which he was subjected, that his feet became frosted and the flesh in places came off. Whenever the Judge refers to this episode in his life, it is with a feeling of shuddering.

At the end of nine weeks the boy was returned, with frosted feet and crushed spirits, to the maternal roof, where he once more received that love and kindness which a mother only can bestow.

Having acquired the rudiments of the law so far as to enable him to enter on its practice, young Caton set his face westward, and arrived at Chicago in June, 1833. With the exception of Judge Spring, who had preceeded him a few weeks, he was the first lawyer to hang out his "shingle" in that city, where now the members of that profession are to be counted by the thousands. He brought the first suit ever instituted in the Circuit Court at that place. In the fall of that year he obtained his license to practice, from Judges Lockwood and Smith, making a long journey to Greenville, Bond County, for that purpose.

In July, 1835, he married Miss Laura A., daughter of Jacob Sherrill, Esq., of New Hartford, Oneida county, New York.

In 1836 the first house was erected by him on the "school section," west of the Chicago River.

Judge Caton had inherited from his parents a sound constitution and more than ordinary physical powers, and he was thus enabled to endure without exhaustion an almost unlimited amount of physical or intellectual exertion; but by an unfortunate exposure he contracted a severe cold, which was succeeded by a fever which brought him to the verge of the grave and permanently impaired his constitution. His physician prescribed less devotion to office-work, as a sine qua non to his recovery; and accordingly, in 1839, Judge Caton moved on to a farm in the country where he resided until 1842, meanwhile keeping up his practice in three or four of the neighboring counties. His health becoming restored by this out-door life, he again returned with renewed zeal to his profession; and such was the estimation in which he was held, that when, in 1842, Judge Ford, of the Supreme Court of the State, was elected Governor, Judge Caton was appointed his successor. He was then but thirty years of age, and at such a moment, in reviewing his past life—the struggles which he had undergone in lifting himself by his own exertions alone out of the depths of poverty; gathering the rudiments of an education at the district school, rounded off by a term or two at a select school; then, still struggling on, a student at law practicing before a Justice's Court or performing clerical labor to gain a support—it must have awakened in him a feeling of proud satisfaction thus to find himself elevated to a post of such grave responsibility. At that time the Judges of the Supreme Court were elected by the General Assembly, and the commission which had been conferred on Judge Caton expired with the meeting of that body, when John M. Robinson, who had just retired from the Senate of the United States, was chosen to that position; but as that gentleman died the following April, Judge Caton was again commissioned by Governor Ford as his successor. The gravest objection to electing Judge Caton in the first instance had been that he was too young; but now with a commission which was to continue nealy two years, he had the opportunity of of demonstrating his fitness for such a position. But suffice it to say that at the next session of the Legislature he was elected by the united vote of his party.

In 1848 the Constitution of the State was revised. and the Judiciary system was so far altered as to provide for the creation of three Judges of the Supreme Court, to be elected by the people, and who were relieved from Circuit duties. At the first election, S. H. Treat, now United States District Judge for the Southern District of Illinois, Lyman Trumbull, now a Senator of the United States from the same State, and Judge Caton, were chosen as the members to constitute the Supreme Court, At the first sesion it was required that they cast lots for the respective terms of three, six, and nine years. The short term fell to Judge Trumbull; the middle term to Judge Caton; and the long term to Judge Treat, who became Chief Justice. The latter resigned in April, 1855, when Judge Caton succeeded to his rank, and so continued until the expiration of his commission, which occurred in June of that year. He was re-elected to the position of Judge, and in 1857, on the resignation of Chief Justice Scates, he again became the head of the Bench, and continued to occupy that position until 1864, when he resigned.

In 1849 he became incidentally interested in the O'Reiley Telegraph Company, and, much against his wishes, was elected a director. He found himself one of a board who knew little of the principles of the art of telegraphy, or of the manner in which the business should be conducted. But Judge Caton had that inquisitive mind which could not rest content until it had penetrated to the hidden causes of things. He got such books as could be procured, treating of electricity and galvanism, and mastered their contents; and at the same time he instituted a series of experiments as to the best methods of transmitting intelligence by means of this subtle and invisible fluid. He became sufficiently expert as an operator to be able to transmit and interpret messages. At that time the register was in universal use, and the operator who could read by sound was regarded as a prodigy.

This company was organized under the name and style of "The Illinois and Mississippi Telegraphic Company." Their line was cheaply built and of poor materials. Their business was not sufficient to pay expenses, and their stock drooped lower and lower, until it hardly showed a symptom of vatility. At a meeting of the board of directors, at Alton, in 1852, the affairs of the company were found to be in a most desperate condition: the treasury was empty, very few of the offices paid expenses, not half of the lines were worked, there was a floating debt of seventeen thousand dollars, the company's credit was so low that not a druggist would trust them for a pound of acid, and it was the opinion of every one except Judge Caton that the enterprise had proved a total failure, and that the only available assets to offer to the creditors were the instruments. He, however, took a more cheerful view, and sketched out a plan to retrive the desperate fortunes of the company. He proposed that an amendment to the charter be procured by which the stock might be assessed to the extent of five dollars a share, with power to sell in case of non-payment. The board assented to the plan, on condition that Judge Caton would assume the presidency and execute it. This he consented to do. The amendment was obtained, an assessment of two dollars and one-half was levied, enough was voluntarily paid to get the lines in working order, and under a rigorous supervision the affairs of the company began to brighten and its credit to improve. To accomplish this, Judge Caton not only drew largely on his private means, but borrowed largely of his friends, so confidently was he as to the ultimate value of this stock under good management.

To replace the hard-wood telegraph poles that were ready to tumble down, he visited in person the cedar swamps on the north shore of Green Bay, exploring the rivers in a bark canoe paddled by Indians, and there contracted for a large supply of cedar poles to be delivered in Chicago. He entered into negotiations with railroad companies contiguous to the lines to remove them within their right of way; he secured the unappropriated territory in Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota, and made contracts on his own account with companies whose roads were then constructing, to place the telegraphic wires along their lines; so that ere long he had a greater length of line than was owned by the old company. But both of these interests were subsequently consolidated. Under the vigorous superintendence of Judge Caton, the telegraph company became dividend-paying; and in 1867, a negotiation having been effected by which these lines were leased to the Western Union Company, Judge Caton retired from its active management.

The salient points of Judge Caton's character may be briefly summed up: He possesses a mind not naturally brilliant, but solid, capacious, and investigating, united to a physical frame capable of great endurance. What he has accomplished has not been the result of inspiration, or of the possession of that faculty which we call genius—which, by the way is a very vague term—but of patient thought, advancing step by step to a given goal. The power of discriminating between what is substantial and what is merely accessory, in a combination of facts, he possesses in an eminent degree; and hence his decisions, whilst they may not bristle with citations, are characterized by eminent good sense, and will stand the test of time. The very habits of self-reliance which, from early youth, he was compelled to cultivate, impart additional vigor to his mind and confidence to the conclusions in which he rests; and at the same time he has that intuitive sense of right and wrong, that sturdy honesty of purpose, which cannot be broken down by legal technicalities nor perverted by legal sophisms.

Viewed in other phases, we find in him the practical and sagacious business man, capable of originating and directing the most complex affairs; founding a vast system of telegraphy; engineering water-works; organizing starch-factories, glass-works, copper-mines, and other enterprises; and in fact his whole nature is pervaded by a restless activity.

He is also a country gentleman, surrounded by his flocks and herds, and his ample parks are stocked with deer and elk, whose habits he notes and describes with the trained eye of the naturalist.

Many years ago he selected as a place for a residence one of the bluffs which overlook the rich valley of the Illinois. Hero, surrounded by alternate groves and lawns, he erected a fine mansion, a portion of which is set apart for a library. The site, which is one of great natural beauty, has been rendered more beautiful by art. A mile off, and bristling with activity, lies one of the most beautiful villages of Illinois; and taking the whole panorama within the range of vision, nature nowhere presents a lovlier scene. Here, then, Judge Caton lives, possessed of all the accessories which make life agreeable, and beloved and respected by his numerous friends and neighbors, who are ever welcome to his hospitable board. As he reviews his past career, his thoughts cannot be other than those which result from the recollections of a well-spent life.

Communications.

EDITOR TROWEL: While sojourning at this place for a short time, I had the pleasure (as a visitor) of meeting with the brethren in their 40th annual grand communication of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of Florida, which was held in this city last week, commencing on Wednesday, and continuing three days. The session was well attended, much business of interest and importance to the Craft was transacted, fraternal harmony prevails, and the zeal and fidelity made manifest bespeaks a prosperous future for Freemasonry in Florida. I saw the third degree exemplified in a very good degree of proficiency. Still their work is a little different from that of Illinois. The grand officers elect for the ensuing year are Samuel Pasco, of Monticello, M. W. G. M.; Albert J. Russell, of Jacksonville, D. G. M.; Abraham J. Prevatt, of Providence, S. G. W.; David Lang, J. G. W.; T. Preston Tatum, of Tallahassee, G. Treas.; Dewitt C. Dawkins, of Jacksonville, G. Sec.; Rev. John Penny, G. Chaplain; H. W. Long, S. G. D.; J. J. Holland, J. G. D.; David Jones, G. T.; besides four D. D. G. Masters, one of which is James Ellenwood, of Madison, who is a P. G. M., and the father of Masonry in Florida, and I am under many obligations to him for information and favors shown. D. C. Dawkins, the Grand Secretary, is a man of energy, and does a good deal of work for little pay. The larger number of the officers of the Grand Lodge are young men and of much promise. Last night I had the pleasure of meeting with Duval Lodge No. 18, of this city, presided over by A. J. Russell, W. M., a very able and efficient officer, and D. G. Master. There are two lodges in this place, each having a good hall and well furnished except a carpet; and sixty-one chartered lodges in the State. There are a large number of persons from the north spending the winter in this city. Some for pleasure, and others for their health. It is undoubtedly a very mild climate, and at this time too warm for real comfort; the thermomenter for the last ten days has ranged from 72 to 84 degrees in the shade.

Annual Communication, Dec. 24th, 1869.

"The ceremonies of installation were now over; the new Master had assumed the Oriental Chair, and no further business was apparent, when Bro. Chaplain approached the East, and, in a few well chosen words, on behalf of the members of Quincy Lodge, presented the retiring Master, W. Bro. Robbins, with a beautiful Past Master's jewel of solid gold, as a testimonial of the respect, esteem and love entertained for him by the lodge over which he had so long and so acceptably presided as Worshipful Master.

Bro. Robbins, as soon as recovered from the surprise with which the presentation of this unexpected gift had affected him, responded, expressing his profound surprise and his emotions of pleasure and pride at this beautiful testimonial of affection, coming from the lodge with which he had so long been associated. He referred with much feeling to the period of her formation, to her charter members, her broken columns, her history of uninterrupted harmony, even during the years when all the associations in the land had felt the disturbing influence of civil strife, and congratulated her members upon their present peaceful and happy relations, pledging them his continued interest and affection 'until the silver cord should be loosed and the golden bowl be broken.'"

We have looked upon that jewel. To say that it is a beauty, a gem, is faint praise. We have seen none which excels it.—Ed.

Adoptive Masonry.

The annual installation of officers of Miriam Chapter No. 1, Eastern Star degrees, took place on Tuesday evening, Jan. 25th, 1870, in Blaney Hall, No. 53 Dearborn St., Chicago. A large number of friends were invited to witness the installation ceremonies.

After the installation, Bro. S. A. McWilliams, M. D., the W. P., delivered a short address, giving the history of the Order, what its purposes were, &c., after which the audience was delightfully entertained by an ode with accompaniment on the piano, by Mrs. Libbie Carrington.

The principal orator for the occasion, Bro. O. H. Horton, was then introduced, and delivered a very interesting address, followed by Bro. J. C. W. Bailey, after which the members and their friends joined in a general sociable. Altogether the affair was a very pleasant one.

Dr. S. A. McWilliams, W. Patron.
Mrs. Joseph Butler, W. Matron.
Mrs. C. F. Wilt, Associate Matron.
Mrs. A. B. Hight, Treasurer.
Mrs. Jos. Gallagher, Sec.
Miss Mary Ferns, Conductress.
Mrs. G. F. Merchant, Associate Conductress.
Mrs. Chas. Magee, Warder.
Mr. Jacob Kuhn, Sentinel.
Mrs. Bobert Tarrent, Adah.
Mrs. J. C. Howell, Ruth.
Mrs. N. M. Bassett, Esther.
Miss Mary A Peters, Martha.
Mrs. M. A. J. Ogden, Electa.

Jurisdiction of Grand Lodges.

To the Editor of the Freemason:

Dear Sir and Brother—Please say to "J. Fletcher Brennan" that I did remember that two grand lodges existed in England, and I also remembered that there was a continual controversy between them, which was terminated only by merging them into one. I do not desire a better illustration of the necessity of exclusive grand lodge jurisdiction over the same rite in the same territory.

So far as he represents me as holding that different rites should be under the same government, he does not find any warrant for so doing. So far as he thinks no Masonic government is necessary, the history of the Institution is against him. Men, as Masons, require government as well as they require it as citizens. One necessity has produced civil government; the other, Masonic government.

Two civil governments in the same territory would produce civil dissensions, resulting in civil war; two Masonic governments of the same rite and grade, equally produce dissensions and strife among Masons. Two civil governments, one under the House of York, and the other under the House of Lancaster, could have peacefully governed the people of England, as well as the two Grand Lodges the Masons of England. I do say that but one church government of the same church can have place in the same territory, and so say common sense and history. The government of a church of sect is of no consequence to that of another sect. But let an attempt be made to establish a government of the same sect in territory already occupied by that sect, and witness the result!

Would the "established Church of England" recognize and fraternize with an independent church, though professing the same tenets? The government of that church is exclusive in England, in the same sense that Grand Lodge jurisdiction is exclusive. I thank "J. Fletcher Brennan" for this illustration, also.

The Grand Lodge of Louisiana has declared as effectively as if it were a part of her constitution, that "men of every race and color may be candidates for Masonry within its lodges;" but it also concedes the right of a member of a lodge to use the black ballot without question, and if it should practically result that any particular class of men are excluded, no other organization in Louisiana will for that reason be recognized as Masonic by the Fraternity, "J. Fletcher Brennan," et rei omne genus, to the contrary notwithstanding.

He errs in saying that the Grand Orient of France "indorsed anew its recognition" of Chassaignac's Supreme Council in June last. It reasserted in the strongest terms the doctrine that no man should be excluded from Masonry on account of race, color, or religion; but at the same time, one Grand Master stated that the protest of the Grand Lodge of New York was receiving the most careful consideration; and I venture the prediction that the Grand Orient of France, while asserting the doctrine above stated to its fullest extent, will withdraw its recognition of that spurious council, on the ground of exclusive Grand Lodge jurisdiction.

Ashmole (Elias), an eminent antiquary and herald, the founder of the museum which still bears his name, at Oxford, was the only son of Simon Ashmole, a saddler of Lichfield, by Anne, daughter of Anthony Boyer, of Coventry. He was born May 23, 1617, and was placed at an early age as chorister in the cathedral of Lichfield. He was taken into the family of James Paget, Esq., one of the the puisne Barons of the Exchequer, who had married his mother's sister, under whose roof he studied law, spending his leisure hours in acquiring music and other accomplishments. In 1638 he married Eleanor, daughter of Peter Mainwaring, of Smallwood, in Cheshire, and in Michaelmas Term he became a Solicitor in Chancery. He lost his wife on the 5th of December in the same year. In 1645 he became a captain in Lord Ashley's regiment and Comptroller of the Ordnance. In the midst of these employments he entered himself of Brasenose College, and applied with great vigor to the study of Natural Philosophy, Mathematics, and Astronomy.

In 1646 he came to London, and became acquainted with Sir John Wharton, Sir Jonas Moore, William Luly, and John Booker, esteemed the greatest astrologers of their time, and was admitted into their fraternity. In 1650 he published, in 12mo, Dr. Arthur Dees' treatise upon the philosopher's stone, under the title of "Fasciculus Chemicus." In 1652, believing that a knowledge of Hebrew was necessary for understanding the writers upon hermetic science, he studied that language under Rabbi Simon Frank. At the end of 1652 he published his "Theatrum Chemicum Britannicum," in 4to, containing many pieces of our old hermetic philosophers, which gained him a high reputation, and among other scholars, the celebrated John Selden. In 1658 he published another treatise on the philosopher's stone, "The Way to Bliss," in 3 books, 4to. In 1653 he began collecting materials for his "History of the Order of the Garter." Upon the Restoration, he was early introduced to the favor of King Charles II., who, on June 18th, 1660, made him Windsor Herald, and appointed him to make a catalogue of the royal collection of coins and medals. In September he was made a Commissioner of Excise; on November 2, he was called to the Bar; in January, 1661, admitted F. R. S., and had several new preferments bestowed upon him; on the 12th July he received the degree of M. D. from the University of Oxford. He was now courted and esteemed by the greatest persons in the kingdom, and in May, 1672, he presented his "History of the Order of the Garter" to the King, who, as a mark of approbation for his toil and research, presented him with a privy seal for £400. In 1675 he resigned his office of Windsor Herald, and in 1677 declined that of Garter King of Arms, in father-in-law, Sir William Dugdale. On the 25th January, 1679, a fire broke out in the Middle Temple, by which he lost the greater part of his library, collection of 9,000 ancient and modern coins, and a great collection of seals, charters, and other antiquities; his manuscripts and gold medals were fortunately at his house in Lambeth. In 1682 he presented to the University of Oxford his collection of rarities, including the tradescompts, and afterwards his manuscripts and library; this is still called the Ashmoleon Museum. In 1686 he a second time declined the office of Garter. The remainder of his life was spent in an honorable retirement to his death, May 18, 1692, in his 76th year. His body was interred in Lambeth, and a black marble slab laid upon his grave, with a Latin inscription.—Freemasons' Magazine (London).

The Last Morsel.--A Mason's Widow.

All that remained of the last loaf of bread, which widow M—— could call her own, was upon the table. Where the next morsel of food was to come from was a question to which the widow herself could not give a ready response. Three little children looked up with love and trust into her face, and called her "mother." For six months she had provided as best she could, for their many necessities, with her own feeble hands; but health and strength failed—a severe pain in her chest prevented her from working so hard. Added to this, but little sewing was to be obtained, and for that little the remuneration was scanty—a pittance. What were she and her three fatherless little ones to do?

It was a bright day. The gladness of nature was a mockery to her heart. She placed her children around the board, and leaving her humble abode, she hied herself to Greenwood.

Tears streamed down her pallid cheeks as she trod the well-worn track to her husband's last resting-place. The widow started when she caught sight of a white slab, newly erected at the head of her lost companion's grave. It was an honor she had long yearned to pay his memory, but she lacked the means. Who had fulfilled her wishes so exactly? She pressed forward and read:

Sacred to the Memory of
S—— M——,
Who Died Greatly Beloved by All who Knew Him,
In the Thirty-third year of His age.

Near the top was carved a Masonic emblem. This was the only solution to the mystery. The woman knelt upon the sod, and blessed the widow's God for this token of His mercy. "Surely," she thought, and murmured half aloud, "those who have been so mindful of the moldering ashes of the dead will not be entirely unmindful of the welfare of the living."

A strong confidence was born in her heart. She arose and retraced her steps.

"Mamma," said one of the little ones, tottering toward her as she approached the door, "a man came here just now, and left a whole basketful of nice things, which he says was sent to us, but he would not say who sent them, There are meat, and bread, and tea, and sugar, and I don't know what all! Haven't we got kind friends, mamma? Now, you won't look sad any more."

Sure enough, the woman found her pressing necessities relieved, and supplies were sent her from time to time, and continued for long to be sent.

Who were her self-constituted guardians? It is unnecessary for us to name them, but we vouch for the truth of the story from personal knowledge.—F. G. Tisdall.

A Pleasant Surprise.

At a recent gathering one evening, there occurred one of those events which mark the happy spots in life's pathway, ever affording a pleasing and refreshing retrospect from the turmoil and hardships of life. It was the occasion of the presentation of a full Knight Templar's suit, by the Master Masons and Knights Templar of this city, to Past Eminent Grand Commander, Sol. D. Bayless, at his residence, corner of Wayne and Clinton streets. It was intended for a surprise, and so completely was the object accomplished that Mr. B. thought as he saw the first two or three enter his room that they were calling to learn of his health, he having been indisposed with bronchial affection for several days past. But when the genial smiles of nearly a hundred more made their appearance, he was nonplused, and could not divine the object of the visit. In the meantime the suit had been neatly displayed upon a table in the parlor, and Mr. Bayless, with the assistance of many willing hands, was brought upon the lounge, when for the first time he saw what had brought the party together.

The presentation of this suit had long been intended, and various means were resorted to, to get the correct measure for each article. A visit was made by one of the Fraternity to Mr. B.'s house in his absence, and an old hat seized upon for the desired dimensions. In sending the suit from Troy, New York, where it was manufactured, to this city, the sword was broken by an accident on the road, and not wishing to postpone the presentation, another sword was substituted for the occasion. Last Sunday was the fifty-fifth birthday anniversary of Mr. B., and it was desirable to commemorate that event by the presentation of the suit. This suit consists of a beautifully ornamented chapeau, a neat cloth cap, a la militaire, a handsome baldrick, on which was placed the proper insignia of rank, gauntlets, with the usual embelishments, and a rapier sword, on which was inscribed the name of the recipient.

After the party had assembled in the parlor, Rev. N. S. Smith arose, and in his usual able and eloquent manner made, on behalf of those present, a pleasing and appropriate presentation address. At its conclusion, Mr. Bayless remarked that he could only say that if he had words to express his gratitude for this beautiful testimonial of their esteem, he would not have strength to utter them, but hoped at some future day to meet them in their lodge-room, and return thanks for their kindness; and, if even this pleasure should be denied him, he hoped to meet all in the grand lodge-room above, where strength would not be required to prove him grateful.

Another surprise, however, awaited the whole party at this juncture, for the ladies had been busy all day long, without awakening a suspicion in the mind of Mr. B., who not being able to leave his room, was under the impression that they were engaged in the usual Monday's pastime—washing. So, that when the guests were invited to the dining-room, a superb lunch met their gaze; also the beautiful faces of the fair ones, who seemed delighted in their achievement of presenting such tempting morsels. Their efforts were unmistakably appreciated. The party dispersed about ten o'clock, after participating in a truly happy and pleasant affair.

Mr. Bayless has been connected with the Masonic Fraternity for twenty-eight years, and enjoys a reputation and respect among them second to none in the State. The following was offered on this occasion:

MASONIC TOAST.

May Friendship's barque, on the rock of deceit,
Ne'er sever, and sink, ere again we shall meet,
May she placidly glide o'er life's troubled lake
'Till launched safe in heaven; we then shall wake
Where sorrow, nor sighs, nor envy are known,
Where nought reigns but bliss around the Great Throne,
Where we may all dwell and forever there be Crown'd with the wreath Faith, Hope, and Charity.

He was only Joking.

Every one who knows anything is aware of the excessive love of Sir Knight George Frank Gouley, of Missouri, for the Ancient Accepted Scottish Site. A great many who are not aware of his habit of joking would imagine that he really meant what he said, whenever he alluded to the double-headed eagles; but they are and have been unquestionably mistaken, for whenever or wherever rewards have been at his disposal, while Grand Commander of Missouri K. Ts., he has showered them on the 32ds and 33ds of the A. A. Scottish Rite. While apparently berating the Ineffables, he has proved he was only doing so in a "Pickwickian" sense; the proof of which is given us in the report on Foreign Correspondence of of G. Commandery of Iowa, in which the Chairman, Sir Knight E. A. Guilbert, referring to Missouri, says its Grand Commander, G. F. G., had "appointed nineteen representatives near other grand commanderies. Singularly enough, I note the fact because it proves that the Grand Commander's practice is better than his preaching—a thing seldom seen except in churches! Singularly enough, three at least of these nineteen appointees, are 33ds, and several others are 32ds! So it seems that a man may be disloyal to his his government—may support Pike and Drummond in their attempts to dethrone God, and erect an altar to the goddess of reason—may be 'swindlers,' 'cheats,' 'perjurers,' 'tricky men,' &c., and yet be good enough to represent the Grand Commandery of Missouri, near another Grand Commandery."

Sir Knight Guilbert, really imagining that all Sir Knight Gouley said about the A. A. Rite, was really meant in sober earnest, and not merely intended as a friendly joke with Sir Knight and Ill. Bro. Albert Pike, 33°, naively asks: "is it not wonderful that a 33°, or a 32°, should have accepted such a commission from such a source?"

Well, we can see nothing wonderful in it. It is just what we should have expected, but we were struck with wonder when Sir Knight Guilbert added, "I know of one who declined a commission of this character from the same Grand Commander, because he could not hold it and retain his self-respect until charges made by the party appointing, and which involved every Knight Templar who was a A. and A. R. Mason, were retracted."

Sir Knight Guilbert, do not be surprised to hear at any moment, that Frank, with a bewitching frankness, takes it all back—or retracts, if you like the term better. George will be all right ere long.—F. G. Tisdall.

M. W. Bro. Holmes.

We are rejoiced to learn that this eminent brother, Editor of the Masonic department of the Dispatch, is convalescent.

In commenting upon our Encyclical, he remarks:

DIFFERENT LAWS IN DIFFERENT JURISDICTIONS.

It has been said by some who have felt disposed to criticise Freemasonry, that the boast made for it that its government is a unit, is unfounded in fact, and is directly contradicted by its history and the diverse legislation of different Grand Lodges. This has been said by renouncing Masons, as well as by the enemies of the Craft, and is measurably true; but proves nothing against the integrity of its construction, or the grand features of character claimed to exist for it. As well may it be said that the Christian religion is not based upon certain fixed general principles, because it is divided into different systems with sectarian laws, as to say that Masonry, in its great body and universality of sway, is a thing of change, because different systems of laws, in different countries, have been enacted for its government. The great wonder to the Masonic student is that a greater diversity of law does not exist in Masonry than is presented by the modern codes of the various jurisdictions; especially when they remember that Freemasonry has been under the direction of grand lodges for over a century and a half; the Grand Lodge of England having been established in 1717. Since that time Masonic law-making has been going on from year to year, each Grand Lodge legislating for itself, and having sovereign power over its own laws, both as to creation and construction.

If a brother should carefully read Chace's "Digest of Masonic Law" he would be surprised to find the little difference that really exists between the laws of these States; we mean differences as to matters of a fundamental or very important character, and, what is very strange, is that seldom do we find any difference at all as to any landmark or its meaning.

We may go further than we have, and declare that even the highest officials, in deciding nice questions of law, have not materially differed.

We have been led to these thoughts by a glance at an Encyclical Letter which has, during the present month, been issued by the Grand Master of Illinois, M. W. Harman G. Reynolds; as to the main features of which we agree, and only as to one of which the Grand Lodge of New York stands in opposition to him. His decisions and directions we will not quote at length, but will give only such as possess general interest.

Templar Manual.

We have heretofore noticed this valuable school of the Templar, Manual of Work, Statutes and Regulations, and Code of Jurisprudence, published by Sir Eugene B. Myers, of Chicago, under the authority of the Grand Commandery of Illinois. We are under many obligations to E. Sir Charles H. Brower, G. I. Gen., for a beautiful copy of the work, and for very many other courtesies. This treatise comprises a complete drill, with diagrams complete, so that one acquainted with military movements would find no difficulty in mastering the whole readily and correctly. The book is well printed, in fair type, in convenient pocket form, and is now in use in several States. It ought to be in every Templar's hands.

The Mystic Star

For January comes to us in a new and handsome dress.

We are glad to see the stand taken in the matter of so-called Masonic baptism.

No one who believes in Christian baptism can give the matter countenance, and while disclaiming any intention of calling motives in question, it has always seemed to us that its intention was to depreciate religion.

We should like to know who the Grand Master is who has decided that a lodge may give permission to confer degrees upon a candidate in the face of an objection by a member.

The January number is received. It excels in its matter and mechanical execution, any work of the kind we have yet seen. Its plates, engravings, and illustrations are numerous, and all valuable for general reference or special use.

The articles are evidently the work of experienced artists and educated men—educated to business, to write, to describe. In other words, they are both operative and speculative Masons.

We Take it Back.

In a notice of Bro. Thomson in the December Trowel, we spoke of a brother as a graceless La Grange Jesuit. All the old Trowel readers know who is meant. It was wrong to use the expression, or even to think it, and we take it back, squarely, without condition, allusion, or circumlocution.

To Anti-Masons Professing Christianity.

Inasmuch as this is a Christian country, as is proven by our constitutional and legal enactments, the positions taken by you as a part of a great and intelligent community, are not to be despised or ignored. Discussion is necessary in order to produce intelligent conviction and action, but discussion does not imply license, falsehood, or vituperation.

"Truth, is a divine attribute and the foundation of every virtue. To be good and true, is the first lesson" that should be taught to a child, and the governing motive in all human affairs. The contrary is the basis of evil, wrong, and crime.

You have an organ, which, in addition to other common objections to Freemasonry, makes a specialty of the fact that it is not a Christian institution, and accuses all who are connected with it, of being idolators and worshipers of false gods. This implies an absence or disregard of Christian tenets, and a hypocritical profession of belief in all Christian Freemasons, which we do not believe a candid consideration would permit you to avow. In some future articles we may discuss the ordinary objections to Freemasonry, but for the present, we argue from your standpoint upon objections as Christian men.

Masons should be moral men.—There are too many painful evidences that many of them are not exemplars in the moral virtues. These persons are pointed at by you, (shall we say pharisaically or thoughtlessly?) as so many way-marks in condemnation of Masonry. You have undoubtedly induced many to conceive and harbor sentiments inimical to the Institution, and unfavorable to Freemasons themselves. You have wounded and lacerated the feelings of thousands of excellent Christian Masons, who have mourned over a disregard of moral obligations by their brethren, as you, we fear, have not. You have created distrust by your imputations, where it has not benefitted you or the truth, and you have promoted dissension where you should have enforced good will. We do not say that you have done this dishonestly, or from any bad motive. We say that you have not considered; that you have not reflected; that you have not weighed your words, as you profess you ought to do. Perhaps you may ask if we deny your right to be anti-Masons. We do not. Perhaps you ask if we deny your right to discuss the subject. Most certainly not. Discussion points out deficiencies and errors, and often leads to amendment or reformation. But you have no Christian, moral, legal, or personal right to utter what is false; to pervert the truth by uttering a part, and suppressing a part, so as to give falsehood and injustice the advantage; you have no right to utter even the truth in such a manner as to depress others that you may be elevated at their expense.

Hence, when you point to immoral Freemasons as evidence against the Institution itself, are you not wronging yourself as well as others? Perhaps you speak the truth; but, honestly, do you not rather rejoice that such a truth is furnished you as a weapon? Is it not a welcome weapon, and one not likely to rust? And does not its use create in you a feeling of self-importance, which stimulates your pride and your self-righteousness at the expense of charity and sorrow for the erring wrong-doer? Your profession is "to speak the truth in love." And when stimulated by a sense of neglected duty, you desire to amend, do not these acts arise to condemn you? do they not stand in your way? do they not close your mouth, which should be open to speak the truth when it should be spoken?

But in the way and manner in which you sometimes even utter what is unfortunately true, you not only causelessly wound good men, and destroy the germs of tenderness and charity in your own hearts, but you use a weapon which may be turned with tenfold power upon yourselves.

You profess that it is the duty of the church to raise up the fallen; to convert the wicked; to renovate and elevate society; you profess that Christians should so exemplify their professions before the world, that others may be led by their example to embrace your views. Some do, but do you? In the use of your weapons, you condemn the church, and if there be argument in the way you arraign Freemasons and Freemasonry, it is an astounding argument against Christianity itself. Masonry does not profess to be a Christian institution; but Masonry inculcates precisely all the duties about which Christians agree. She does not profess Congregationalism as adverse to Presbyterianism; Methodism as adverse to the Baptists; Lutheranism wherein it is different from Unitarianism; nor Universalism as opposed to Episcopal polity. There are fundamental duties and obligations in this life, in which all these agree, and Masonry agrees with them, so that in all things relating to practical life, Freemasonry teaches Christianity as much as the sects above named, or any other Christian sect, in the things wherein they all agree.

You take hold of the dark side, and hold all Masons responsible for the errors, frailties, wrongs, and crimes committed by their brethren who are but men like yourselves. How is it with the church or persuasion with which you are connected? Are there no backslidings among them? Are all the members honest? Do none of them fall into hurtful lusts? Is there no drunkenness, no riotings, or revellings? How is it with your ministry? Are none of them impure or immoral, to say nothing of crime? We will not imitate your uncharitable example by making specifications, but we call on you to explore the chambers of memory for the cases of extortion, abuse of wards, misappropriation of trust funds, the ignoble vices, and the more daring wrongs committed against virtue, purity, and society by members and and ministers of churches. Just see the scandalous charges made in your organ against ministers and members of the same denomination as the editor! Just see him denouncing the polity of a persuasion with which he was once connected, and with which you may be associated! Just see him denouncing the sister of eminent Congregational ministers as a Universalist, as if that was some crime!

If the doctrine you hold be true, then you—you—are responsible for all the vices, wrongs, and crimes of all the members of your church—of your persuasion—of the whole Christian world. We know as well as you, that you are not so responsible, neither are we. But as you judge others, so are you liable to be judged.

The truth is that in nine places out of ten where there is a lodge, the membership of any church will suffer in comparison with the members of the Masonic Fraternity.

Although they belong to various Christian persuasions, perhaps to the Israelites, or make no profession at all; yet, those who are Christians are more liberal as a class than their church brethren who are not Masons; they are more liberal, more charitable, more forgiving, more faithful, less suspicious, and less slanderous than you are. And Masons without regard to religious belief, or political bias, are, as a class, more enterprising, industrious, and cosmopolitan than any other. They practice real toleration, willing to live and let live, for in this way only can society be made tolerable and useful in a free country. We ask none to be Masons. Few are debarred who can conform to our rules. And as to our exposing the few secrets of Masonry, we will do that when you will expose all of yours.

Dropping out of sight the controversy of 1859-1863, we have a few words to say in regard to covert and open attacks upon us, of a more recent date. If we were to ignore them, our purposes or silence might be misconstrued, and if we were to notice them as we think they deserve, we should be drawn into controversies utterly profitless, and perhaps injurious to Masonry. The more painful part of this is the fact that we are obliged, agreeably to our convictions of duty to drop out of an arena in which we would be at home. We have never been worsted in a controversy yet, and we never had so many personal reasons for one, as we have now. Some indications of what we intended, have brought serious remonstrance from old friends, which we feel bound to heed, and several articles already in type have been suppressed. The onslaughts upon us in the Monthly, Mystic Star, Evergreen, and the American Freemason, so far as they relate to our past or present official acts or influence, are both untrue and absurd. In the matter of Rebold; we were asked to be agent; we declined to do so, because we had not the time; and we did not examine the work. We were asked to have the book placed in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence. R. W. Bro. Bagby, while at Chicago, prior to the meeting of the Grand Lodge, commenced an examination, and condemned it at the outset. The Committee on Correspondence, of which Bro. Bagby was one, had the matter laid over until the next Grand Communication. The next summer a lady canvasser came to us for our assistance. We declined to lend our name, or even to give her a letter of introduction, because we regarded the attempt to force it upon the Craft in Illinois while its consideration was pending, as being either a thoughtless disregard, or a defiance of the wishes or sentiments of our Illinois brethren. We took no steps against the work, neither did we impede the lady in her efforts to sell the book. Then followed the crushing report made by M. W. Bro. Bromwell, which has been re-echoed in most of our Grand Lodges.

For our non-action we have been assailed in language more suitable to places of infamy, than to Masonic journals. Our influence and power have been represented as overshadowing, and even our quiet personal life and family connections have been shamefully assailed. In regard to the influence and power, we have to say, that until the last session, we have hardly spent an hour in the Grand Lodge or Grand Chapter since 1864. To meet the necessities of those bodies and to fullfil our official duties, we were compelled to remain in our office most of the time, and there is not a member of any committee that can truthfully say that we have tried to influence them on any matter whatever. We learned a lesson on that subject, in 1859 which we have not forgotten.

As to superior influence, it is untrue. Nor have we any such power as is attributed to us. We certainly have not exercised the power we have in our present position.

Our Bro. Billings has no cause against us. We could have laid our hand upon him once. It would have been wrong in us. We are entitled to no credit. He has laid his hand upon us, and he is wrong. There is no right in anything he has said of us. To the Evergreen we say, that we had a right to recommend Bro. D. W. Thomson, as a good lecturer upon Holy Land matters; others affirm it, and his descriptions of matters in and around Jerusalem in our own family circle were a rich treat, and a continual feast. Our disagreements in the past, furnish no reason why they should be perpetual. But, in recommending his lectures, we ought to have let others alone. And the Evergreen has unfortunately imitated our wrong-doing, and has assailed Bro. Thomson who is entirely free from blame. It may be alleged that it was provoked. That is no justification. The distinguished ability of the editor of the Evergreen and our equality in rank, makes it desirable that our two journals should not be engaged in any strife beyond just and courteous criticism. In regard to any influence or power in Grand Lodge, more than many other brethren have and can exercise, the editors of the Voice, Evergreen and Mystic Star, know that is untrue, and they ought to say so. The imputation is unjust and insulting to the Grand Lodge, and is falsely conplimentary to us, and wholly untruthful in fact. We ought to have some influence. We were seventeen years Grand Secretary; we are in our present position for the second time. No other man has had occasion to learn what we have learned, to know what we know, or to be so ready in Masonic matters in Illinois as ourself; we have given attention to Masonic matters for eleven years past and principally so for eighteen. From the American Freemason, we expect nothing and ask nothing; from the Mystic Star and Evergreen we are entitled to fairness, and we expect it; of our Monthly cotemporary we have nothing to say.

Henceforth, we shall try to make The Trowel a truly Masonic paper in spirit and fact. And we shall not be driven by any consideration to discuss this unpleasant subject again.

The Masonic Monthly,

For January is at hand. Bro. Samuel Evans, withdraws from the editorial chair. In his letter announcing such a decision, and in his usual hypercritical style he arraigns Mackey, Arnold, Anderson, Oliver, Moore and ourself as meretricious, cheap, Brumagen and boshy writers in the science, history, philosophy, romance, and morality of Masonry, and says that Masons must look elsewhere for pabulum to supply their mental cravings. Bro. Evans does not tell us where. Perhaps to Drummond, Pike, Guilbert, English, Palmer, or Lewis? Our recollection is that they are very severely dealt with by Bro. Evans on the score of their Scotch Rite affiliations; perhaps he would refer them to Gouley, Gardner, Macoy, or French? Hardly; they are Templars. Various other names occur to our mind, but they are not meant because they are Royal Arch Masons. He points out no place where this pabulum may be found. However, we thank Bro. Evans for placing our name among such worthy brethren; it is a compliment we did not expect, and one which we might earnestly wish to merit.

Bro. Evans also thinks that the writings of the first named brethren are "painfully moral." Judging from the previous writings of Bro. Evans and of the contributions to his journal, we cannot avoid the conclusion that he speaks for himself and them.

He claims to have been a destroyer of images under the term "Iconoclasm." The editor has verily endeavored to destroy what the fathers built up, and has suggested nothing better; he has sown the seeds of discord, enmity, and strife, and bitter has been the fruit. Now that he has attained to the position of Junior Warden, we hope that his association with the able men in the Massachusets Grand Lodge, may have a tendency to destroy his cynicism, his selfishness, his arrogance, and to turn his admitted scholarship and ability to something substantial and enduring.

Toleration.

Masonry has a distinct and definite creed, the chief points of which are—

1. Belief and trust in God;
2. Morality;
3. Equality among brethren;
4. Rectitude of life;
5. Obedience to the laws of the land.

These are fundamental, to which every Freemason must give assent.

Beyond these, toleration among Masons is, or should be, universal.

To the second point, one Masonic periodical does not seem to yield assent. Another does not seem to recognize any of them but the third. All others recognize the above points.

We deny, emphatically, that, in the practice of this toleration, any one is to prescribe how another is to believe, act, or worship. It is a gross offence to do so. It is a limitation upon conscience and personal rights. For every Mason is assured that no part of Masonry is to interfere with his duty to his God, his country, his neighbor, or himself. Beyond the points stated, Freemasonry allows every one to be the judge of his duty. Hence, we expect every brother when called upon in lodge or out of lodge to perfom any act which involves a conscientious discharge of his duty, to act agreeably to his convictions, and in that matter no other Mason is to judge for him, otherwise, the assurance that Masonry does not conflict with his duties above specified is not true. If a Rabbi is called on to offer thanks to Deity, it is his duty, agreably to his convictions, to do so in conformity with his belief, and what is more, no consideration could induce him to do otherwise. So with the Musselman; and so it should be with all. Because the vocal utterance of one does not comport with our views, that is no reason why we should respond to them, or be supposed to be bound by them. Omniscience knows when we agree and when we dissent. That is enough.

We have had some evidence of the influence of political opinions among Masons, in the admission of candidates, and it is hardly probable, that any other influence is so pernicious when permitted to exist. This seldom influences men who mingle much in the world, and have learned that difference in views seldom affect life and character. They learn that disagreements are inevitable, and in all free governments, indispensable. The want of toleration is mostly among such as are confined to one class of business, or who see little else of life than their own daily circle.

It is therefore the duty of every Mason to have his political and religious differences outside of the lodge, and to judge every brother, candidate, and person by his merits, and not by his opinions.

Elgin—Watch Factory.

When tbout to visit Richmond, we found that the greater part of the day before reaching there must be spent in Chicago or at some intermediate point. So we elected to stop at Elgin and visit its Watch Factory. On the 28th December, we arrived at Elgin, and were taken in charge by our enterprising and gentlemanly brother, Frank H. Moseley, Secretary of Monitor Lodge No. 522.

At the Waverly House, Bro. Lasher, proprietor, we found comfort and good entertainment, an agreeable landlord, polite and prompt attendants. It is a good place at which to refresh the outer or inner man, or where to rest when weary.

After dinner, Bro. Moseley conducted us to the Watch Factory, in the southern portion of the town on the east side of Fox River, where is a fine three-story building, with a well-lighted basement, two hundred and forty feet in length, including main building and wings. In the main building are the offices, entrances, and passage-ways. The wings are 28 feet wide. There are also important wings in the rear. When we arrived at the building, the operatives, male and female, were at dinner, either at their homes, or at the convenient and handsome boarding-houses near by.

It was a rich treat to see them gathering at the sound of the bell, and in less than five minutes, every one had disposed of overcoats, shawls, hats, and bonnets, and were at work. The movements and operations of each one is truly like "clock work." Of these operatives alone, there are over twelve hundred persons, the larger portion of whom are women and girls. We were soon introduced to Bro. Charles H. Moseley, General Superintendent, and the leading motive power, and to Bro. George Hunter, tho master mechanic, who is familiar with the minutest operations throughout the entire factory. In our passages, we also encountered several brethren among the "overseers" of the several departments, and among them Bro. C. E. Mason, who manages the escapement manufacture. This portion of the work, especially, and several other departments also, require large skill and experience in addition to the wonderful machine power already in operation, and subject to constant simplification by the superintendents and overseers.

Bro. Hunter very politely conducted us through the several portions of the building, and explained to us the various processes of watch manufacture. As we passed through and saw the huge machinery which sets the entire manufacture in motion, watched the operatives, each doing one kind of work, and no other, requiring intelligence, precision, accuracy, and constancy, we could begin to realize how nothing can escape the vision of Omniscience.

One can look with awe upon the ponderous machines which reduce vast quantities of ore into form and shape for our railroads, mills, factories, and industries requiring power; but to see the minute operations of a watch factory, reduced to far less than the finest hair, and all brought together so as to measure time with absolute certainty, excites wonder and surprise.

We had intended a pretty full description; it is impossible; it would take weeks of time, and unlimited patience, to gather up the items, and several numbers of THE TROWEL to describe them.

We witnessed the punching of the wheels, the train-room, cutting the wheel teeth, baking the dials, the movement work, the escapement marvels, steel work, jeweling department, the gilding and balancing, dial painting, and a vast number of minute operations.

Contemplate the inventive genius of man; the power of aggregate minds over millions of inventions, which, perhaps, no man can count, and can any further proof be wanting that man is created in the likeness of God? And yet alongside of nature's works, and the creations of the Divine, how puny is man!

The watch factory is a power in Elgin, a credit to its founders and managers, furnishing employment, giving aid to genius and intelligence, and demonstrating that what can be done elsewhere can also be done in Illinois. With Bro. F. H. Moseley, who is managing clerk, we looked in upon the fine and commodious hall of Monitor Lodge No. 522. Few halls surpass in it city or town for convenience, comfort, beauty, taste, or finish. Its anterooms are neatly furnished, while the furniture in the lodge-room is massive, elegant, and complete.

The town is beautifully situated on both sides of Rock River, and is furnished with good public buildings and elegant mansions. The manufacture of cheese is a prominent feature in its business, and large quantities are sent daily to Chicago. The Fox River region is really one great dairy.

The old Chicago and Galena Railroad, now a part of the immense Northwestern, passes through Elgin, and has contributed largely to its growth. The population is over 5,000, and on every hand are evidences of thrift, manufactures, and industry.

It is the seat of much Masonic influence. Elgin Lodge No. 117, was formerly under the Mastership of P. G. Master Guilbert, of Iowa, and has a large and influential membership; Monitor Lodge is a fair representative of enterprise, and is already a strong lodge, while Loyal L. Munn Chapter is fast taking rank with the largest and best working bodies in the State.

Landmarks.

M. W. Bro. John W. Simons, in his "Principles of Masonic Laws," specifies the following Landmarks:

1. A belief in the existence of a Supreme Being, and in the immortality of the soul.
2. That the moral law, which inculcates, among other things, charity and probity, industry and sobriety, is the rule and guide of every Mason.
3. Respect for, and obedience to, the civil law of the country, and the Masonic regulations of the jurisdiction where a Mason may reside.
4. That new made Masons must be free-born, of lawful age, and hale and sound at the time of making.
5. The modes of recognition, and, generally, the rites and ceremonies of the three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry.
6. That no appeal can be taken to the lodge, from the decision of the Master, or the Warden occupying the chair in his absence.
7. That no one can be the Master of a warranted lodge until he has been installed and served one year as Warden.
8. That when a man becomes a Mason, he not only acquires membership in the particular lodge that admits him, but, in a general sense he becomes one of the whole Masonic family; and hence he has a right to visit, Masonically, every regular lodge, except when such visit, is likely to disturb the harmony or interrupt the working of the lodge he proposes to visit.
9. The prerogative of the Grand Master to preside over every assembly of the Craft, within his jurisdiction, to make Masons at sight in a regular lodge, and to grant dispensations for the formation of new lodges.
10. That no one can be made a Mason, save in a regular lodge, duly convened, after petition, and acceptance by unanimous ballot except when made at sight by the Grand Master.
11. That the ballot for candidates is strictly and inviolably secret.
12. That a Lodge cannot try its Master.
13. That every Mason is amenable to the laws and regulations of the jurisdiction in which he resides, even though he be a member of a particular lodge in some other jurisdiction.
14. The right of the Craft at large to be represented in Grand Lodge, and to instruct their representatives.
15. The general aim and form of the Society, as handed down to us by the fathers, to be by us preserved inviolate, and transmitted to our successors forever.

One Year Rules.

Under the decisions of our Grand Masters, and constantly confirmed by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, applicants for the first degree when rejected must wait one year before they can petition any lodge again, and then only by the consent of the rejecting lodge.

But it is of another matter that we wish to speak. By the 38th section of the By-Laws of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, the lodges are prohibited from initiating any applicant who has not resided twelve calender months within this State, before such application is made. This is plain and unequivocal. If application be made before a residence of twelve calendar months is complete, the proceeding is irregular. This prohibition is mandatory upon all, and is not subject to dispensation. The application is not to be received. We do not propose to discuss the reason for this law, only, that it was enacted after long experience demonstrated its necessity. We will now consider the question of residence; whatever is residence under the laws of Illinois, is also the residence contemplated by this law.

Married men.—One who has acquired a residence in this State, and is entitled to vote here and leaves his wife in this State, is a resident here, no matter where he may be, or in what business. If he takes his wife with him, but travels about, or sojourns in any place, actually acquiring no legal residence elsewhere, then he is a legal resident of Illinois, no matter how long his abence may have been.

Widowers.—The same rules apply to widowers whose children are kept as a family under his direction, or who travel with him.

Single men.—Where single men, residents, travel or temporarily sojourn abroad, without having gained a residence, they are still residents of Illinois, and entitled to vote.

Kentucky Ahead.

Our M. W. Bro. Philip Swigert, of Frankfort, Kentucky, was Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of that State nearly a quarter of a century, and then passed through all the gradations from Junior Grand Warden to the Grand Masters's chair. His faithfulness and ability as G. Secretary was duplicated as G. Master. He still serves the Grand Chapter as Grand Secretary, and the Grand Council as Grand Puissant. And the people delight to honor him, and he represents the seat of government as its Senator in the State Legislature. A long and familiar official, and more recently personal, acquaintance, made us friends—good friends. But to look for a present from Kentucky! We could look all over Illinois, and imagine that if such a matter as gifts could fall to the lot of a poor and weary editor, we might get boots there, a tile here, and this, that, and other things from all around.

But a chair! a real hickory chair! not a bit of iron! made with rockers! polished arms! roomy, substantial, and just the thing for a live editor to "recline in when weary." Manufactured in Frankfort, too! and not satisfied with doing this and paying all charges, but Judge Logan was served the same way. It was a Masonic act to remember us in this kind, unpretentious way, and what makes it agreeable to us is the fact that it recognized our toilsome and wearing vocation as editor. That real, good, roomy chair, is henceforth to be THE TROWEL-Swigert editorial chair. May no sorrow come to the donor; may his life be long and happy; our thanks are sincere.

Defence of Freemasonry.

Mrs. M. E. DeGeer, a noted lecturer upon Temperance; "Scotland, her heroes and her poets;" and upon other subjects, was invited by the good people of Lisle, in DuPage county, to debate the matter of secret societies with Mr. Blanchard, a son of the notable President Blanchard, of Wheaton. It was arranged that he should have an hour to open the debate, she was to have an hour to reply, and fifteen minute speeches were to follow; the lady closing the debate. Her defence is an admirable lecture, and well worthy of study and preservation, but her closing sally upon the youngster is witty and pointed, and would amuse anybody but an anti-Mason. Although there may be an error or two in matters of fact, and some ideas which all might not approve, yet, for its genuine argument, wit, stinging repartee, and side-splitting illustrations, we cordially commend it to our readers. Mrs. De Geer is a widow with a family of six children, and is doing much good. She is highly indorsed. Her "Defence" is a pamphlet of twenty-eight pages, and is for sale by Bro. J. C. W. Bailey, 164 South Clark St., Chicago, at 25 cents per copy.

Final.

Bro. Roan Clark, Secretary of Cannelton Lodge, Ind., thinks our remark in regard to the refusal of the Grand Chapter of that State, to require the subordinate chapters to contribute to the relief of a distressed and amiable lady, now a widow in that State, is a slur. Those who have not read the columns of the Advocate might so consider our remark. It was not so intended. In our notice of the death of a distinguished brother in Indiana, between whom and ourself there had been unpleasant differences, we said that they were henceforth forgotten. In noticing this, the Advocate remarked, "Let the dead rejoice." To say that it hurt, and badly, too, is a very tame expression of our feelings. And the subject was such an one, that direct reply was inadmissable. We can well understand that the Grand Chapter of Indiana had no power to compel her subordinates to make such a contribution. And we can well understand that it furnished no occasion for rejoicing, but rather of regret, to every Mason. It furnished us the occasion to retort the remark of the Advocate; such was our intention.

And now we drop the matter forever, and no unkindness or remark shall draw any further expression from us.

R. W. Bro. E. F. Babcock.

By a letter to the Grand Secretary, we learn that the name of Bro. Babcock was omitted from the Committee on Jurisprudence, in our Encyclical letter. We regret this omission very much, for he is one of the clearest-headed and ablest among our Grand Lodge members. And at a time when he was certain to be elected Deputy Grand Master, he generously stepped aside to make way for a brother that he thought had been improperly treated at a previous election. Such a man should not be ignored by any one, much less by us, to whom he has been a warm friend. We intended no such neglect, and in this way, make such reparation as is in our power.

We are pleased to learn that he is again W. M. of 342, at Summerfield.

W. Bro. Isidor Benjamin.

Bro. Benjamin has served Herman Lodge No. 29. at Quincy, as Master and in several other positions, with marked skill and ability. His presence has become familiar in Grand Lodge, and he is thoroughly posted in all that is done.

The brethren of Herman Lodge are not slow to acknowledge the worth of a good man and faithful servant, and so, on the 14th January, they presented him a solid gold Past Master's jewel, with a diamond in the centre, worth one hundred dollars. On one side is engraved "Herman Lodge." On the other, "Herman Lodge No. 39, W. P. M. Isidor Benjamin, Quincy, Dec. 27, 1869."

We congratulate Bro. Benjamin upon his good fortune, and hope that he may have a long, prosperous, and happy life.

P. G. Orator Robbins officiated in the presentation. No one could perform such a service with a better or more felicitous grace.

Bro. Rounseville's Articles.

This number contains the fifth of a series of articles prepared by R. W. Bro. William Rounseville of Peoria. We are confident that the judgment of intelligent, logical, and practical Masons, will declare them to be the ablest articles now being written, and that they supply a want long felt, instruction much needed, and arguments, forcible and unanswerable. There is no attempt at felicity of expression at the expense of truth or strength, nor at masterly rhetoric in lieu of logic and clearness. They are admirable specimens of pure English composition, and scholarly attainments, and have already been copied in our English exchanges.

The South.

During the last two months we have been favored with a large number of newspapers from the Southern States. We have carefully examined them all, and find that with the exceptions of some small portions of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia, the entire country is rapidly increasing in wealth, population, and prosperity. Political agitations have greatly injured the country, and the largest material increase is in those places where there was the least disturbance. Taking all things into consideration, the south is now the best section of the United States for settlers, either farmers, mechanics, or laborers, for the following reasons:

1st. The land is not in the hands of speculators, as is too much the case in other places, consequently it can be purchased at a very low price, and in any quantity, in any part of the country.

2nd. The land is extremely fertile and large portions of it is already improved and cleared, but was abandoned during the war.

3d. The climate is very mild and even, not subject to the cold winters, and the summers are not so hot as is generally supposed.

4th. The transportation system by land and water is extensive and is being rapidly extended and improved.

5th. There is a ready market for all kinds of produce and stock.

6th. There is a steady and increasing demand for all kinds of working men, especially mechanics; in the north over 200,000 are out of employment to-day.

R. W. Bro. Dent H. Miles.

The brother whose name heads this article resides at Sartatia, Mississippi, and is now seventy-six years old. He was initiated in Concordia Lodge, in Baltimore, in 1822, was exalted in 1845, and knighted in 1852. The Grand Chapter elected him D. G. H. Priest, and he has served the Grand Lodge as S. G. Warden. Fourteen years ago he was appointed Sen. G. Deacon, and has served until now, and still serves in that position. Once in good circumstances, he is reduced to poverty by the fortunes of war. But he is none the less a Mason, as a list of forty subscribers procured by him fully demonstrate.

Our Patrons,

Are fraternally requested to peruse the leading editorial article in this number, addressed to anti-Masons professing Christianity, and if they have any such neighbors we wish to have it read to them. It certainly can harm none, and a few may learn in the school of truth and conscience who can be reached in no other way. We intend, in candid but searching articles to follow this subject up.

Attention!

From every place where The Trowel circulates, east, west, north, or south, we want full, complete, and legibly written lists of officers of lodges, chapters, councils, commanderies, bodies of the Scottish Rite, and of chapters of the Eastern Star. Lists sent in papers are liable to be overlooked; those sent by letter are pretty sure to be noticed. These lists will be acceptable from any body and from any source.

Templar Visitation.

R. E. Sir Charles E. Munger, Grand Commander, accompanied by E. and Rev. Sir Charles E. Gilbert, Grand Prelate, and E. Sir Charles H. Brower, Grand Inspector General, visited Elwood Commnndery No. 6, on Tuesday evening, January 25. After being escorted to the asylum by a committee, they were received and introduced by a Guard of Honor. The presentations were made by Sir Gen. John Cook, Generalissimo.

Addresses of welcome were made by E. Sir William Lavely, Commander, to which suitable responses were made.

The Red Cross degree was then conferred upon Gen. Lippencott, State Auditor, and all the ceremonies were admirable and impressive.

Gen. Bates, State Treasurer, Hon W. Bushnell, Attorney General, and Hon. J. W. English, of the Convention, were among the visitors. On the following day the distinguished officials visited the sick couch of E. Sir P. A. Dorwin, P. Com., who is now in feeble health. The E. Grand Prelate administered spiritual consolation and offered prayers for the weary pilgrim. For this kind office to a distressed Sir Knight, the fraters will long be remembered by our Templars in Springfield. From here they went to Decatur; from thence to Jacksonville and Quincy. They were received with true Templar hospitality at all these places, and their sojourn was made pleasant and agreeable. In 1859, Sir Knight Munger, in company with R. E. Sir N. D. Elwood, and several others came from Joliet, to assist in organizing the commandery in Springfield, and he officiated as Senior Warden.

Life Insurance.

Our friend and R. W. Bro. Wm. T. Palmer, Grand Secretary and Grand Recorder of all the grand bodies in Wisconsin, is General Agent for the Craftsmen's Life Assurance in New York City. The company has deposited its two hundred thousand dollars, and complied with every thing required by the laws of New York; has an eminent directory; H. R. Pierson, Vice President of the N. W. Railroad, is a director, and Edward A. Lambert, of New York is President. This company is what its name indicates, a place where every architect, mechanic, and skilled workman, as well as the "rest of mankind" can get safe policies at reasonable rates.

We bespeak for our brother a cordial welcome, for he is not only a good Mason and a live business man, but he is a "chiel" among good fellows.

Lingering Yet.

The impression made upon us at Lincoln is still strong, at the installation services, by Prof. Beisenberry. The first piece was a prayer from "Moses in Egypt:" an oratorie. The second was a Masonic ode—"Once more beneath the lights that ruled:" by J. R. Thomas. The last was a hymn out of the Carmina Sacra. The first piece was grand, the second beautiful; the music was all excellent. W. Bro. Geo. W. Parker is the Master of Lincoln Lodge No. 210, and W. Bro. J. F. Benner, the Master of Logan Lodge No. 480.

We are under many obligations to Bro E. Burton, Secretary No. 480, for these items.

☞ We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Sir Knight J. B. Hammond, on our last page.

Agent for the Trowel in New Orleans.

Our old friend Bro. Geo. L. Cross has returned to New Orleans, and will resume THE TROWEL agency in that city. He reports that Masonry is in a flourishing condition there, and that the TROWEL is very popular among the brethren. We know that he will receive a hearty welcome and warm support in the "Cresent City."

Two-Thirds Vote.

Bro. Holmes, of the New York Dispatch, holds that where Masonic law or usage require a two-thirds vote, that the vote of two-thirds of the members present is necessary to carry a proposition. So do we.

Tidings.

Items.

The Department of the Interior states that 47,479,619 acres of public lands remain unsold in the Southern States. There are no unsold lands in Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, or Texas.

Salt Lake City is now connected by rail with the Union Pacific.

In excavating beneath the rock at Campbell's Chain, in the bed of the Mississippi River, seven miles above Davenport, some very fine specimens of coal have lately been discovered. It is very light, resembling cannel coal, quite clear, and burns with a light flame, giving out but little smoke or soot. The extent of this coal vein has not, of course, been determined. It seems to underlie the whole of Campbell's Island, which has an extent of seven hundred acres, and dips southward, but to what depth is not known. The vein is six feet in thickness, and is remarkably free from slate and dirt. There is no doubt that the discovery can be made available, and the coal thrown into market.

Our Omro brethren, at Omro, Wisconsin, also give good gifts. Their W. M., brother A. H. Howard, was presented with a gold watch and chain January 11. The watch was made by the National Watch Company.

PRETTY TEACHER.—"Now, Johnny Wells, can you tell me what is meant by a miracle?"

JOHNNY.—"Yes, teacher. Mother says if you don't marry the new parson, 'twill be a miracle!"

Oshkosh is said to have the best school-house in Wisconsin. Grand Master Bouck and Past Grand Master Washburn live there.

A 60 page pamphlet is to be issued by the Legislature of Montana, setting forth the advantages of emigration to that territory.

The Fremont Journal, published at Fremont, Nebraska, brings us an elegant address delivered by Hon. E. H. Rogers, before the lodge in that place on the 27th December last.

Two copies Home Book for January, at hand.

Bro. Bounseville's article on the "Social Influence of Masonry," pnblished in the December TROWEL, is copied at length in the London Magazine and Mirror.

Austin, Texas, is on two streams flowing from the west and east into the river Colorado. It was made the seat of government in 1839, and the Texan Congress assembled there until 1844, when Texas was admitted as a State into the Federal Union.

Seton, Deputy Grand Secretary Ireland, was superseded, and refused to give up the books; whereupon he was expelled, of which public notice was given. He sued for defamation, and after an able discussion was defeated, the court deciding that the publication of expulsions to be lawful.

An editor wrote that two thousand car-loads of oats had come over the roads from the west to the east. The compositor made the types read cats instead of oats.

ILLINOIS STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—The report of John Bunn, Treasurer of the State Agricultural Society, shows the following satisfactory result: Cash balance on hand July 1, 1869, $3,905; amount received from the State, $3,000; receipts from State Fair, $20,502.74. Total, $27,407.70. Total expenses, $20,584.74. The balance on hand, $6,822.96.

MISSOURI'S COTTON CROP.—Missouri is not a cotton State, but some of the lower counties can bring forth very profitable crops of the "flocculent potentate" when they try. The last monthly report of the Department of Agriculture, at Washington, says that "the cotton crop of Stoddard and Dunklin counties, Missouri, for 1869, which was estimated at eight thousand bales, it is now believed will reach twelve thousand bales. The crop of these counties in 1859 was twenty-six thousand bales."

The value of the 12,000 bales of last year, at 450 pounds each, at 23 cents a pound, would be $1,236,000.

Our good brother and Sir Knight F. H. Moseley, the capital Secretary of Monitor Lodge, at Elgin, was presented with a fine collection of books, valued at over one hundred dollars, on the evening of January 6. Among them was a costly Bible, and valuable works by Mackey, Oliver, Mitchell, Pike, and McClenachan.

A new chapter has been instituted at Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, under the protection of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, being the first in that territory. The following are the first officers as authorized by the General Grand High Priest: G. D. Fogleson, H. P.; Hy. J. Rogers, K.; and Jervis Jocelyn, S. The date of their institution as officially recorded, is December 27, 1869.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—ISA. 8, 20.

1. No one but a past or present Master of a lodge can install the officers of a lodge.

2. A Master, installed inte office, is a Past Master in rank. The term present is used to indicate his position, and prevent misapprehension.

3. A Master about to retire, has the right to install his successor in the absence of the Grand Master or a deputy.

4. If a brother arraigned upon charges, pleads that he intended to effect a lawful result by unlawful means, that alone proves deliberation and intention, and adds seriously to his guilt.

5. Where an applicant is rejected by lodge A., subsequently applies to lodge B., and consent is refused by lodge A., such refusal is a second rejection, and the candidate must wait one year.

6. It is not necessary for Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts from other Grand Jurisdictions, to obtain consent of the lodge in which they were made, in order to apply for advancement. But evidence of good standing is indispensable.

7. Wherever a lodge has ceased to exist, or has become dormant, or is temporarily suspended, leaving the members in good standing, demits will be granted by the Grand Secretary upon the payment of all arrearages and fees, upon proper application, approved by the Grand Master.

8. No diploma, demit, or traveling certificate should be issued to any Mason of either degree while under charges.

Impostor.

IRELAND IND.,

Dear Trowel:

About a month and a half ago a woman named NANCY JOHNSON, and representing herself to be the widow and sister of Master Masons, applied to the Charity Committee of this lodge, for pecuniary assistance. She stated that she had relatives in this vicinity, whom she had come to visit, and owing to protracted sickness, her means were insufficient to take her home, and that she was obliged to apply to the Fraternity for assistance, in consequence of her relatives refusing to help her. The Charity Committee believing her story to be genuine gave her the amount she called for, $15.00, and reported the same to the lodge, which was received. Since that time it has been ascertained that she was an impostor, and altogether unworthy of the assistance which she received. We are also informed that she has practiced the same imposition on other lodges in this State (Indiana), and in Illinois.

We therefore warn all lodges and Masons of her doings, as she is well calculated to deceive.

Done by order of Ireland Lodge, No. 388, F. and A. M., in regular communication assembled, this 15th, day of December, 1869.

This is a large quarto volume of elevations and plans for cottages, villas, suburban residences, farm houses, stables and carriage houses, store fronts, school-houses, churches, court houses, and a model jail; also exterior and interior details for public and private buildings, together with approved forms of contracts and specifications, including prices of building materials and labor at Boston, Mass., and St. Louis, Mo. The book contains fifty-five plates, drawn to scale, showing the style and cost of building in different sections of the country. It is an original work, comprising designs of fifteen leading architects, representing the New England, Middle and Western States.

The work is exactly what its name denotes, a series of designs really suitable for towns and villages. The designs are inexpensive, yet neat, novel, and thoroughly practical. The details are very clearly exhibited, and many of them are so neat that they alone are, to practical men, worth the price of the book. The information is new, fresh, and reliable. Architects and builders cannot afford to be without this work, and every man contemplating building should make haste to procure a copy. Price, $10.60, post paid. Those desiring to possess books relating to architectural topics, should apply to A. J. Bicknell & Co., Architectural Book Publishers. Their list embraces most of the works of importance bearing upon the subject, any one of which is mailed free of charge on receipt of price. Catalogues of new architectural books and journals are sent free to any address.

Miscellaneous Reading.

Lion Huntiug.

The natives hunt the lions with guns or lances, whichever of these weapons they may chance to possess. Each of these arms was in use in the encounter which we give below, and which nearly proved fatal to Dr. Livingstone.

"The Bakatla of the village Mabotsa were much troubled by lions, which leaped into the cattle-pens by night and destroyed their cows. They even attacked the herds in open day. This was so unusual an occurrence, that the people believed they were bewitched—'given,' as they said, 'into the power of the lions by a neighboring tribe.' They went once to attack the animals, but being rather a cowardly people, compared to Bechunas in general on such occasions, they returned without killing any.

"It is well known that if one in a troop of lions is killed, the others take the hint and leave that part of the country. So the next time the herds were attacked, I went with the people in order to encourage them to rid themselves of the annoyance by destroying one of the marauders. We found the lions on a small hill about a quarter of a mile in length, and covered with trees. A circle of men was formed round it, and they gradually closed up, ascending pretty near to each other.

"Being down below on the plain with a native schoolmaster, named Mebalwe, a most excellent man, I saw one of the lions sitting on a piece of rock within the now closed circle of men. Mebalwe fired at him before I could, and the ball struck the rock on which the animal was sitting. He bit at the spot struck, as the dog does at a stick or stone thrown at him; then leaping away, broke through the opening circle and escaped unhurt. The men were afraid to attack him, perhaps on account of their belief in witchcraft. When the circle was reformed, we saw two other lions in it, but we were afraid to fire lest we should strike the men; and they allowed these beasts to burst through also. If the Bakatla had acted according to the custom of the country, they would have spared the lions in their attempt to get out. Seeing we could not get them to kill one of the lions, we bent our footsteps towards the village. In going round the end of the hill, however, I saw one of the beasts sitting on a piece of rock as before, but this time he had a little bush in front. Being about forty yards off, I took a good aim at his body through the bush, and fired both barrels into it. The men then called out, 'He is shot! he is shot!' others cried, 'He has been shot by another man, too; let us go to him!' I did not see any one else shoot at him, but I saw the lion's tail erected in anger behind the bush, and turning to the people, said, 'Stop a little, till I load again.' When in the act of ramming down the bullets I heard a shout. Starting, and looking half round, I saw the lion just in the act of springing upon me."

This was the occasion on which Livingstone was knocked down, and, as it will be remembered, the lion quitted him to throw himself on the other aggressor: this one was bitten on the thigh. "Another man," he continues, "whose life I had saved before, after he had been tossed by a buffalo, attempted to spear the lion while he was biting Mebalwe. He left Mebalwe and caught this man by the shoulder, but at that moment the bullets he had received took effect, and he fell down dead. The whole was the work of a few moments, and must have been his paroxysm of dying rage. In order to take out the charm from him, the Bakatla on the following day made a huge bonfire over the carcase, which was declared to be that of the largest lion they had ever seen. Besides crunching the bone into splinters, he left eleven teeth wounds on the upper part of the arm."

To see Europeans at the work, let us now return to that buffalo which had started up at the approach of Messrs. Oswell and Vardon, and which we left at the moment when three lions were upon him tearing him with their teeth.

"We crept up within thirty yards, and kneeling down blazed away at the lions. One lion fell dead almost on the buffalo; he had merely time to turn towards us, seize a bush in his teeth, and drop dead with the stick in his jaws. The second made off immediately; and the third raised his head, coolly looked round for a moment, then went on tearing and biting at the carcase as hard as ever. We retired a short distance to load, then again advanced and fired: the lion made off, but a ball that he received ought to have stopped him, as it went clean through his shoulder-blade. He was followed up and killed, after having charged several times.".

The colonists generally hunt the lion on horseback. But they only hazard themselves on the plain. They go two or three together, in order to help each other in case of need, and if the game holds to any cover they send dogs in to induce it to show itself.

The attitude of the lion is very different according as he sees the hunters are near or at a distance. In the first case he flies with all his speed; in the other he moves to and fro with a fierce air, but without permitting himself to seem in the least trouble. When sharply pursued he soon slackens his pace, and at length stops, faces his enemies, shakes himself, and utters a short roar. This is the moment for action. The nearest hunter fires, and if he has missed his mark, or only wounded the lion, he gallops off; then comes the turn of the second, and in case of need of the third; and then, if this is not enough, the two first, who have by this time reloaded their guns, again enter the lists; and so they continue until the lion is at last obliged to acknowledge himself vanquished.

It is said that there has been no instance of a colonist paying the price of his life for the pleasures of this sport.

It is, however, not merely a pleasure; it is an absolute necessity for those who live in the remote parts of the colony, as they have to defend their cattle against the attacks of this insatiable marauder. "They are always eager for the chase," says Sparrman: "the peasants with whom I was hunting seemed only to long for an encounter, quite regardless of any possible danger likely to happen to them—from which, indeed, they felt themselves quite secure."

Le Vaillant tells of a widow who kept house by herself, and who, when wild beasts came to alarm her flocks, would mount on horseback, pursue them vigorously, and never give in until she had either killed them or driven them away from her canton.

We have seen the part which dogs bear in this sport—sometimes, indeed, they really do all the work. Twelve or fifteen of the dogs bred by Cape farmers will perform wonders. When the lion sees them approach, his pride prevents him from going away; he sits down and waits for them. Then the dogs surround him, and rushing on him all at once, they commence tearing him to pieces. They rarely give him time to strike more than one or two blows with his paws, each one of which, however, is sure and certain death to two or three of his assailaats.

The natives sometimes dig pitfalls for lions, as carefully concealed as possible; but it very rarely happens that the cautious animal is caught therein.

A traveler asserts that the following stratagem succeeded: "They place," says he, "the figure of a man near to some guns, disposed in such a manner that they will discharge themselves into the body of the animal the moment he springs on the mannikin. As this method is as easy as it is sure, and as they are not particularly anxions to take the lions alive, the colonists rarely put themselves to the trouble of laying pit-hole traps for them." There are, however, not wanting instances in which lions have discovered this mine.

"A lion," continues the same traveler, "had broken through the bars of a gateway into a walled enclosure in which the cattle were kept, and committed great ravages there. The people of the farm, not doubting but that he would return by the same way, bristled the entry with loaded firearms attached to a cord stretched across the gateway, and feeling quite satisfied that he could not enter without disturbing them. The lion returned a little before nightfall. He had probably some suspicion of this cord; he examined it with his paw, and, without exhibiting the least fear of the artillery roaring in his ears, entered boldly, and devoured the prey which he had left the previous evening."

To conclude this subject, we will describe the siege of a thick brake of underwood, in which a whole family of lions had taken up their domicile. An entire horde of Hottentots were on foot, armed with spears and other weapons. Even the women and children had joined the party—not to fight, but to look on. Le Vaillant commanded the expedition. The following is an abridgment of his account of the adventure:

"The thicket was about two hundred yards long by sixty wide. The space it occupied was lower than the surrounding land, so that to penetrate into it we had to descend. It was composed mostly of thorn bushes, with some mimosas which rose toward the center.

"In the impossibility of attacking the two formidable beasts in their entrenchment, it became a question as to the best method of getting them out of it. I decided to place my markesmen at short distances apart on the heights all round the wood, in such a manner that the lions could not gain the plain without being seen, being persuaded that as soon as we could get them into the open country we should find ourselves the strongest, and should not be long in gaining the victory.

"When we were all at our posts, oxen were driven in advance, and by dint of shouting and lashing we forced them into the thicket. At the same time my dogs began to bark; and in order to frighten the lions and compel them to come out, pistols were frequently discharged. The oxen, on scenting the enemy, fell back in terror, and rushed towards us; but, driven back by our clamoring, by the barking of the dogs, and the noise of our arms, they became furious, striking against each other and bellowing in a fearful manner. The lions, on their part, were now growing angry, and exhibited their rage by horrible roars. We heard them successively in all parts of the thicket, without their daring to show themselves anywhere. The collision of two opposing armies is not more clamorous than were their defiant roarings, confounded as they were with the animated shouts of the men, the noise of the dogs, and the furious bellowing of the oxen. This frightful concert lasted a good part of the morning, and I had already begun to despair of the success of our enterprise, when suddenly I heard piercing cries from the opposite side, immediately followed by the firing of a gun, and at the same time succeeded by shouts of joy. I ran over to the spot, and found the lioness expiring. She had at last sprung out of her stronghold and thrown herself furiously on my troop; but Klass had fired and shot her through the body. It was evident from the appearance of her udders that she had young ones, and I was not deceived in my conjectures. It occurred to me to make use of her body to attract them out of the thicket. With this design I caused her to be dragged out and placed at a certain distance, not doubting but that they would follow her scent and approach her, or perhaps that the male would follow, either to avenge her or to defend them.

"But my ruse was useless, and we spent several hours in vain waiting for them. The cubs, being disquieted at not seeing their mother, ran growling round the stronghold; and the male himself, separated from her, redoubled his angry roars. We saw him for an instant on the outskirt, his eyes on fire, his mane bristling up, and lashing his sides with his tail; but he was out of reach of my rifle. One of my gunners, posted more advantageously, missed him, and he disappeared. The sun was going down, and we decided to put off the affair until the following day. The following day the three lions had decamped."—Hunting Grounds of the World.

"Capital Fun."

It was a little past twelve o'clock, and a merry group of boys were seated on the young grass, under the trees that shaded the academy play-grounds. A little later, and they would be scattered in every direction at their play; but first they must attend to the contents of well-filled pails and baskets, where their dinners are stored away.

"I should like to know," said Howard Colby, "why Joe Green never comes out here to eat his dinner with the rest of us, but always sneaks off somewhere till we all get through?"

"Guess he brings so many goodies, he is afraid we shall rob him," said another.

"Pho!" said Will Brown, throwing himself back on the grass, "more likely he doesn't bring anything at all. I heard my father say that the family must be badly pinched since Mr. Green was killed; and mother said she didn't pity them, for folks had no business to be poor and proud."

"Well," said Sam Merrill, "I know Mary Green asked my mother to have plain sewing to do; but then folks do that sometimes that aren't very poor."

"And Joe is wearing his winter clothes all this warm weather, and his pants are patched behind—I saw them," said Howard Colby, with a very complacent look at his new spring suit of light gray.

"I tell you what, boys," said Will Brown, "let's look to-morrow, and see what the old fellow does bring anyway. You know he is always in his seat by the time the first bell rings, and we can get a peep into his basket, and then be in season for roll-call."

The boys agreed to this, but Ned Collins, who had sat quietly eating his dinner, and taking no part in the conversation. Now he simply remarked, as he brushed the crumbs from his lap, "I can't see what fun there will be in that, and it looks real mean and sneaking to me. I'm sure it is none of our business what Joe brings for dinner, or where he goes to eat it."

"You're always such a granny, Ned Collins," said Will Brown, contemptuously. "You've got every one of your old aunt Sally's notions."

Ned could not bear to be laughed at, and it made him a little angry to hear his kind old aunt sneered at, but his eyes only flashed for a minute, and then he sprang up, shouting, "Hurrah, boys, for foot-ball!" and in five minutes the whole play-ground was in an uproar of fun and frolic.

The next morning, at the first stroke of the bell, a half-dozen roguish faces peeped into the school-room, and, sure enough, there was Joe Green, busy plying his pencil over the problems of the algebra lesson. It was but the work of an instant to hurry into the little clothes-room, and soon the whole group was pressing around Will Brown, as he held the mysterious basket in his hand. Among them, in spite of the remonstrance of yesterday, was Ned Collins, with his fine face fairly crimson with shame, or something else; we shall see.

"It is big enough to hold a day's rations for a regiment," said Henry Colby, as Will pulled out a nice white napkin. Next come a whole newspaper, a large one, too; and then, in the bottom of the basket, was ONE LITTLE COLD POTATO; that was all. Will made a comical grimace, and the boys laughed, and cheered as loudly as they dared in the school-house.

"See here," said Howard, "lets throw it away and fill the basket with coal and things; it will be such fun to see him open it."

The boys agreed, and the basket was soon filled, and the napkin placed carefully on the top, and before the bell commenced tolling they were on their way down stairs.

Ned Collins was the last to leave the room, and no sooner did the last disappear than, quick as a flash, he emptied the coal into the box again, replaced the paper, and half-filled the basket, large as it was, with the contents of the bright tin pail that aunt Sally delighted to store with dainties for her darling's dinner. Ned was in his seat almost as soon as the rest, and all through the forenoon he looked and felt as guilty as the others, as he saw the sly looks and winks that were exchanged among them. Noon came, and there was the usual rush to the clothes-room for dinner baskets; but instead of going out to the yard, the boys lingered about the door and hall. Straight by them marched Ned Collins, with his pail on his arm.

"Hello, Ned," said Sam Merrill, "where are you going now?"

"Home," said Ned, laughing, "I saw aunt Sally making a chicken pie this morning and I am going home to get some."

"Ask me to go, too," shouted Howard Colby; but just at that moment they saw Joe Green carrying his basket into the school-room.

"I should think he'd suspect something," whispered Will Brown; "that coal must be awful heavy."

Joe disappeared in the school-room, and the curious eyes that peered through the crack of the door were soon rewarded by seeing him open his basket.

But apparently Joe only wished to get his paper to read, for he took it by the corner and pulled, but it was fast. He looked in surprise, and then in a sort of bewildered way, took out a couple of aunt Sally's great crispy doughnuts, then one of the delicious round pies he had often seen in Ned's hands, bread and butter, and such honey as nobody's bees but hers ever made, and the plump white breast of a chicken. It was a dinner fit for a king; so poor Joe thought, and so the boys thought, as they peeped wonderingly from their hiding-place. But Joe did not offer to taste it; he only sat there, and looked at it with a pale face, over which the tears began presently to flow very fast. Then he leaned his head on his desk, and Freddie Wilson, one of the smallest boys, whispered, "I guess he's praying;" so they all stole away to the play-ground without speaking another word.

"That's some of Ned Collin's work," said Will Brown, after a while. "It's just like him."

"I'm glad of it anyway," said Sam Merrill; "I've felt as mean all the forenoon as if I had been robbing a hen roost. The Greens are not to blame for only having cold potatoes to eat, and I don't wonder that Joe didn't want us fellows to know it."

"I like Joe Green the best of any boy in school," said little Freddie Wilson, "and I think it was too bad to try and make fun of him."

"Nobody asked what you thought," said Will Brown, fiercely, "wait till your opinion is called for."

The little boy looked very meek, and ate his dinner in silence, but the fact was Will Brown began to feel uncomfortable.

"Father says Mr. Green was the bravest man in the company," said Sam Merrill, "and that he wouldn't have been killed, only he thought of every one else before himself."

"I tell you what," said good-natured Tom Granger, "I move and second that we are all ashamed of ourselves; all in favor of this motion will signify it by giving three cheers for Ned Collins—there he comes this minute, brim full of chicken pie."

The boys sprang to their feet, and swinging their caps in the air, gave three hearty cheers for Ned Collins, and even Will Brown joined the chorus with as loud a hurrah as any of them. Sam Merrill explained the thing to Ned, and he only said in reply, "I've often heard aunt Sally say that 'it was a poor kind of fun that must be earned by hurting somebody's feelings,' and what aunt Sally says is almost always so."

The California Geysers.

Of the many wonders of California, among the most notable and least known are the Geysers. Every school boy can tell of the Geysers of Iceland, but few dream that we own almost their equals at home. We take the following graphic account of a recent visit to those California Geysers, from Dr. Todd's "Sunset Land," a book of rare merit, from which we have already quoted:

Let us now make a little excursion. We take the steamboat at the city, pass over the bay, enter the San Puebla Bay, take the cars, and go up the incomparably beautiful Napa Valley. You stop at Calistoga, where are hot springs, boiling hot, if you want, and sulphur springs to your heart's content. An early ride the next morning, of about twenty miles, brings you to the foot of a great mountain, over which you are to ride. This is called "Foss' Station," where you eat the best breakfast in California, because the morning ride has given you an appetite. "Foss" is an institution himself—a huge, well-proportioned, uneducated New Hampshire man, endowed with qualities which in any condition would make him a marked man; and you look at his brawny arms and powerful body almost with envy. But he has his six-horse team harnessed to an open wagon, and you are now off for the Geysers. You ascend a mountain five thousand feet high, up which you wind and creep till you come to a ridge about two miles long, and so straight that you can see the road two miles ahead. It is just possibly wide enough to let the wagon run on its edge, though to look at it in front it looks as if you were to ride on the edge of a rusty case-knife. Down upon this ridge the horses dash, and you see, if the wheels should vary a foot on either side, you would roll down into a gulf that makes you quiver to look at. But over it you pass; and now you are to go down the mountain into the canon below. You are to descend one thousand nine hundred feet in two miles. You tremble for the Pittsfield lady sitting calmly by the side of Foss, where she sees every danger, and shows no other effect of the strange situation than the brightening of the eye. Crack goes the whip, and the trained horses dash down upon the quickest gait horses ever did go, and after making thirty-five short turns, a failure at any one of which would break your limbs, if not your neck, you are at the bottom—just eleven minutes in coming down, holding your breath, throbbing with excitement, glad you have taken the awful leap once, and feeling very sure that whoever takes it hereafter must be a fool!

You are now in a deep canon, on every side of which the beautiful mountains rise up three thousand feet or more. Nothing can exceed their beauty. A large trout brook runs through the canon, stony, but the water is clear, cold, and beautiful. You go down and cross this brook at right angles, just where, out of another canon at right angles to this, you see another little brook meeting you. On either side of it the mountains rise high and steep. The bed of this canon and along this little brook is the home of the Geysers. The Geysers were originally found in Iceland, and the word Geyser is Icelandic, meaning "vehement," or "urgent," because a Geyser spouts out water, hot or cold, and sometimes mud with the water. You now feel that you are in a stange place; the ground burns your feet, the air chokes and suffocates you. The atmosphere is filled with the smell of sulphur, nitric acid, and every other disagreeable smell you can imagine. At your feet boils out a stream of alum. Perhaps two feet from that is another of nitric acid, or Epsom salts, or soda, or pure sulphur, or sulphuric acid, or amonia. Here is a deep-mouthed opening, up which is boiling a huge volume of liquid as black as ink. It is called the "Devil's Inkstand." The ink with which I am now writing this manuscript came from this inkstand, and I am using it just as it was made there. A little above is the "Witch's Caldron," perhaps seven feet in diameter, black, boiling, spouting, and raging. Its depth is unknown. All these are boiling, steaming hot; more than a thousand of these steam-holes are in this canon. On your left is the "Steamboat," where, high above your head, the steam spouts and roars like the letting off steam when the steamboat stops. Thrust your stick into the side of the hill anywhere, and the steam will rush out. You seem to be treading on the very borders of the infernal pit. What with the steam, the heat, the smells, your head grows dizzy and whirls, you pant for breath, and you hasten to get out. But you must stop at one more spot. It is called the "Devil's Tea-kettle," where the steam intermits, and sputters, and wheezes, as if groaning in chains. You stick your cane into it and, whew! it roars and sputters like a huge cat when a strange dog comes into the room. You almost expect to see the horns of the Evil One trust up next. The place is so strange that you want to stay longer, but feel it would kill you. You can compare it to nothing but hell. It is called, "the Pluton Canon." In the cool of the evening or morning, or in cold weather, the steam of this great concealed furnace rises up, and is seen afar off. Were a dome of ice to be thrown over it the steam would be so suffocating that nobody could go near it. There are probably hundreds, if not thousands, of orifices in which you could roast eggs. It is said that you might stand at the mouth of the canon and hook a trout in the big brook, and by turning round in your tracks, you could let him down and boil him in one of these little natural kettles.

By all I had read or heard, before visiting the Geysers, I had supposed them to be volcanic, and that fire was the cause of all this heat, and that it must be not very far from the surface of the earth, and that the Geysers were really safety-valves for the prevention of earthquakes. A very short examination convinced me that my notions were all wrong—that they are not volcanic, but a great chemical laboratory.

I found here iron—that which makes the inky water—alum, ammonia, sulphuric acid, nitric acid, sulphur, Epsom salts, in large crystals; acid water, which, sweetened a little, makes good lemonade; magnesia, soda, and one spring said to be extraordinary in its effects as an eye-water. The alum spring is one hundred and seventy-six degrees by the thermometer, and the Whitch's Caldron, one hundred and ninety-five and one-half degrees. Now, fill these great mountans with these several chemicals, and let in the water upon them, and let what is left of it make this little Pluton Brook, and you have all the phenomena which you find here. The whole region, abounding in sulphur springs and hot springs, is a hidden treasure of chemistry.

To me it seems clear that the day is coming when Science will come here and uncover these hidden things, and bring out, most likely, in almost fabulous quantities, the treasures here now concealed. I can almost imagine some Yankee standing over the Devil's Inkstand and dipping up ink enough for the use of a continent. Here, or near here, undoubtedly, is sulphur enough to furnish a nation with gun-powder; and I write down the Geysers, not merely as a place where men will go to be horrified, but where they will go, at a future day, for materials to be used for the good of men; and these that now seem to be the breathing-holes of the pit, are only the waymarks by which God shows us where to look for these chemicals, laid up till called for.

I am aware that this view destroys much of the romance of the thing; for it is far more romantic to feel that we have stood over a volcano, just ready to burst out, over regions infernal, where demons are panting, and struggling, and groaning, and you can almost hear the clanking of their chains, than to feel that you are in a huge chemical shop, where the chemicals have got thrown together, and water from the hydrant has broken out, and continues to run in among them. But that under this covering there are rich hidden treasures, which will one day bless the world, I have not a doubt.

Curious Ancient Dwellings in Arizona.

A correspondent of the Cleveland Herald, writing from Arizona, Sept. 20, gives an account of very interesting observations made by a party from the military post at Camp Verde, in which vicinity are found numerous caves in the hill-sides, that were once occupied as dwellings by a race now extinct. The whole country between the "Sierra Prieta" and the "Moyallon" ranges of mountains is a limestone formation, and full of caverns, some of which are quite extensive. All along the bluffs of the Rio Verde, and Beaver Creek, wherever these caves exist, they are found to have been the dwelling places of a race of people which has long since passed away, and about which not even mythology tells a tale; but it is generally supposed that they are of a very ancient character—probably older than the Aztecs, of Mexico. The observations made were in the vicinity of what is known as "Montezuma's Well." The writer says:

"All around the well, in the high walls, were caves, which, too, had once been occupied, and, from their sheltered position, all remain nearly as perfect to-day as when they were abandoned, probably hundreds of years ago. The openings are built up with masonry, through which are left small entrances and loopholes for protection. The walls overhead are blackened with the smoke of their fires, now so old that it will not rub off. The plastered walls show the prints of their hands as plainly as if they were made but yesterday. Corn cobs, pieces of gourds, mescal and seeds are found in the plaster, which is conclusive proof that they were an agricultural people, and, for a similar reason, it is believed that they were a manufacturing people, as a good article of cloth and pieces of common twine have been found in these caves, and which were preserved in the same manner.

To-day we discovered a new cave, which no white man had ever seen before; it was evidently the Gibralter of this ancient city—the name of which to us is forever lost. Upon entering the great front room, in every direction was seen little rooms, where niches in the rocks had been built up with loop-holed walls, forming, as it were, counterscarp galleries, as interior lines of defence impregnable to any enemy, except starvation. Leading from here are numerous passages, which have not yet been explored. One passage led down into a bed chamber, at the lower end of which a stream of water was found, evidently a branch of the outlet to the well. Owing to the poor improvised torch that we had, it was not deemed prudent to explore any of the passages leading from this room.

These caves are a strange place to live in; some of them are up almost perpendicular walls of rock to a considerable height. And under extreme difficulties, with an incredible amount of labor, they have carried great rocks, immense timbers, and other building material, where it is almost impossible now for a man to go.

Stone, metals upon which they ground their corn, acorns, and mesquit beans, pieces of broken ollas, in which they cooked their food, and pieces of pottery, painted and glazed, are found everywhere. It seems as if every inhabitable place teemed with life, and that this country was once as densely populated as any of the Eastern States of the Union are to-day.

The most perfect of any of these ruins, and which is in the best state of preservation, is in a cave on Beaver Creek, about one mile and a half from Camp Verde. It is in a perpendicular wall of rock, between two and three hundred feet in height; the lower entrance is over one hundred feet above the valley below. It is four stories in height, and, like all of the others, has its interior lines of defense. The floors are elaborately constructed of small timbers, covered with straight sticks placed closely together, and upon this is placed the cement for flooring, usually six inches thick. The upper floors seem to have been constructed entirely for defense. A crenated wall, breast high, overhangs the whole structure, from which can be seen the entire surrounding country, and from its giddy height a stone can be thrown into the river, one hundred and fifty feet below.

The excellent state of preservation of the wood and materials used in these caves is due to their sheltered position, and the dry, hot climate of the country. Were it not for this, nothing would have been known of these people, as everything perishable, which has been used in the construction of these houses, has decayed whenever it has been exposed to the weather.

Much has been said of these ruins, and many speculations have been made as to the builders; but it is all speculation, as no one knows who they were.—Keystone.

Legends of the Ass and Mule.

The legends respecting the Ass are as quaint as they are innumerable. According to an old Rabbinical legend, no being could enter the ark unless Noah tendered a special invitation. When the flood overwhelmed the world, the devil, who was at the time wandering on the earth, saw that he was about to be cut off from contact with mankind, and that his dominion would be lost forever. The ark being completed, and the beasts called to enter it in their proper order, the Ass's turn came in due course. Sadly enough for us humans, the Ass was taken with a fit of obstinacy, and refused to enter the vessel according to order. Noah finally lost patience, and struck the animal sharply, crying at the same time to the headstrong beast: "Enter, thou devil!" Rash and fatal words! the invitation was of course, at once accepted, the devil entered the ark. We may be sure he gave the patriarch, and his family much trouble during the voyage, and he was on hand to begin operations again on dry land as soon as the disembarkment should take place.

Concerning the Mule we find the following legend: When the Holy Family was about to travel into Egypt, St. Joseph chose a mule to carry them. He was in the act of saddling the animal when it kicked him, after the fashion of mules. Angry with it for such misconduct, St. Joseph substituted an ass for the mule, thus giving the former the honor of conveying the family into Egypt, and laid a curse upon it that it should never have parents nor descendants of its own kind, and that it should be so disliked as never to be admitted into its master's house, as is the case with the horse and other domesticated animals. Although there is no mention in the Scriptures of the fact that the Holy Family rode upon an ass, such a mode of travel is certainly the one which they would adopt.—Hours at Home for December.

THE CUNNING OF A FOX.—When living in Rosshire, I went one morning in July before daybreak, to endeavor to shoot a stag, which had been complained of very much by an adjoining farmer, as having done great damage to his crops. Just after it was daylight, I saw a large fox come quietly along the edge of the plantation in which I was concealed; he looked with great care over the turf-wall into the field, and seemed to long very much to get hold of some hare that were feeding in it—but apparently knew that there was no chance of catching one by dint of running; after considering a short time, he seemed to have formed his plans; and having examined the different gaps in the wall by which the hares might be supposed to go in and out, he fixed upon the one that seemed the most frequented, and laid himself down close to it in an attitude like a cat watching a mouse-hole. Cunning as he was, he was to intent on his own hunting to be aware that I was within twenty yards of him with a loaded rifle, and able to watch every movement he made; I was much amazed to see the fellow so completely outwitted, and kept my rifle ready to shoot him if he found me out and attempted to escape. In the meantime I watched all his plans; he first, with great silence and care, scraped a small hollow in the ground, throwing up the sand as kind of screen between his hiding place and the hares' meuse—every now and then, however, he stopped to listen, and sometimes to take a most cautious peep into the field; when he had done this, he laid himself down in a convenient posture for springing upon his prey, and remained perfectly motionless, with the exception of an occasional reconnoitre of the feeding hares. When the sun began to rise, they came one by one from the field to the cover of the plantation; three had already come in without passing by his ambush, one of them came within twenty yards of him, but he made no movement beyond crouching still more flatly to the ground—presently two came directly toward him; though he did not venture to look up, I saw by an involuntary motion of his ears, that those quick organs had already warned him of their approach; two hares came through the gap together, and the fox, springing with the quickness of lightning, caught one and killed her immediately; he then lifted up his booty and was carrying it off like a retriever, when my rifle-ball stopped his course by passing through his backbone, and I went up and dispatched him. After seeing this, I never wondered again as to how a fox could make prey of animals much quicker than himself, and apparently quite as cunning.

George D. Prentice Dead.

The telegrams inform us that the scholar, poet, editor, gentleman, George D. Prentice, died at his residence, in Louisville, Kentucky, yesterday morning, at ten minutes before four o'clock. In the death of this gentleman we feel that one of America's brightest lights has gone out. He possessed more qualities of a first order for an editor than probably any man in the United States, and though he has never arisen in wealth as some have, we believe he has made a name that will live longer than any other American editor. Coming from an eastern State when just verging into manhood, he took charge of the editorial columns of the Louisville Journal, and for almost forty years has held that position with the highest distinction. In politics he was argumentative. In wit no man equaled him, and many of his poems will live as long as the English language is in existence. But yesterday we all read with admiration his Ode "The Dying Year." To day the world will read with tears: Prentice is dead!

Aside from his pen he is well and favorably known as a lecturer of rare ability, and while he will be missed from the sanctum, the lecture hall and the political arena, he will be more missed from the domestic and social circle, for a better husband or kinder and more indulgent parent was not to be found. Knowing him personally as we did, we can but feel our utter lack of ability to do his memory justice, and leave it to abler and more experienced hands, asking only to mingle our tears with those of the nation as they are shed at the stoppage of the workings of one of the brightest minds America has ever known.—Wm. Rounseville.

Married.

In Grove City, Feb. 1, 1870, at the house of Dr. J. G. Harvey, by Rev. J. B. Colwell, Mr. FREDERICK H. HENSHIE, Secretary of Fisher Lodge No. 585, to Miss CLARA A. LILLIE, of Mass.

Died.

The deceased was a member of Centralia Lodge No. 201, and leaves a wife and family of children. The usual resolutions were adopted.

Also, at Newton, Jan. 23, Bro. JOHN WINTERROWD, a member of Newton Lodge No. 216, and of Newton Chapter No. 109, aged 68 years.

The deceased had long been a Mason, and was devotedly attached to the Institution. He was buried with Masonic honors.

She leaves a family consisting of her husband and three small children; also many warm friends. Bro. Marquis truly has our sympathy in this great bereavement. Mrs. M. died as she had lived, a true Christian; and we believe that Bro. M. will never forget in whom he puts his trust.

HOLY-LAND LECTURES.

To the Several Masonic Lodges in Illinois, or Elsewhere.

After an extensive tour through Syria, Palestine, and the Holy Land, where I spent several months making explorations interesting to all BIBLE AND MASONIC STUDENTS, I am now prepared to deliver one public lecture, and one Masonic and private. The entire community will be interested in and instructed by the public lecture.

My charge for the course is thirty dollars. Any Lodge that will make arrangements for the Lectures, in addition to the benefit derived from them, can make a clear and substantial gain, sufficient to buy a floor-carpet, a melodeon, a set of jewels, official clothing, or Lodge furniture, or a surplus in money.

Address the subscriber at Fulton, Whiteside county, for engagements or further information.

Poetry.

The Rose by the Wayside.

BY D. A. BROWN.

A little rose bloomed in the way
In which I roamed one sunny day;
It looked so fair,
I wondered why alone it grew,
And why so long concealed from view,
While nestling there.

Its blushing petals wide out spread,
A richer perfume quickly shed,
Dripping with dew.
Which seemed in whispered tones to say,
As soon I put the thorns away,
"I bloomed for you."

"The sunshine kissed my lips at morn,
Soon as I peeped to hail the dawn,
With blushes red;
I was content through day to day;
No roaming footsteps passed this way
By beauty led."

I claimed the treasure, pure and fair,
As all mine own; with special care
I kept it long;
I said sweet sayings o'er and o'er;
But one bright morn it spoke no more;
Its leaves were gone.

Thus in the varied paths of life,
Amid its cares, its toils, its strife,
We often roam;
Then some sweet memories charm us here,
Some holy thoughts dispel all fear,
And guide us home.

And when earth's charms, like withered flowers,
Amid affliction's darkest hours,
No longer cheer,
A holy peace, a quiet joy,
Which unbelief can ne'er destroy,
Brings Heaven near.

Clannishness of Masonry.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

In these days when it is attempted to create an organized opposition to Masonry, it may be neither uninteresting nor inappropriate to examine some of the more prominent faults ascribed to it, by those who have assigned themselves the duty of expunging it from the record of history. I hear of no objection to Masonry oftener urged, after its secrets, than that which is written at the head of this article. By this term is usually meant that Masonry influences its members to become exclusive in their associations—clannish not only in feeling, but in action—and more inclined, as the influences of the Association are stronger, to confine their good offices to members instead of allowing them to go out to all the forms of want and misery. I am perfectly aware how foolish such a charge must sound in the ear of a Mason, and how needless the task of defending the Institution against it, will appear to the well-informed member. But I do not write for the benefit of this class exclusively. There are hundreds and thousands of well-disposed and honest men in our country, who believe most faithfully that such is the legitimate, natural, and unfailing influence of an institution spread over the whole earth.

This wide-spread belief of the clannish nature and influence of Masonry usually finds expression in the acknowledgment of its power as a controller of human action—of its immense influence as a moral agent. So we may be allowed to assume that it has a strong moral bearing upon the character and conduct of its members. What that influence is—in what or whose behalf it is exerted, shall be the subject of the present paper.

The mere fact of association—the assembling together of different individuals—the formation of intimate acquaintances, and the engagement in the same pursuits when assembled, can be urged against Masonry no more than against the Christian church. That organization contemplates and produces all the conditions to produce clannishness among the members, that are presented by the Masonic Institution. In that organization men are associated together; they assemble in social parties; they establish intimate acquaintance with each other, and their pursuits when assembled, are identical. Why then should we not charge that the Christian religion and the Christian church are clannish in their influences? Simply, I apprehend, because of the broad spirit of their teachings, the catholic character of their doctrines, and the expansive views of God and his government that are entertained. When the Christian church does become the vehicle of clanship, and its influence is exerted to create a feeling of exclusiveness among the members, then it loses sight of the object of its establishment, and becomes not a Christian church in spirit and action, but an anti-Christian conventicle.

Now, all we ask for Masonry in this regard, is what any professed Christian demands for his church; judgment by our principles. On second thought, we will not ask even this just concession. We will place our defense on a broader ground than any church has dared to do, and say that neither in spirit nor in action is Masonry clannish; then neither our principles nor our practice justify the charge that Masons are clannish.

One of the first lessons taught in Masonry is that no man is to be regarded for his outward condition in life. The millionaire is no more in the presence of Masonry than he who earns his daily bread by the sweat of his brow. It is character and not riches, or social standing, or political station that weigh in the just balance of Masonry. Moral worth outweighs riches, and a good name is better than power. This is one of the fundamental principles of Masonry, inculcated in the first lesson, and impressed upon the candidate as soon as he stands within the threshold of the Lodge. What is the influence? What must infallibly be the influence of such a principle thus enforced? If it induces a feeling of exclusiveness, and cultivates a clannish spirit, it must be of a class in which good moral character and conduct are the recognized tests of admission.

But there is another lesson taught in the lodge even before this, that has the effect to neutralize even this otherwise possible leaning to clanship. It is that great first fact that underlies all religions—all moral truth—that there is a God who created all men, and that hence all are brethren. This is the corner-stone of our moral and Masonic edifice—the foundation of the structure which we labor to rear to the glory of the Divine Architect, and for the good of mankind.

And these principles, the Fatherhood of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, and the equality of nature wherever found, are continually kept before the minds of the members by lesson, lecture, rite, and symbol. The lodge is never closed without a recognition of both of these fundamental doctrines of nature and revelation. Is it reasonable that these have no influence on the characters and conduct of those who are compelled to listen to their enunciation, and to reflect upon their bearings upon human destiny? The truths of the Christian religion are enforced by appeals to reason and conscience, and the most salutary effects are believed to result from the frequent enunciations of its principles. In the lodge we study to enforce, by all the measures that the experience of ages point out as the most successful, some of those truths. Lessons that bring the matter home to the feelings, judgment, and consciences of men, are made use of to convey moral instruction. Symbols, the most ancient, as well as the most impressive, mediums of conveying moral truths to the mind, are used in such a manner that the initiate can not forget their teachings. He can not dismiss them from his mind if he would, for they are so frequently before him that they prove a constant reminder of duty, and point to the path that leads along the level of time and exhort him: "This is the way! walk ye in it! Turn ye neither to the right hand nor to the left."

Now is it likely that an association of men, professing to be governed by such principles, listening to the perpetual enunciation of such truths, and endeavoring to practice according thereto, will become exclusive in action, clannish in spirit, and set at nought all the lessons they have in the secret meeting when it is enjoined upon them to practice out of the lodge those principles and duties they learn in it? can it be possible that the study of the lessons will superinduce a departure from the tenets of our profession, and a worse being and more exclusive be wrought out by that means? It is folly to say so. It is unreasonable to believe it. It is not believed of any other association.

The various temperance associations have ceremonies and rites, charges and lectures, all intended to impress upon the minds of those who enter their portals, the necessity and duty of being temperate in the matter of strong drink. Who ever heard it asserted that these ceremonies had no effect to make them more observant of the duties inculcated? And yet this is precisely what is charged against Masonry. The Christian church depends upon its rites and the frequent enunciation of its principles to incline its members to travel in the narrow path that leads to life. But whoever heard it contended that these rites and lectures had an opposite effect from what is intended?

And yet this is just what is charged against us as the effect of our teaching by the level and the square.

Judged by the same rules that are applied to other associations of men, it is absolutely certain that Masonry does not make its members clannish. We know that from the very nature of the case, that such a result would be impossible. But we have another method of deciding this question that may, perhaps, be still more satisfactory and conclusive. We appeal to actual facts. We are frequently told that among the Fraternity there may be nothing of this exclusive feeling, but in the intercourse of Masons with the world, they prefer each other, and are supercillious to others. This is untrue. We defy any enemy of the lodge to prove this to be a fact in a single neighborhood.

They may prefer the company of brothers and their families, and associate with them on more intimate terms than they do with some others who are not members. That is natural. We love best those with whom we are best acquainted. As a general rule acquaintance begets friendship. It does in the lodge where all the circumstances are favorable to the reception of good impressions. But the same rule holds good in families. We love our nearest relations who live near us, most. Next come the friends who are not related to us by the ties of blood. Then those more distant and less known come in for the proper share of attention, and the general fact is, that they are dear to us in the same ratio that they are our intimates.

But it does not follow because we love those with whom we most intimately associate, more than strangers, that we despise strangers. Neither does it prove the clannish or exclusive spirit of Masons, that they regard those with whom they associate on the most intimate terms, with warmer feelings than they do those who are comparative strangers.

These are the facts in relation to the leveling principles and teachings of Masonry, and instead of fostering an exclusive, or clannish spirit they enjoin, that a worthy man, wherever found, is the peer of a member; that virtue, honesty, and honor are the attributes that must command our veneration, whether met with in or out of the pale of the Fraternity. No true Mason allows his heart to be shut up to the virtues and good qualities of his neighbor, because he is not an integral part in the great Fraternity.

I have intended in this paper to appeal to the practical, every-day character of Masons, to sustain the position taken, but I am admonished that my alloted space is occupied and that point must be deferred.

District Grand Lodges.

Mr. Editor:—The Masonic Fraternity of this State, has every reason to be proud of the ability, intelligence, and moral worth which characterize the members of the Grand Lodge. No body of equal numbers stand higher or commands more general respect; but what avails ability, if it has no field for its exercise? The age is essentially utilitarian. Whatever is not useful is soon discarded. The first condition of existence is usefulness. To such an extent do these ideas prevail, that every man, possessed of a nice sense of honor, occupying a high or important position, feels degraded if he cannot make some useful return for these honors. He loses self-respect, and the loss of self-respect is soon followed by the loss of the respect of his fellows.

There are now 610 chartered lodges in this State, and, from present appearances, the number will soon reach 1,000. At present, the persons entitled to seats in the Grand Lodge, exclusive of Past Masters, number nearly 2,000. The average attendance is about 600. It must be apparent to all, that what is called the business of the Grand Lodge, cannot be transacted by so unwieldy a body in the short period of time usually occupied by its sessions; and such in fact is the case: its business is done by the committees. They are necessarily called together several days before the meeting of the Grand Lodge to do its work, and that body is compelled, under the circumstances, to adopt their reports substantially without investigation. The approval of the reports of the committees have become a matter of form; the committees to all intents and purposes, have become the Grand Lodge. The ordinary representative, whatever may be his abilities, cannot vote intelligently upon nine-tenths of the questions that come before him. He is obliged to take the report of the committees on trust. There is scarcely more than two matters upon which he acts intelligently, and they are—to draw his pay and go home.

It is, doubtless, a source of great satisfaction to be able to visit Springfield or Chicago once a year, meet old friends, and have a good time; and if this was done at the expense of the representative, the effect would not be so bad; but all understand that these enjoyments are at the expense of the Craft; and being so, and being without any adequate return, the effect cannot be otherwise than demoralizing on the representative, and productive of heart-burnings and jealousies among the Craft. What I desire is to utilize the ability of each of these Masters and Wardens, by gathering the whole into bodies where their abilities may be rendered useful to the Craft.

Several plans have been proposed to remedy the existing evils; one is to cut off the right of Wardens to represent their lodges in Grand Lodge. But, if there were no other objections to this plan, it would be still unavailing, because it would leave the Grand Lodge with about 700 regular members, and would not materially reduce its numbers. It is now rare for more than one representative from a lodge to attend the Grand Lodge.

Another proposition is to divide the Grand Lodge; but independent of the fact that such a division would soon, have to be followed by divisions of the new bodies, each being at the start too large for the proper transaction of business, I cannot bring myself to believe that the Craft will ever consent to such a proceeding. The old memories and the strong cords of affection which bind together the Masons of this whole State, are too powerful to be broken asunder.

The next is the District Grand Lodge plan, and in presenting it to the Craft I beg leave to say, that I am in no hurry for its adoption. If it has merits, it will bear any amount of investigation; and a little delay can work no great harm. If it has no merit, or if some better plan can be suggested, then it would be a great misfortune to adopt it. I shall not undertake to give in this communication much more than the outlines of the plan; the details will be given when called for. The change proposed is quite radical, and will render necessary a reconstitution of the Grand Lodge, as well as the creation of the District Grand Lodges.

In accordance with the usual mode of treating of Masonic bodies, I commence with the Constitution and powers of the Grand Lodge.

The Grand Lodge should consist of all Past Grand Masters, all Past Deputy Grand Masters, all Past Grand Wardens, the elected and appointed officers, for the time being, of the Grand Lodge, and ten representatives from each of the District Grand Lodges. The officers of the Grand Lodge should be as at present, and that body should meet biennially, and whenever called together by the Grand Master. The Grand Lodge and its officers should have the same paramount authority and control over the lodges and their officers, as at present, and the same authority and control over the District Grand Lodges and their officers, that said Grand Lodge and officers have over the subordinate lodges and their officers. It should have the exclusive power of granting dispensations and charters for new lodges and of arresting the same when deemed necessary.

DISTRICT GRAND LODGES.

The State should be divided into ten districts, having regard in the formation of such districts to territory, number of lodges and num- of affiliated Masons, each district to constitute a District Grand Lodge, and to be numbered respectively from one to ten. Each District Grand Lodge should consist of all Past District Grand Masters and Wardens, the elected and appointed officers for the time being of said bodies, all Masters and Wardens of lodges within the jurisdiction of said District Grand Lodges, together with all Past Masters of lodges within said jurisdiction.

Such District Grand Lodges should meet annually; should have a financial system of their own, the same as lodges; should have judicial and legislative powers, and all appeals from the lodges should in the first instance be to the District Grand Lodge, and an appeal should be in all cases from the District Grand Lodges to the Grand Lodge.

All powers of the District Grand Lodges, should be exercised strictly in obedience to and in conformity with the constitution, by-laws, and edicts of the Grand Lodge, and the ancient landmarks of the Order.

At the annual meeting of the District Grand Lodges, immediately preceding the biennial meeting of the Grand Lodge, each District Grand Lodge should elect seven representatives at large from such district who, with the first three officers of the District Grand Lodge, to-wit: the District Grand Master, and the District Grand Wardens should constitute the representatives of such District Grand Lodge to the Grand Lodge. Such representatives should be present or past Masters of some lodge within said district.

Each District Grand Lodge should pay, biennially, to the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge, for the use of said Grand Lodge, the sum of twenty cents for each member of every lodge within its jurisdiction, and the representatives of such District Grand Lodge should not be admitted to their seats in the Grand Lodge until such dues are paid. Some of the advantages of the proposed plan are:

1. Each of the District Grand Lodges will have an average at the present time of about 65 lodges within its jurisdiction, and consequently will not be so large but that every member who desires can take an intelligent part in its proceedings, and the body thereby will have the benefit of the wisdom and experience of each member.

2. It will obviate the necessity of building an expensive Grand Lodge hall. The Grand Lodge will be so reduced in numbers that it can be held in the Masonic hall of any considerable town in the State.

3. It will be a direct saving to the Craft of $5,000 to $7,000 per year. In making these calculations, I make no account of the per diem expense, as that would probably be about the same under either system. The average mileage paid to the representatives attending the Grand Lodge at Springfield, is about $15, the average number of miles traveled being about 150. The mileage of 600 representatives at Springfield, would be, say $9.000.

The average distance traveled by members to the District Grand Lodges would not exceed twenty-five miles, which would give $2.50 to each member, or $1,500 for 600 members. Then, suppose the Grand Lodge meets every two years and has 140 members; their mileage would amount to $2,100, the half being $1,050, which, added to the $1,500 mileage of District Grand Lodges would make an annual mileage expense of $2,550 under the proposed plan against $9,000 under the present system; I may add the further consideration, that the financial affairs of the District Grand Lodges, being nearer to and more immediately under the supervision of the Craft, would be likely to be conducted with greater economy than what is now practiced in the Grand Lodge.

R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson's Lecture!

In the December and January numbers of THE TROWEL, I advertised to deliver three public lectures on the Holy Land, and one Masonic or private lecture on Masonic researches in and around Jerusalem. Since that time engagements have come in from all parts of the State, so that it will be impossible to attend to them all this winter; therefore I have concluded to change the programme, and give but two lectures in a place; one for Master Masons only, on Masonic researches in Jerusalem, Syria, and Palestine. I will also give an account of Masonry in Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, and exhibit some interesting relics from the Holy Land, with an account of my visits to the English lodges, with their forms of initiating, passing, and raising, schools of instruction, banquets, signs, passes, etc. My charge for this is twenty dollars and expenses. While the public lecture will be descriptive of Jerusalem, the Mosque of Omar, Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Easter in the Holy City, Gethsemane, Mount of Olives, &c., if the lodge desire it, I will add this to the Masonic lecture for ten dollars more; for admission to this lecture you can charge such sum as you see fit; properly managed, it will pay the entire expenses, and ought to leave a fair surplus.

MT. AYR, Iowa, February 1st, 1870.

H. G. Reynolds, Jr., Publisher Trowel:

DEAR SIR AND BRO: I am a subscriber to THE TROWEL, and have before me your paper of January 15th, with supplement containing what I would term a quarrel between you and one J. S. Hanna, who it appears has written an article for the Mystic Star, in which allusion is made to you and your father in no very brotherly manner; and I also notice that your comments upon said article lacks the same spirit of brotherly love and forbearance. I also notice the same spirit exhibited between you and the editors of the Evergreen and Freemason, and I am not alone when I say that all good and true Masons regret to hear of, and especially to see published to the world this spirit of unkindness, not to say enmity, among the journals of our Order. Such a spirit is certainly not in conformity with the teachings of Free masonry and should therefore be at all times avoided. If you can not view certain matters in the same light and must vent your feelings in writing, please do your quarrelling by private correspondence—any way in short, so that our Masonic journals shall not be a reproach to those who pay for and wish to read them in their families and among their friends and neighbors.

Above all things, banish from your columns all evidences of the spirit of rivalry and enmity towards any person, be he either Mason or anti-Mason.

This article, crude as it may seem, is not intended for THE TROWEL alone, but for any and all professed Masons, who may chance to read it, whether editors and publishers or subscribers.

Fraternally and truly yours,
A SUBSCRIBER.

Flying Trip to Louisville.

Taking the convenient and comfortable sleeping cars of the T. W. & W. Railway at 11:35 P. M., we found ourselves on the 7th at Lafayette, where we also discovered that snow mantled the earth around us. The companies concentrating their roads at Lafayette junction have erected a spacious passenger and eating house, where we had a good breakfast. Thenceward, on the I. C. & Lafayette Railway for Indianapolis, where we changed for the Jeffersonville, Indianapolis & Madison Railway. This is one of the straightest roads in the country, and runs four through trains each way every week day, and every train takes a full load. There is no smoother road, nor one that makes better time or is better managed than this. The cars now run over the immense bridge which spans the Ohio River falls and the canal, and is just one mile in length. This adds greatly to the comfort and security of passengers. The spans for boats to pass under are two hundred feet in length; and considerably more than one hundred feet above the water.

At the National Hotel we found M. W. Bro. J. M. S. MCCORCLE, P. G. M., and now Grand Secretary, who is one of the proprietors of the house, and withal a very courteous gentleman, as he is also a distinguished and able man and Mason. He politely showed us through the Temple. The whole is a source of much profit to the stockholders. The Grand Lodge Hall is so arranged that when the Grand Lodge meets it has the appearance of a spacious and elegant chamber and gallery beautifully frescoed and highly finished. A few hours' work transforms it into a hall suitable for lectures, musical parties, and opera performances. The chapters and higher bodies have separate apartments, and there are two large lodge-rooms with all necessary appointments, occupied by ten lodges. In one of the halls we found an old portrait of Gen. GEO. ROGERS CLARKE, who took the old Northwestern Territory from the French. His countenance indicates courage, firmness, and persistence. We are glad to know that he was a Freemason.

At the National we found Bro. JOHN FULTS, who was formerly engaged with us in business, and whose marriage we announced not long since. He is fortunate in the choice of an amiable and beautiful companion, and they are well and happily started in life.

With him we visited the new Galt House, where we found Sir Knight SPEED, who is a member of Elwood Commandery in this city. We looked all through the house from the spacious kitchens to the laundries, dining-rooms, parlors, writing-rooms, &c. It has every modern improvement, and so far as we can judge, excels any hotel we have ever seen. Its cost is immense. In fact, it was built without regard to cost, and is justly the pride of Louisville. But the National, with such a proprietor as Bro. MCCORCLE, suits us.

With Bro. FULTS we visited the offices of the freight department of the J. I. & M. Road, where we found Bro. HINMAN, the genial agent who is a pleasant gentleman, and also a member of one of the lodges at Cleveland.

We found Mr. SCOTT, the superintendent at the bridge, laying down track and providing for tho wants of his road.

We started at 3 o'clock P. M. of the 8th, and reached home at 8 A. M. of the 9th.

Grand Council of Deliberation.

On the 3d of this month the Lodges of Perfection, Councils of Princes, Chapters of Rose Croix, and Consistories of the Scottish Rite at Quincy, Monmouth, Peoria, Freeport, Princeton, Springfield, and Chicago, assembled by delegates at Masonic Temple in Chicago and were opened by the Ill. Deputy, W. A. Stevens, 33°, in person. We have not the report on credentials, but noticed among the members present Ill. Breth. Avise and Lowe, of Quincy; Brewer, Hill, and McGrew, of Monmouth; Carr, of Peoria; Jerome and Ide, of Princeton; Luckey, of Polo; Chamberlain and Shaffer, of Freeport; Miner, Fisher, and Smith, of Springfield; Ranney, G. R. Smith, V. L. Hurlbut, M. D., H. N. Hurlbut, M. D., Blaney, Foss, Brower, Patrick, Ranney, Turner, E. B. Stevens, J. M. D. Carr, Cleveland, Barnard, Egan, Atkins, Gurney, Snyder, and many others, of Chicago.

The number present was very large. The Ill. Deputy gave the members a hearty and and eloquent address of welcome.

The proceedings were very harmonious. The occasion was interesting on account of the presence of Col. Shaffer, who has ere this departed to Utah to assume the position of Governor over the people of that Territory.

In the evening, the degree of Grand, Elect, Perfect and Sublime Mason was conferred with marked success by Ill. Bro. G. R. SMITH, 33°, and his associates, upon five candidates. The hall was full, and the ceremonies, amid the artistic surroundings, made a strong and lasting impression. The organ was skillfully handled by Ill. Bro. HURLBUT. Among the candidates was W. Bro. EDWIN POWELL, M. D., the distinguished Master of Oriental Lodge No. 33.

Through the politeness of the publishers we have received a copy of a new work with the above title, compiled and arranged for male voices by Comp. JOHN B. MARSH, under the sanction of M. E. JOHN W. SIMONS, G. H. P. of New York. It is 7 by 9 inches in width and length, is well fitted for chapter use, in large type and on extra paper.

Published by C. H. DITSON & Co., New York.

Exchanges.

The Freemason's Magazine, and the Freemason, both London weeklies, come regular. So does the Keystone and Landmark, both weeklies, and the Dispatch, Democrat and several other weeklies with Masonic Departments. The Freemason's Magazine, Boston, is always on time; the Review has not caught up; the Michigan Freemason got entangled by the difficulties of others, but is out again, bright and lively as ever. The Mystic Star, Voice of Masonry, Evergreen, Mirror, and St. Louis Freemason for February are in good plight and full of valuable matter. The Record of Western India reaches us much sooner overland; the Record at Nashville, and the St. Louis Freemason for March are also on our table. The Kentucky Freemason for February, like all its predecessors, is "good to take." In a general notice of exchanges, we get the following:

THE MASONIC TROWEL, edited by Bro. H. G. Reynolds, of Springfield, Illinois, is a favorite with us. It is family and Masonic. We like it, and we are glad to know that it likes us. If we were a brick we would let that TROWEL lay us.

Proceedings Abroad.

NEBRASKA—Grand Chapter—The Grand Chapter of Nebraska met in Nebraska City, October 25th, D. H. Wheeler, G. H. P.

REPRESENTATIVES.

Omaha, No. 1.—H. P. Deuell, C. T. Whitmore, C. S. Demary, R. C. Jordan.

Keystone, 2.—J. W. Moore, John Reed, W. W. Wardell.

Nebraska, No. 3.—D. H. Wheeler, W. D. Gage, J. W. Shannon.

COMMITTEES—On Credentials.—Comps. Allen, Seymour, Shannon.

On By-Laws and Resolutions.—Comp. Graff, Dunham, and Gage.

On Finance.—Comps. Deuell, Brown, and Cogswell.

On Returns.—Comps. Gage, Demary, and Moore.

On Jurisprudence.—Comps. Moore, Furnas, and Deuell.

On Foreign Correspondence.—Comps. Furnas, Graff, and Goss.

On Charters and Dispensations.—Comps. Deuel, Moore, and Allen.

The address is well written, and discusses several important subjects. A neat allusion is made to the meeting at St. Louis, and the services of Comps. Collins and Gouley, as the representatives of the Craft were gracefully acknowledged.

The charters granted by the G. G. Chapter were called in and new ones issued,

The five chapters make the following exhibit: exalted, 24; admitted, 5; demitted, 5; members, 202; paid to Grand Chapter, $234.75. Comp. Graff, submitted the report on correspondence; the notices of other grand bodies are fraternal; that of Illinois is short.

PENNSYLVANIA—Grand Council.—The annual meeting was held at Erie, June 9th, 1869. Alfred Creigh, M. P. G. Master.

His address is eloquent. In commenting upon the several degrees of the Cryptic Rite, he gives the following reasons for introducing the degree of Super-Excellent Master, and for placing it between the other degrees:

> "We enter the temple, pass between the pillars of the porch, and in due time are raised to the east, having been taught in the lodge lessons of virtue, morality, of science, and of religion, while but ONE essential was wanting to make our Masonic journey finished and complete. I know you all anticipate me when I answer, that it was the G. O. W. agreed upon and promised to be given by our three Grand Masters at the completion of the temple, and in the very presence of these three and no others. An agreement entered into in the Council of R. Masters, but prevented by the death of HAB, until the long lost word was brought to light at the rebuilding of the second temple. But we have not yet finished the first temple. We had entered the quarries and renewed our devotions, by preparing our minds as spiritual stones for the temple on high; we had presided a season in the Oriental Chair to learn to qualify ourselves for higher duties, and then we witnessed the dedication of the temple. Such and such alone is the entire and complete history of the first temple until the Babylonish Captivity.
> The Cryptic Masons are now required to take another standpoint. We study the beauty of this magnificent temple, admire the character of King Solomon, contemplate his extensive dominions, lament his death, witness the Jewish nation demanding a king in the person of Saul, the first King of Israel. Study the entire history of this nation for a period of 485 years, during which time twenty-two kings presided over its destinies and you all see the temple prepared, destroyed—its people and the furniture of the temple, except the ark, carried captive to Babylon, and there amid the willows, and on the banks of the river mourn the loss of their temple and city. This final scattering and destruction of the temple, was brought on by the faithlessness of Zedekiah, its last King, who, refusing to serve the God of his fathers, and permitting the people to degenerate into idolatry, met a cruel and ignominious death. It is to commemorate this tragical event, and in further illustration of the R. A., that it is placed as the second degree of the council. Chronologically it is its proper place; first, the Royal Council of Grand Masters, next the erection of the temple; then follows the Select Master, explanatory of both the first and second temples.

CALIFORNIA—Grand Lodge.—The paper, arrangement of matter, and typographical appearance of the proceedings of the Golden State, are not excelled by those of any other Grand Lodge. The grand communication was held at San Francisco, October 12, Charles Marsh, Grand Master. One hundred and fifty-four lodges were represented, and the session was held five days. The address was an able one. The report on correspondence was presented by Rev. Wm. H. Hill, Grand Chaplain. It equals any of its predecessors, in matter, manner, and wit. He thinks Grand Master English has too much sack for his bread. Bro. English always has bread enough, and it is good, but we think that our brethren are quite fond of Bro. English's sack. It is good to take.

We should like to notice this report at large, but if we do, we shall not know where to end. The notice of Illinois is very flattering, but we are so mixed in it, that we must pass it over. The report justifies M. W. Bro. Gibson, of New York, for refusing a dispensation to a particular sect. The matter will bear a "heap" of thinking. The Grand Lodge holds that a Master may demit, the same as any other member. So do we. How can a brother in Cairo preside over a lodge in Springfield? Masons, as well as citizens have some rights in reserve.

Correspondence with the Grand Orient of France was suspended. The statistics of the chartered lodges show 1,042 initiations; 929 passings; 919 raisings; 527 affiliations; 115 restorations; 620 dimissions; 165 suspensions for non-payment of dues; 5 suspensions for unmasonic conduct; 6 expulsions; 107 deaths; 294 rejections; 294 Entered Apprentices; 133 Fellow Crafts; 8,853 members, and 170 lodges.

The Grand Lodge was organized in 1850; J. D. Stevenson, John A. Tutt, B. D. Hyam, C. M. Radcliffe, W. H. Howard, N. G. Curtiss, J. L. English, W. C. Belcher, G. B. Claiborne, W. A. Davies, Charles Marsh, and L. E. Pratt have presided as Grand Masters.

The receipts of the Board of Relief at San Francisco, for the previous year, with balance on hand, were $8,558.26; disbursements, $6,479.25.

OHIO—Grand Lodge.—Met at Cleveland, October 19, Howard Matthews, G. M. The representation was large. The address is a methodical expose of the condition of Masonry, and the general remarks are eloquent.

Intercourse with the Grand Orient of France was suspended.

The correspondence report is divided into subjects, and is much abridged for that reason.

Statistics: Expelled, 84; suspended, 803; died, 220; demitted, 1,420; re-instated, 391; admitted, 703; made Master Masons, 2,475; members, 23,762.

COLORADO—Grand Lodge—Met at Denver, September 28, H. M. Teller, G. M. Twelve lodges were represented. The Grand Master is one of the ablest men in the Territory, and his address fully sustains his reputation. He alluded very feelingly to the death of P. G. Master Weston, and summed up the condition of Masonic matters, including his own acts, with clearness and ability.

No new charters were granted. There are thirteen lodges with 768 members.

Bro. Hal Sayr presented the report on correspondence.

The next meeting will be held at Central, on the last Tuesday in September.

OFFICERS.

This Grand Lodge has been presided over by J. M. Chevington, Allyn Weston, Henry M. Teller, A. J. Van Deren, Andrew Mason, and Chase Withrow. Bro. Teller is in his fourth term of service.

Grand Commandery.

Through the courtesy of Grand Recorder, James H. Miles, we are in receipt of the transactions of the Grand Commandery of Illinois, October 6, 1869.

In every respect, it excels any publication of the kind, in any department of Masonry, that we have ever seen, and is alike creditable to Grand Commandery, Grand Recorder, and Sirs Horton & Leonard, the printers.

Jerome R. Gorin, G. Com.; Chas. E. Munger, Dep.; Andrew J. Dunning, G. Gen.; John M. Pearson, G. C. Gen.; Rev. C. A. Gilbert, Prel.; Daniel Dustin, S. G. W.; Theodore T. Gurney, J. G. W.; Robert H. Foss. G. Treas.; James H. Miles, G. Recorder; Hiram W. Hubbard, G. St. B.; A. S. Converse, G. Sw. B.; L. H. Jorgensen. G. Warder; L. K. Osborn, G. C. of G.

There were present Nathan F. Prentice, Geo. C. Lanphere, and V. L. Hurlbut, P. G. Commanders.

William Lavely, Wiley M. Egan, George Gardner, L. R. Jerome, Past Commanders. Chas. H. Brower, Ins. Gen.

There are now 26 Grand Commanderies in the United States, 332 subordinate commanderies, 23,483 members; and there were 3,628 Sir Knights created during the year.

Sirs Lanphere, Forrester, Rounseville, Ferre, and Murray were appointed a committee to report at the next meeting upon the propriety of making the council degrees pre-requisite to the Templar orders.

Sirs Miles, Lawrence, and Nash, were appointed Committe on Correspondence, and Sirs Gorin, Hurlbut, and Reynolds, Committee on Jurisprudence.

Sir Chas. H. Brower, was appointed Inspector General.

Apollo Commandery has five Past Grand Commanders, viz: Sirs J. V. Z. Blaney, H. A. Johnson, W. H. Turner, Henry C. Ranney, and V. L. Hurlbut. No one has ever been Treasurer but Sir Robert H. Foss. Long may he wave.

Grand Council R. and S. M.

That body met, October 7, John M. Pearson, Grand Puissant; John C. Reynolds, Grand Recorder.

The Grand Puissant reported that he had granted dispensations for new councils as follows: at Bloomington, H. B. Wright, Master; at Paxton, Wilson Hoag, Master; at Petersburg, Hobart Hamilton, Master; and at Dawson, John F. Burrill, Master. Charters were granted to all of them. A charter was also granted to Geo. W. Staley, and others for a new council at Chester.

William M. Avise, of Quincy, was elected G. Puissant; Hiram W. Hubbard, Deputy; W. A. Levanway, G. T. I.; Charles Spalding, G. P. C. W.; Charles Fisher, G. T.; John C. Reynolds, Springfield, Grand Recorder; Geo. E. Lounsbury, G. C. G.; Levi Lusk, G. Chaplain; and A. R. Robinson, G. Sentinel. Illinois has forty-seven councils, and 1506 members. The Grand Recorder presented the report on correspondence.

Charles Whitlock Moore,

Editor Freemasons' Monthly Magazine, Corresponding Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, and the senior active member of the Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the 33° for the Northern Masonic Jurisdiction of the United States, was born in Boston March 29 1801, in which city he received a liberal education and has since permanently resided, with the exception of a short sojourn in the State of Maine.

The exalted opinions which Brother Moore entertained of the Masonic Society caused him to be extremely anxious to be permitted to receive Masonic light on the evening of his twenty-first birthday, and with that object in view, he solicited, and was proposed for the degrees in Massachusetts Lodge in February, 1822; but having been in the interim, called to the State of Maine, he obtained the recommendation and permission of Massachusetts Lodge to receive the degrees in Kennebec Lodge, in that State, anb was initiated, &c, in April or May following.

In the fall of the same year he returned to his native city, and in October affiliated wirh St. Andrew's Lodge, and the following month was placed in office, and continued serving it in various stations until 1832, when he was elected Master. Having been elected Recording Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts in 1832, he felt himself under the necessity of resigning the office of Master, the two offices being held by the same brother being incompatible, but was the same evening elected its Secretary, which place he held for sixteen years, when he resigned. He uninterruptedly held the office of Recording Grand Secretary for thirty-four years, when, in 1867, he became Deputy Grand Master, and in 1868, Corresponding Grand Secretary. He was Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Grand Charity Fund, and a member and Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Masonic Hall, in which latter position, if his views had not been overruled by a majority of his associates, not nearly so large a debt as now exists, if any, would have been incurred.

In Capitular Masonry Brother Moore was advanced and exalted, in St. Andrew's Chapter, Boston in 1825, and having satisfactorily filled most of the offices in that body, was elected its High Priest in 1840. In the Grand Chapter of Massachusetts, after having acceptably occupied nearly all the subordinate offices, including that of Grand Lecturer, he was elected Grand High Priest. At tne Triennial Convocation of the G. G. Chapter of the United States at Hartford, Conn., in September, 1856, he was proxy for the Deputy Grand High Priest of Massachusetts, and chairman of the Committee on the Doings of G. G. Officers.

In Cryptic Masonry he received the degrees of Royal and Select Master in 1832, in Boston Council, over which he subsequently presided for more than ten years. In the Grand Council he held nearly every office.

In the Chivalric Order he was created and dubbed a Knight Templar in Boston Encampment, in or about the year 1830, and having served most of the offices therein, was elected Eminent Commander in 1837. He has, also, been Eminent Commander of De Molay Encampment, of Boston. In the Grand Encampment of Massachusetts and Rhode Island he was electep Grand Master in 1841, and held that exalted station three years. In the Grand Encampment of the United Statei he was electeb Grand Generalissimo in 1853, and at Hartford in 1856, was a prominent member of the Committee on Jurisprudence.

In Ineffable Masonry Brother Moore ascended, through intricate paths, along fearful precipices and bewildering acclivities, until he reached the 33°, in 1848; was for several years prior to May, 1861, the Grand Secretary General of the Holy Empire of the Northern Supreme Council; from that period to May, 1867, its Grand Standard Bearer; and is now the senior active member of the same.

The many and eminent services which this venerable and distinguished brother has rendered Masonry for the past forty three years, in various stations, and also, as an editor and writer, can by us merely be glanced at. They would fill a volume. When, in 1833, he assumed the Secretariat, anti Masonry was raging with its utmost fury, and his first official act was to attest the memorial, of which he was the author, surrendering to the Legislature the act of incorporation of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. The idea originated with him, and he may, with honest pride, look back upon it as one of the most beneficial performances of his eventful Masonic career. Our brother was the author of the "Declaration of the Freemasons of Boston and vicinity," issued to the public December 31, 1831, and signed by one thousand four hundred and sixty-eight of the leading citizens, in their capacity as Masons—one of the most able, next to rhe Declaration of American independence, ever published, and drawn forth by the persecution of the Masons at that period. It concluded as follows: "Should the people of this country become so infatuated as to deprive Masons of their civil rights, in violation of their written Constitutions and the wholesome spirit of just laws and free government, a vast majoity of the fraternity will still remain firm, confiding in God and the rectitude of their intentions for consolation under the trials to which they may be exposed."

Brother Moore's services to the craft have been acknowedged, both at home and abroad, by his election to honarary membership in several Masonic bodies, grand and subordinate. In 1823 he established the Masonic Mirror in Boston, and continued it until 1835, and in its columns gallantly fought against anti-Masonry. So terrific were his onslaughts that, in 1834, he was prosecuted for libel by the leader of anti-Masonry, and, although he overthrew his adversary, his health was injured and his means impaired. In 1841 he commenced the publication of the Freemasons' Monthly Magazine, the oldest Masonic journal now extant, which, from that period to the present time, has been uniformly conducted with signal ability. He is, also, the author of the "Masonic Tresle Board," originally prepared by order of the National Masonic Convention held at Baltimore, Md., in 1843, first submittd to the fraternity in that year, and which has since passed through several editions.

Brother Moore is evidently a profound thinker‘ as he certainly is a logical reasoner. His sentences are classically elegant, and if he has, as a Masonic writer, one failing, it is on the safe side—ultra Masonic conservatism. In manner Brother Moore, to the stranger, is apparently distant, but to those who have long enjoyed his acquaintanceship his genial and social qualities show to advantage, and are fully appreciated.—Pomeroy's Democrat.

Masonry in Japan.

A correspondent at Japan has kindly furnished us with a full and detailed account of the dedication of a Masonic hall at Yokohama, on St. John's day, December 27, under the immediate direction of Yokohama Lodge, assisted by the brethren of the O Tentosama and other lodges in the Island. The ceremonies were conducted by W. Bro. T. W. Miller, Past Master of the first named lodge, assisted by other distinguished brethren present. The lodge was opened in the first degree, after which the presiding Master delivered an appropriate address, in which he congratulated the brethren on the attainment of a hall of their own, and acknowledged the thanks which were due to H. E. Sir Harry Parkes, who had exerted himself to obtain a site for them, and to Mr. Loureiro, the Portuguese Consul, for coming forward and offering a portion of the ground that had been appropriated to his government, but which was more than was requisite for their purposes. He also declared his satisfaction at the progress of Freemasonry: as, not only was there a second lodge in Yokohama, many of whose members were assisting in this ceremony, and which would meet under this roof, and, without doubt, work harmoniously with the older lodge; but in Kobe the Masons are making an effort to obtain a warrant from the Grand Lodge of England, showing that wherever Masons are, they work for the extension of the Order, and the diffusion of the fraternal feelings it inculcates. It is especially gratifying to see these new lodges springing up, as it will probably enable them to obtain the benefits of a District Grand Lodge for Japan. At present, the Grand Lodge of England is their direct head, but there are advantages in having a district grand lodge, which might legitimately be hoped for.

The ceremonies of dedication then proceeded in the usual form, at the conclusion of which Bro. C. H. Dallas addressed the brethren on the solid advantages of Freemasonry, stating that it was no mere charitable Institution, founded for the purpose of dispensing relief to necessitous brethren. There are plenty of institutions of that character which are good in their way, efficient for their purpose, and worthy of all praise; but Masonry would not have been handed down as it has been from century to century, had it not had higher ends than this. He concluded by dilating on the true principles of the Brotherhood.

The brethren then, says our correspondent, adjourned to the refectory, to partake of a banquet. The supply of the good things had been entrusted to Mrs. Green, of the Yokobama Hotel, who had a temporary kitchen erected on the ground, and gave a proof of the ability with which she is able to provide a large public dinner. There were nearly eighty Masons who sat down to as excellent a dinner as could be desired by the most fastidious; the comestibles being served hot, and without the delays so frequently prevalent on such occasions. The wines were excellent. During the dinner the band of H. M. 10th Regiment played a capital selection of music.

Toasts and speeches followed in rapid succession. In reply to the toast the "Grand Lodges of America and their brethren," W. Bro. Capt. Lemuel Lyon, the American Consul at Kanagana, Japan, said, that although he naturally felt a kind of diffidence in speaking for the first time in such an assemblage of his brethren, still he considered that he was in the position of a man in the midst of his own family, entitled to speak freely, and feel himself "at home." And at home he always was when amongst Masons. The United States differed from England in this, that they were not under one Grand Lodge, but each State has its own grand lodge. In wandering backwards and forwards in the United States from Massachusetts to California, he could never forget that Masonry had its origin in the east, and traveled westward to us, as it came to America from England. When he was a child, among his earliest recollections, he heard his grandfather speak of York Masonry. When he was a big boy, his father harped upon the same string: and when he became a man, he ascertained for himself what this York Masonry was, he became a brother, and he had never had occasion to regret it. From England came the establishment of Freemasonry in the United States, and he was proud to say that never did English and American Masons meet, without proving the value of the seed thus sown. Now, he would speak of the firmament. Disclaiming the title of astronomer, he would remark that Masonry had placed three bright stars in the heavens—"Faith, Hope, and Charity." And the brother who, guided by their light, put faith in GOD, hoped for the realization of the Fraternity in the Grand Lodge above, and exercised the duties of Benevolence and Love to the brethren, fulfilled the highest ends of Masonry, and did his duty to GOD and man.

The occasion was one of extraordinary interest, and may perhaps very properly be regarded as one of peculiar Masonic importance, as it was, we believe, the first public manifestation of Masonry in the Japanese Empire.—Magazine, Boston.

"On the same day that the 'Massachusetts Grand Lodge' was organized at the Green Dragon Tavern, forty brethren of the St. John's Grand Lodge celebrated the feast at the Bunch of Grapes Tavern, John Rowe presiding as Grand Master.

'Joseph Warren, who was thus installed Grand Master one hundred years ago, at this feast of St. John the Evangelist, was born at Roxbury, Massachusetts, June 11, 1741. At the age of fourteen he entered Harvard College, and was there graduated in 1759, aged nineteen. He was proposed to St. Andrew's Lodge by Bro. William Palfrey, September, 10, 1761, and was then initiated, being twenty years and three months old. On the 2d of the following November, he was 'passed a Fellow Craft.' It is uncertain at what time he was made a Master Mason, but on the 11th of November, 1765, the lodge voted unanimously that Dr. Joseph Warren be re admitted a member of the lodge. After this time he appears to have been zealous and active in his Masonic labors. He was chosen Senior Warden in November, 1766, and served his year, and was Master of St. Andrew's from November, 1768, to November, 1869.

"During his Grand Mastership there were thirty-seven meetings of the Grand Lodge, thirty-four of which he attended and presided over.

"From the time of his first installation until the last quarterly meeting held during his life, he was engaged in public affairs of the greatest importance. His practice as a physician was very large; he was a member of various political clubs; was of the Committee of Safety of Boston, and of the same committee of Massachusetts, a member of the Committee on Correspondence, and was a representative to the Provincial Congress, and at the time of his death its presiding officer. His correspondence with public men, not only in Massachusetts, but in all the colonies, was voluminous, and yet he found time amid all these cares, perplexities and labors, to earnestly attend to his duties as Grand Master.

"On the 26th of April, 1773, he lost his beloved wife, but the following week found him at the Grand Lodge, called 'upon an especial occasion.'

"I have compared the dates of many of the meetings of the Grand Lodge, when he was present, with the well-known public services of Warren, and it is surprising that he was able to devote any time to his Grand Master's duties.

"On the 5th of March, 1773, the annual commemoration of the Massacre was held. Dr. Church delivered the oration, and Warren was on the committee that matured the business. Yet he found time to attend the Grand Lodge that day, and the record reads that 'the Grand Master was pleased to adjourn this Grand Lodge to Monday, the 8th instant.'

"June 4th, of the same year, the record states: 'The Grand Lodge being opened, the Grand Master, observing but few grand officers present, was acquainted of their necessary engagement in another society.'

"Warren was absent from three meetings of the Grand Lodge—June 16, 1773; June 3, 1774; and September 2, 1774.

"It is uncertain what detained him from the meeting of June 16, 1773; but June 2, 1774, he was he was engaged on a committee to draft 'a solemn league and covenant,' as also upon other important committees, and at the same time he was writing vigorous articles for the Gazette.

"On the 2d of September, 1774, he was absent for the last time. This was the occasion of the 'Powder alarm.' The day before, he was called to Cambridge to prevent a collision with the troops, spent the day there, and the next day, the 2d, was engaged with a committee in corresponding with the towns.

"His last attendance at the Grand Lodge was March 3, 1775. On the 6th, which was Monday, he delivered his famous oration upon the anniversary of the Massacre, and his mind must necessarily have been pre-occupied with the great subject upon which he was to speak, and of the personal danger to himself which he was thereby incurring. Notwithstanding, he was at his post of duty, and for the last time presided over the Craft.

"'Mema. 19th April, 1775. Hostility commenced between the troops of Great Britain and America in Lexington Battle. In consequence of which the town was blockaded, and no lodge held until December, 1775.'

"On the 17th of June following, Warren breathed out his heroic spirit on Charlestown Heights, and the Grand Lodge was left without a Grand Master."

How and Where did Solomon Die.

The records in the Old Testament merely state that he died and was buried with his fathers. But how did he die? and where? The eleventh chapter and forty-third verse of I Kings reads thus:

"And Solomon slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father."

The thirty-first verse of the ninth chapter of II Chronicles, says the same in almost the same words. No particulars of his last illness are given, no statement as to the immediate cause of his death is made, and we know not whether he died of old age, or of lingering and wasting disease—we only know that he died and was buried. There may have been a record of the manner and place of his death, for we are told in the forty-first chapter of I Kings, that "the rest of the acts of Solomon, and all that he did," are recorded in "the book of the acts of Solomon." And in the twenty-ninth verse of the ninth chapter of II Chronicles we find the following:

"Now the rest of the acts of Solomon, first and last, are they not written in the book of Nathan the Prophet, and in the prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite, and in the visions of Iddo the seer against Jeroboam the son of Nebat?"

We have no knowledge of the subject matter of this book of Nathan, the purport of Ahijah's prophecy, or Iddo's visions, save what is given in the verse, above quoted, those writings having probably been destroyed in the Jewish wars. The Jewish Rabbins, however, have a strange legend of the latter days of the wise king. We have once seen a metrical version of it, which we append below. It was written by a rising English poet, Mr. Owen Meredith, who acknowledges his indebtedness for the matter of the poem, to his friend, the somewhat celebrated Robert Browning. We proceed to quote it entire:

Between the pillars; before the altar
In the House of the Lord. And the King was old
And his strength began to falter,
So that he lean'd on his ebony staff,
Seal'd with the seal of the Pentegraph.

All of the golden fretted work,
Without and within, so rich and so rare,
As high as the nest of the building stork,
Those pillars of cedar were;
Wrought up to the brazen chapiters
Of the Sidonian artificers.

And the King stood still as a carven King.
The carven cedar beams below,
In his purple robe, with his signet ring,
And his beard as white as snow,
And his face to that Oracle, where the hymn
Dies under the wing of the Cherubim.

The wings folded over the Oracle,
And cover the heart and the eyes of God;
The Spouse with pomegranite, lily, and bell,
Is glorious in her abode;
For with gold of Ophir and with scent of myrrh,
And with purple of Tyre, the King cloth'd her.

By the soul of each slumbrous instrument
Drawn soft through the musical misty air,
The stream of the folk that came and went,
For worship and praise, and prayer,
Flow'd to and fro, and up and down
And round the King in his golden crown.

And it came to pass, as the King stood there
And look'd on the house he had built with pride,
That the Hand of the Lord came unaware,
And touch'd him; so that he died.
In his purple robe, with his signet ring,
And the crown wherewith they had crowned him king.

And the stream of the folk that came and went
To worship the Lord with prayer and praise,
Went softly over, in wonderment,
For the King stood there always;
And it was solemn and strange to behold
That dead King crowned with a crown of gold,

For he leaned on his ebony staff upright,
And over his shoulders the purple robe;
And his hair, and his beard, were both snow-white;
And the fear of him fill'd the globe,
So that none dared touch him, though he was dead.
He look'd so royal about the head.

And the moons were changed; and the years roll'd on:
And the new king reigned in the old king's stead:
And men were married and buried anon;
But the King stood stark and dead;
Leaning upright on his ebony staff;
Preserved by the sign of the Pentegraph.

And the stream of life, as it went and came,
Ever for worship and praise and prayer,
Was awed by the face, and the fear, and the fame
Of the dead King standing there;
For his hair was so white, and his eyes so cold,
That they left him alone with his crown of gold.

So King Solomon stood up, dead in the House
Of the Lord, held there by the Pentegraph,
Until out from a pillar there ran a red mouse,
And gnaw'd through his ebony staff;
Then, flat on his face, the King fell down:
And they pick'd from the dust a golden crown.

Our readers must not suppose that we indorse this Hebrew legend as true. We only say that there may have been a record made of the manner and place of the great king's death, and on this record, it may be, the legend is founded.—Evergreen.

Masonic Honors to Major-General Hancock.

Among the pleasing incidents of the late session in this city of the Masonic Grand Lodge, was the visit to that body of Major-General Hancock, on Thursday evening. He was introduced by A. T. C. Pierson, P. G. M., as follows:

MOST WORSHIPFUL GRAND MASTER—I have the pleasure to introduce to you, and through you to the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Minnesota, Bro. Hancock. Not because of the high honor which is attached to his name in our country's history do I present him thus, but because in all positions and on all known occasions—even on the battle-field—he has proved that he was governed by the teachings of Masonry—toleration, charity, and brotherly love.

At the conclusion of Bro. Pierson's introductory remarks, the gavel of Grand Master Nash called the members of the Grand Lodge to their feet, when he invited the distinguished brother to approach the East, receiving him upon the dais in nearly the following language:

BRO. HANCOCK—I give you a hearty welcome to the Grand Lodge of Minnesota. Your name is a household word in every Craftman's home in our State, as one who has upheld his country's honor in perilous times. We receive and welcome you here as a brother who has never been known to fail in the performance of a brother's part. Again, I bid you welcome—be seated in our East.

The distinguished brother took a seat near the Grand Master, and when, a short time afterward, the Grand Lodge was called off, a large number of the brethren sought and obtained a personal introduction to him, among whom the General recognized several who had been under his command in times past.—St. Paul (Minnesota) Pioneer.

Encouraging.

We are receiving letters daily similar to this:

"I am happy to say that your circular furnishes me an opportunity to not only help myself, but help others. I am highly pleased with THE TROWEL, and can say truly that it furnishes more really useful and entertaining reading matter, outside of Masonic articles, than many publications of much greater pretensions. I like it, my wife likes it, and my children are delighted with it. THE TROWEL has had to work its way here against much opposition, but is now acknowledged the best paper for Masons that we have in the West.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
Past Grand Secretary and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Editor, IS PUBLISHED BY THE FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH, BY
H. G. REYNOLDS, JR.

Masons Assassinated.

To the Worshipful Masters, Wardens and Brethren of the Masonic Lodges in Illinois:

Dear Brethren—The Spanish authorities in Cuba have arrested and assassinated, under the instigation of a Catholic priest, several Cubans and Americans whose sole offense was that they met in a Masonic Lodge. No proof was made that they were in any way engaged in the Cuban revolution; but upon the demand of brutal soldiers, maddened by the inflammatory appeals of a Catalan priest. these American citizens were slaughtered in cold blood, because they were Freemasons.

I do therefore earnestly advise every Masonic lodge in the State to memorialize the President of the United States and demand protection to American citizens everywhere, and ample atonement for this indefensible and unprovoked outrage, and to send all papers to Gen. John A. Logan, who is Representative for the State at large Given under my hand and seal at Springfield this 10th day of March, A. L. 5870.

Harman G. Reynolds,
Grand Master of Masons, [l. s.]

Canada.--Quebec.

In January we gave Quebec a hearing, and in February we gave one to Canada.

In 1855, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Canada, were provinces, with their own parliaments; in each of them there were lodges or provincial grand lodges on the registries of England, Scotland, and Ireland. Canada, previously divided into Upper and Lower, was then, and until 1867, known as Canada East and Canada West. In 1855, the provincial grand lodges in Canada were: Canada West, Montreal and William Henry, Quebec, and Three Rivers. On the 10th of October, 1855, forty-one lodges met in convention at Hamilton, threw off their allegiance to said Grand Lodges of England, Scotland, and Ireland, formed the Independent Grand Lodge of Canada, adopted a constitution, elected grand officers, and assumed the right to control Masonic affairs in Canada. Ireland and some of our State Grand Lodges, promptly recognized the new body; England, Scotland, and several of our oldest State grand lodges declined, until other things were done. In July, 1857, committees of the Independent Grand Lodge of Canada, and of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Canada West, met to arrange articles of union; articles were submitted, but the union was not consummated, and the Grand Lodge of Canada West thereupon threw aside its designation, and assumed that of The Ancient Grand Lodge of Canada. This complicated matters still more, and overtures were immediately made to unite the two bodies. In July, 1858, both bodies met at Toronto, and M. W. Bro. Philip C. Tucker, then and long before Grand Master of Vermont, and the ablest Grand Master at the time on this hemisphere, with M. W. Bro. Robert Morris, then Deputy and since Grand Master of Kentucky, were present by invitation to advise and assist, and the two bodies were united as the Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Canada. This union was everywhere recognized. We have no data before us as to the ultimate disposition of the two Provincial Grand Lodges, but presume that they ceased to exist by the affiliation of their lodges with the Grand Lodge of Canada. This was the Grand Lodge which held jurisdiction over Canada East and West in 1867, when the Dominion of Canada was formed. The Dominion includes New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec, (Canada East), Ontario, (Canada West), with a local Parliament in each, and a supreme Parliament over the whole. The Craft in New Brunswick and in Nova Scotia have been formed into sovereign Grand Lodges.

It is asserted that because Canada is divided into two districts or departments, that each is entitled to a grand lodge, and that such a grand lodge as the Grand Lodge of Canada can not rightfully exist. How monstrous! How unmasonic! How utterly destructive and revolutionary! Nothing in the history of Masonry in the States is analogous to it. There is the fact, that though the political status is changed, the Grand Lodge is there, complete in its constitution, organization, and government, as ever. Who possesses the right to abridge its powers? to reduce its jurisdiction? to change its government? Until its political status is greatly changed, the right is in the Grand Lodge of Canada alone. Every step taken by the Grand Lodge of Quebec is contrary to the spirit of Masonry, and void. The lodges in the respective Judicial Grand Divisions of Illinois have just as much right to form grand lodges—the rebellion in New York in 1849—the formation of grand lodges in large cities, have just as much argument to sustain them, as this forced and unseasonable appeal to passions and prejudices in the formation of the Grand Lodge of Quebec. It is in the face of law, order, security, confidence, unity, and good will. Upon this, the Freemason, of London, says:

> "It was the bounden duty of the promoters of this division to lay their statements in Masonic form before the Grand Lodge of Canada—it was their duty to leave no stone unturned to obtain the sanction of the Supreme Body whose warrants they held—prior to raising the flag of independence, and defying the public opinion of the Order throughout the world. It is a sad state of things to contemplate—authority defied—fraternity disregarded—the sacred obligations of the Craft profaned or forgotten—when all the teachings of Freemasonry inculcate forbearance, truth, and brotherly love!"

But, for all this illegality and wrong, there is another side. Evidently, the jurisdiction is too large for one grand lodge. The desire for a separate grand lodge for Quebec is natural and just. And we sincerely concur in the following remarks by the Freemason:

> "If the Grand Lodge of Canada can not win back to its Masonic fold by kindness the twenty-one recalcitrant lodges in the Province of Quebec, it will never accomplish that object by harsh measures. 'Secession' and 'rebellion' are convertible terms, and the magic of success produces strange changes of opinion. We have before us now, the 'Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Canada,' held on the 1st December, 1869, at Montreal, on the one side, and the 'Proceedings of the Convention.' held in the same city, on the 20th and 21st October last, by the leaders of the 'Grand Lodge of Quebec' on the other side. We have also received a 'manifesto' of the latter body, through the courtesy of its Grand Master, Bro. J. H. Graham, and the conclusion to which we deliberately arrive, is that there must be a separation between the two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The feelings which have been evoked on both sides are too powerful to be subdued, and we can not advocate the adoption by the Grand Lodge of Canada of coercive measures, which would not only fail to reach their objects, but would excite the sympathies of every Freemason on behalf of the oppressed."

All the work that has been done is either unlawful or in the wrong spirit, and can never receive the approval of right-minded Masons. It is as unwise as it is selfish and arrogant to exercise power unnecessarily. Never should it be done vindictively, as in the sale of the effects of several lodges for nominal debts at nominal sums. The whole Masonic world will cry out at this wrong. The Grand Lodge of Canada will be sustained in maintaining her jurisdiction, constitution, and government, for legal reasons only; propriety, policy, convenience, and Masonic sentiment are with the Quebec side.

Neither party can be safely sustained in their present positions. If things are to remain as they are the Grand Lodge of Canada has the advantage and will retain it. Matters can not remain as they are. Let the Grand Lodge of Canada revoke its arbitrary decrees of expulsion, suspension, and forfeiture of charters. Let the Grand Lodge of Quebec dissolve, return to their Grand Lodge, and there discuss the matter and divide their territory by political lines, and their property and funds pro rata, each taking the name which suits. There is no other honest or Masonic way. That these parties can now live together comfortably, no one can believe. They can separate Masonically; they should do so; they had better not stand upon the order of it; they had better fling aside all self-importance and all personal dignity, and do what must be done, well, cheerfully, and properly, and have an end of it.

To Anti-Masons.

There are very many who are opposed to Masonry, for very opposite reasons. Those of the Wheaton and Oberlin class, base their opposition upon a high Christian eminence, while others find their opposition in some other objection. The Wheaton Theological position has very little to stand on, so long as the objection is declared to be a rejection of Christ. We don't understand President Blanchard's own denomination to be very orthodox in that respect. We do not raise any controversy here, nor underrate the power and influence of his religious associates—we only say, that it seems to us, that in condemning Freemasons upon that point, he is condemning himself. It is well to be consistent, at least. We know very well that most anti-Masonic Christians base their opposition upon general religious grounds—grounds, too, that are utterly indefensible, but they do not risk the charge of inconsistency, because in most instances they are believers in the Divinity of Jesus. Dismissing this point for the present, we inquire into the other reasons for opposing Freemasonry.

Some are anti-Masons for the most despicable reason in the world—simply because they are too mean to pay for initiation. It is very well for such men to stay out, for they are opposed to paying for anything. That class vote against all school taxes, road taxes, and oppose everything that will cost money. If they give anything to build a church, they never think of the value of churches in a community, nor of any duty to assist, and what is done is grudgingly done, and is placed on the scales as so much merit. Such men are everywhere. They impede everything that is calculated to build up, because it costs.

Some men are opposed to Masonry, because they know very well that they could not stand the ordeal of an examining committee. The same men scorn and divide churches for the same reason. Every good man and every good thing is a standing reproach to them, and they avoid them.

Some are anti-Masons for no reason, except that they naturally belong to the opposition. They can see no good in Masonry, religion, or anything else. Religious men are said by them to be hypocrites, and their religion a cloak for black hearts and bad intentions. The immorality of a Mason here and there, is pointed at a specimen of the whole set. And so they go on, until they become regular defamers, and are never so unhappy as when they are obliged to be silent.

A friend of ours at Bloomington is a Freemason. His parents, good honest people in Pennsylvania, became anti-Masons, when everybody around them fell into the same way of thinking. There were no more reputable or hospitable people in the State, but they become anti-Masons; and when farmers have once decided in their minds, they are not easily moved. So these good people went on their way from year to year. By and by, a darling son went to Texas, and engaged in business. What happens to others, happened to him. He sickened and died. Masons attended him in sickness, received his dying requests, closed his eyes in death, interred him decently, reverently, and Masonically, and then informed the parents of his death, that his effects were at their disposal, and that they would attend to their desire in regard to the further disposition of the remains. The end of all that was to send the body home, with the property and effects of the deceased. The Masons at his old home gathered around when he was buried, and with sobs and tears threw a few green sprigs into the grave.

A few days afterwards the old father inquired of our Bloomington brother what those sprigs meant. He was informed that it was a symbol of the resurrection.

Sitting around their cheerful fire-side one evening, the old patriarch said, "wife, an institution that does such things as was done for our son cannot be bad." The response of the mother was similar, and now a Mason is as welcome at that old farm mansion, as he is anywhere among his brethren.

Before you denounce Masonry, find out what you are denouncing. What our books teach, we impress solemnly upon the minds of our initiates in all our mystic ceremonies.

Whatever is printed about Masonry, anybody can read. Then read, and after you have read, oppose our Institution if you can.

Canada and Masonic Jurisdiction.

We are in receipt of a courteous and able letter from Hon. J. H. Graham, Grand Master of the Quebec party, acknowledging the reception of the January and February members of The Trowel, and directing our attention to the formation of Grand Lodges in this country, and particularly so to those of Washington, Idaho and Montana.

1. Where a home government has one or more Grand Lodges at home, as in the case of Great Britain, and has territorial and provincial governments under her control, the Grand Lodges of no other country exercise any Masonic jurisdiction over any portion of such provinces or territory. The Grand Lodges of England, Scotland and Ireland, have had and still have both provincial and subordinate lodges under their control in America, Asia, Africa, Australasia, and wherever the British flag rules.

The Grand Lodge of Hamburg invades the territorial jurisdiction of New York; every Grand Lodge in the United States holds her lodges established here to be clandestine, and all recognition of Hamburg is virtually inhibited. Why? Because there is a supreme and sovereign Grand Lodge in New York. It is asserted that the organization of the Africans is as regular as that of any of the Americans. Suppose that to be so; suppose their work to be exactly like ours; suppose them every way worthy; the very principle upon which they act is the same as in the case of Hamburg, to-wit: occupation of organized Grand Lodge territory, and invasion of Grand Lodge sovereignty.

2. Where there is no Grand Lodge existing under a supreme government, as in Turkey, all the Grand Lodges of the world have concurrent jurisdiction, and may establish and govern lodges there. But when three or more lodges form a grand lodge, severance is complete, its jurisdiction absolute, and all other jurisdiction terminates.

Massachusetts establishes lodges in China, South America, and elsewhere; so do the grand lodges of England, France, Ireland, Prussia or Scotland, because there are no grand lodges in existence where their lodges are formed.

3. There is nothing in the history of Masonry in the United States, analagous to Masonic affairs in Canada, as we will now endeavor to show.

When the independence of the thirteen colonies was acknowledged, Masonry was in an unsettled condition; the grand lodges in the colonies were provincial, and most of the lodges were under the direct government of the home grand lodges, and they even mostly British. There had never been any federative government in the colonies, as in Canada, and with political independence came Masonic independence also. So soon as there were lodges enough, grand lodges were formed in each of the colonies, then changed by act of Congress to States. Each State Grand Lodge held exclusive jurisdiction over its own territory. In any State or territory where no grand lodge existed, the universal rule has been, that jurisdiction is common to all the Grand Lodges in the United States; that is, each one could establish and govern its own Lodges. The government of the United States is exclusive only over the District of Columbia and unorganized territories. The Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia derives no superiority from this fact; she, with all the territorial grand lodges stands on a level with all others. It may be asked if she does not exercise a superior influence by virtue of her central and governmental position? By no means. Her territory is small, her lodges necessarily few, her population fluctuating, and she does not occupy a position equal to that of an organized territory with a governor, legislature and courts, for she is simply governed by the States, aggregated in Congress.

Wherever a State or territorial government exists, the right to form a Grand Lodge follows, whenever there are enough lodges to do so. When the Province of Maine was erected into a State, she formed a grand lodge. Until then she was governed by Massachusetts. When Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin were ceded by Virginia to the United States, grand lodges were formed in them so soon as they were in proper condition. When the Grand Lodge of Illinois formed in 1820, was destroyed, Kentucky, Missouri and Indiana stepped in; when the present Grand Lodge was formed in 1840, their jurisdiction ceased. The Louisiana Grand Lodge once had exclusive jurisdiction over the entire Louisiana purchase; the erection of a State government cut off the exclusive jurisdiction beyond her State line. The Missouri Grand Lodge under the old territorial government once held exclusive jurisdiction over what is now Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Dacotah, Montana, Wyoming, and Colorado. Her erection into a State, left her only concurrent jurisdiction.

The territory of Kansas included Colorada, and her Grand Lodge held exclusive jurisdiction; when her State lines were defined, the lodges in Colorado organized their own grand lodge. California held jurisdiction over Nevada, or a portion of it; the organization of the Grand Lodge of Nevada is almost coeval with its existence as a territory. Oregon and Washington were once one territory. When the former was organized as a State, the latter formed its own grand lodge. All the grand lodges of the United States hold concurrent jurisdiction over Utah, New Mexico, Arizonia, Dacotah, and the Indian Territory; the moment a grand lodge is formed in any one of them, there it ceases. All the grand lodges in the United States hold the same concurrent jurisdiction over all unoccupied countries everywhere. The only case in the United States which might seem at all analogous to that of Canada, is that of Virginia and West Virginia. By her act of secession, Virginia refused to be recognized as a part of the United States, and gave adhesion to the government of the Confederate States. West Virginia refused to do so, organized a separate government and was admitted as a separate State. Here were two distinct governments, acknowledging different sovereignties for the time being.

West Virginia followed the usual course, organized a grand lodge, and was recognized by some, while she was refused recognition by other grand lodges, and she never did get complete recognition until she compromised and parted amicably from the old grand lodge. This is the only instance in the United States where a grand lodge in an old settled country has been divided, and that division grew out of change in political government. Canada can make no such plea. The Grand Lodge of Canada held jurisdiction over the old settled country long known as Upper and Lower Canada—then as Canada East and West—and now as Ontario and Quebec. It is precisely the same country over which the former provincial grand lodges of Canada West, Montreal, and William Henry, and of Quebec and Three Rivers held jurisdiction. The ground taken by the Grand Lodge of Quebec, and the correct ground, too, is that each province should have an independent grand lodge. But here comes a position of things unknown in American History. The Grand Lodge of Canada held, virtually, exclusive jurisdiction over what is Ontario and Quebec. A Parliament for the whole Dominion of Canada exercises general control over all the territory occupied by the Grand Lodge of Canada. The existence of such a grand lodge is a long accomplished fact. The position assumed by the Quebec party is simply destructive and revolutionary; instead of seeking for the formation of two grand lodges from the one, or a peaceful and amicable separation, they in effect declare that the creation of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec is a practical dissolution of the Grand Lodge of Canada, for they cannot escape the logical conclusion that the right to form an independent Grand Lodge in Quebec concedes the same right to the lodges in Ontario.

Grand lodges cannot be disposed of in any such way. Fix it as they may—form as many grand lodges as they will—the Grand Lodge of Canada came into the control of certain jurisdiction in a peaceful way—she cannot be divested of it by violence or force. One province has just as much right and power as the other, to say that the Grand Lodge of Canada has no longer any jurisdiction.

The question may be put in this way: which is the Grand Lodge of Canada, Quebec or Ontario? There is but one answer, neither. Then did the creation of the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario extinguish the Grand Lodge of Canada? No. Then what is the Grand Lodge of Canada? What she ever was. Can she divide? She can abandon her own organization and grand lodges can be formed in the Provinces, or she can permit one province to withdraw, and hold her organization intact in the other.

To our mind, there is but one best way. That is simply for all parties to admit—and such admission is the only manly thing that can be done—that they have been hasty, and undo everything that has been done. That done, separation or division is inevitable. There is no peace like that made face to face. Let Grand Master Stevenson call the Grand Lodge together; let personal differences be reconciled, and then in our judgment, let the lodges one and all in Quebec be permitted to form a grand lodge, and when formed, let the Grand Lodge of Canada induct its officers into their places. This will leave the Grand Lodge of Canada intact in Toronto, and then if she chooses she can change her name. To that compexion it must come in some form. Let it come in peace, charity, and mutual good-will—so that all the world may say, "How good and how pleasant it is, for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Findell's History of Free Masonry.

We are under obligations to Bro. Findell for an English copy of Findell's History of Freemasonry. It is not pleasant to disapprove of the writings of any brother, especially one so earnest and zealous as Bro. Findell. In his notice of Freemasonry in America, he says very little of particular grand lodges, and in his various remarks shows singular inconsistencies, and conclusively proves that he has been imposed upon, or else that he writes without knowledge in one or more instances. His English edition is dedicated to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. On page 591 the date of its formation is placed in 1778, while Dr. Parkman, former Grand Master, in a letter to Bro. Findell, distinctly states that the Massachusetts Grand Lodge was formed in 1733.

On page 610 the German lodges in America are especially commended for resisting the authority of grand lodges, which he takes great pains to denounce as "oppression" and "presumptuous behavior," while all through his brief notice of Masonry in America he takes great pains to notice every attempt at the formation of a general grand lodge, and evidently favors the idea. Now, he takes no small pains to identify with his revolutionary theories all who denounce and are ready to tear down grand lodges, while at the same time he favors a proposition for a general grand lodge, which is so monstrous that it has met with no general favor. To support his approbation of resistance to grand lodge authority, he brings in the African lodges, which are formed in defiance of grand lodge authority, and quotes the editor of the St. Louis Freemason as an exponent of his views, while every one who reads his paper can but know that he is opposed to Bro. Findell's doctrines.

Bro. Findell rails against all Freemasonry, and all outgrowths of Freemasonry, except the first three degrees. In this he quotes Bro. Gouley, an eminent Templar, and the recording officer of the grand bodies of Capitular, Cryptic, and Templar Masonry in Missouri. The author quotes Bro. Parvin, of Iowa, as having said that all degrees but the symbolic ones should be conferred in taverns, or any place but a Masonic hall. Every intelligent Mason in the United States knows that in any such remark by Bro. Parvin, he simply referred to what is known in this country as "side-degrees," and not to what is considered regular. Bro. Parvin is an accomplished workman in Royal Arch Masonry, and was the first Grand High Priest in Iowa. He organized the first council in the Cryptic rite, and is a Past Grand Commander of Templars. And it is as well known that he is a distinguished Scotch Rite Mason, and is at the head of that Order in Iowa.

Grand Master Gardner is also named as a supporter of Bro. Findell's views. Bro. Gardner is the Grand Master of Templars in the United States, and a noted member of the Supreme Council of the 33°.

We do not find fault with Bro. Findell for maintaining the integrity of Symbolic Masonry. The time has really come when its importance and superiority should be vindicated. But when he assumes the role of a historian, we insist that he shall speak the truth without partiality, perversion, or suppression. We insist that a historian shall not seek to uproot and tear down beneficent institutions under the guise of a historian, while he is in fact an agitator, a revolutionist, and an intermeddler.

We trust that his history of Freemasonry in the eastern hemisphere, where the means of arriving at correct conclusions are more easy of access to him, and may prove more reliable than what he has said of us in America.

In the meantime, we do not wish to stay the sale of the book. By all means let it be read, and we especially desire that all our readers who can afford to do so, should judge for themselves as to the justice of our remarks.

Boot Conformator.

Don't run, nor slide over, just read this, you short-stepping, foot-pinched and corn-afflicted fellow-men, and get relief, comfort, activity, and a free step.

For more than forty years, our farmer feet, raised in cow-hides, and bred to freedom and health has been the victim of corns, tight boots, narrow boots, pinching boots, and all sorts of pain-contracting boots and shoes, and no relief. But to all things comes an end. Bro P. L. Porter, agent for Shorey's Boot Conformator and Last Company, 106 Madison street, Chicago, called on us, took the measure of our foot in his machine, and in due time presented us a pair of lasts. Straight we went to Bro. P. L. Drury on Jefferson street in this city, and had a pair of boots ordered. He conformed strictly to the last and the directions upon it, and now we have a pair of well fitting boots, not remarkable for elegance, but very remarkable to us for comfort, utility, roomy toes, freedom for the foot and tenderness for our corns. We can walk like a "thing of life," and woe to what is in front of our toe. If there is any humor in this article, it is sincere for all that. Try the Conformator. It will win.

For this article, for which we would ordinarily charge one hundred dollars, and which will be worth thousands to the proprietors, we get a pair of lasts, and comfort for our feet.

Examiner's Meetings.

A meeting of the Board of Examiners will be held with the lodge at Odin, commencing on the evening of the fourth Tuesday of March instant.

Another meeting will be held at Galesburg, commencing on the evening of the foruth Tuesday of April next.

At these meetings, candidates for Lecturers will be examined, and the manner of opening, and closing, and working a lodge, and the work and lectures will be exemplified.

Schools of Instruction may be organized. if suitable provision is made by those desiring them. It is expected that the Grand Master will be present.

By order of the Board.

GEO. O. IDE, Secretary.

Symbolism of Masonry

M. W. Bro. H. P. H. BROMWELL, by previous invitation, addressed the Craft of Springfield, March 5, upon the symbolism of the first and second degrees in Masonry. The brethren listened for more than one hour with much interest, and at the conclusion, Past G. Master Turner, Hon. L. W. Ross, and the Masters of the several lodges in Springfield were appointed a committee to draft resolutions. The report justly styled the address "masterly and convincing," and closed with a wish that the distinguished brother would lecture at an early day upon the symbolism of the third degree.

The Masters of the lodges in Springfield were appointed a Committee of Arrangements.

Delays.

Owing to the great demand for compositors to do the printing of the Constitutional Convention, now in session in this city, we have had great trouble to get sufficient help to do the work of our office. We trust that our patrons will not get impatient on account of delays in work which we were unable to avoid.

Our Dearborn Brethren

In Chicago had a delightful time at Blair Hall on the evening of Jan. 17. Mr. E. J. Wilson sang, and W. Master Sutton, Past Master Reid, R. W. Breth. Luckey of Polo, and Bailey of the Voice, and Bro. L. D. Barry, S. W. talked, and then all finished with a feast of good things.

R. W. Phares A. Dorwin.

This zealous and able brother departed this life Friday, Feb. 18. He was initiated, passed, and raised in Springfield Lodge No. 4, in 1847, and passed rapidly through the degrees of the chapter and council. In 1860 he received the orders of knighthood in Elwood Commandery, and the degrees of the Scottish Rite in 1865, in this city.

Bro. Dorwin was one of the brightest Symbolic and Templar workmen in the State. For many years he was Master of Central Lodge, of which he was a charter member, and he succeeded the editor of this paper as Commander of Elwood Commandery, in 1861, and was again elected in 1867. Grand Master Buck appointed him Grand Lecturer, and he died with the harness on. Some years ago he made a profession of religion, and united with the Third Presbyterian church in this city, and was soon after elected elder.

For several years he has been in failing health, and it was plain to his friends that he must soon die. He suffered greatly, but died in the triumphs of the faith he professed, and was buried by the commandery.

The deceased was the brother-in-law of R. W. Bro. Charles Fisher, and of the Hon. S. M. Cullom.

Grand Lodge Proceedings.

Before this number reaches our readers, the proceedings of the Grand Lodge will be distributed among the lodges. The statistical table appended to the report on correspondence, shows the following facts: Grand Lodges in the United States and British America, 45; number of lodges, 5,753; total membership, 451,324. New York has the largest, 70,333; Illinois is next, having 33,096.

The Illinois statistics for the previous year are: 610 chartered lodges; receipts, $24,570.50; disbursed, $20,193.71; initiated, 4,042; passed, 3,754; raised, 2,440; admitted, 1,010; died, 278; restored, 98; expelled, 73; suspended, 284; demitted, 1,755; rejected. 1,364.

We do not think any other jurisdiction can show such a remarkable proportion of rejections, being considerably more than twenty per cent.

It reminds us of a remark made by Bro. Cleveland in Chicago, that "lots of fellows get into the church that can never get into a lodge."

P. G. M. Bromwell.

Since listening to Bro. BROMWELL's lecture on the symbolism of the first and second degrees as noticed in another article, we have heard his masterly lecture on the symbolism of the third degree, delivered before a large audience in this city on the evening of the 10th inst. It was perfectly sublime. Dr. BATEMAN presided, and after the lecture the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved. That the Master Masons here assembled have listened with deep interest to the eloquent lecture delivered by M. W. Bro. BROMWELL this evening upon the symbolism of the third degree, for which he will please accept our sincere thanks.

Resolved, That the delivery of an oration upon the symbolism of the three degrees by M. W. Bro. BROMWELL in the M. W. Grand Lodge, will tend to place Symbolic Masonry upon a more elevated plane, to develop its power and beauty, and secure for it, its real place in the affections of Freemasons, far in advance of other branches of Masonry.

HOWE'S MUSICAL MONTHLY—Forty-six pages sheet music, is 35 cents per number; songs and nstrumental music. Elias Howe, 103 Court street, Boston.

What Freemasons can Do.

Freemasons can cultivate the spirit of our Institution in their intercourse with each other. The reputation, influence, and prosperity of the Fraternity will be increased by such a course of conduct. Brethren can be kind and generous towards each other; frank in manner; charitable in speech and act; forbearing and forgiving, and ready to place the best construction on the actions of others.

In this way, the truths and value of our charges, landmarks, and principles, may be exemplified, and the world may learn the power of friendship, morality and brotherly love among Freemasons. In this way, every brother by his life, will give a daily exposition of Masonic teachings and beauty, and none could fail to see how pleasant a place this world would be, if all men were guided by the tenets of a Mason's profession.

Council Monitor.

This is a beautiful little book, of pocket size, prepared by Jackson H. Chase, Grand Lecturer to the Grand Council of New York, Royal and Select Masters, and published by the Masonic Publishing Company at 432 Broome street, New York.

It contains numerous and beautiful plates, illustrating the degrees of Royal, Select, and Super Excellent Master, with full monitorial instructions relative to the same.

These are followed by all needed installation, dedication and constituting ceremonies for use in grand or subordinate councils.

District Grand Lodges.

Our readers will find a well-written, terse and argumentative article from one of our oldest members of the Grand Lodge, in favor of District Grand Lodges in this number. Our pages are open to courteous and temperate articles on both sides, not exceeding a page each, and limited to five in number, giving the close to the writer in this number. We shall take no part in the discussion.

The Kentucky Press Association

Was in session at Lexington, January 12 and 13. The annual address was delivered by R. W. Bro. A. G. Hodges, G. T. of the Grand Lodge. The occasion was graced by a poem, delivered by Mr. Henry T. Stanton, now, since the death of Prentice, the Poet Laureate of Kentucky. The most of it is published in the Kentucky Freemason.

A good supper, a look at Ashland, and visits to several places of interest closed the scene.

Gift Enterprises.

A brother at Kansas has sent us a list of prizes and a circular of a gift enterprise at Mt. Vernon, Indiana, professedly Masonic. Any brother in this State who shall buy or sell or give countenance to the buying or selling of any tickets in that or any other gift enterprise, is liable to Masonic discipline, and every Master of a Lodge is specially charged to see that every brother engaged in any such business is brought to trial and punished.

The only pity is that the Hon. S. C. Pomeroy is not one of the Chicago and Oberlin preachers, who have gained a reputation by pounding a Bible to pieces every three months.—Bro. Geo. Frank Gouley.

German Lodges.

In a criticism to be found in this number in regard to Findell's History of Freemasonry, we alluded to his assertion that the German lodges were freeing themselves from the "oppressions" of Grand Lodges. We know of but two lodges in all this broad country to whom that remark can apply, and those are the two established by the Grand Lodge of Hamburg, in New York, and which are held by all the Grand Lodges in this country to be clandestine. We can speak freely for the German lodges in this State. No other lodges have been more loyal, more obedient, or more attached to the governing body from whence their charters came. We have four German lodges in Chicago, one in Peoria, one in Quincy, one in Alton, one in Belleville, one in Ottawa, and several which are mostly German, and if there is any discontent among them we do not know it.

Take Notice.

M. W. H. G. Reynolds:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—A piece of jewelry has been left in my possession to find an owner. Knowing you can assist me, I send you inscription below, and shall feel greatly obliged if you will give the matter an early attention.

Gratifying.

In the February number we said that our paper would indulge in no further acrimonious or unnecessary controversy. In response we have received many congratulatory and approving letters; the following extract from a letter in the northern part of the State will serve as a specimen of the whole:

"I am glad to see in the February number, that the controversy with some other Masonic periodicals is to be closed so far as you are concerned, for in all candor I must say that they are not agreeable reading, and for the good of Masonry I am glad to see you close your paper against them."

Testimonial.

Our readers have noticed several allusions to M. E. Comp. H. H. Avron, who has distinguished himself at Bombay, India, as a zealous and enlightened Freemason. Having failed in health, he recently declined further service as High Priest of Keystone Chapter of Western India. Upon his retirement, the chapter presented him a costly High Priest's jewel, and so soon as finished, the jewel is to be accompanied by a silver globe.

THE UNION COAL and Iron Transportation Company are erecting extensive works near Joliet, for the manufacture of iron. Joliet gave $75,000, and upwards of $225,000 has already been expended. It will be, when completed, the most thorough and extensive manufactory in the west. P. G. Master Buck is one of the five stock holders.

The Officers of Sterling Chapter

Were installed Dec. 22, by E. Comp. James A. Hawley, G. K. The event of the evening was the presentation of a beautiful agate keystone, set in a solid gold band, on which is inscribed—"To L. Hapgood, with compliments of Sterling Chapter No. 57." For five years Comp. Hapgood has served as Secretary.

Judge not that ye be not Judged.

A clergyman of talent, a Doctor of Divinity, a teacher of youth, wrote to a lady in this State, and with terrible words adjured her to prevent her husband from entering the Masonic fold; and, to clinch the matter, he solemnly declared that if he did become a Freemason, he would "lose his soul." This is assuming the prerogative of the Almighty! this is passing judgment in advance? Let us contemplate the effect of it. If that man has the power to pronounce such judgment, then he consigns George Washington to eternal woe; the blow struck by the heroic Warren was his passport to endless misery; the spotless, useful lives of Michael J. Noyes and Jonathan Young, with their dying testimonies in favor of Freemasonry, and of their hope of salvation through the blood of Christ, only tend to make their punishment more fearful and certain; the long and laborious life of the preacher Going, with all his quiet trophies of good, only tend to a more fearful and unending agony; the veteran Knapp can count his thousands of converts, only to find himself a castaway; our noble and chivalric Davidson, armed with a Presiding Elder's commission, and who upon his death bed testified to the comforts of the Gospel, and his trust in Christ, was only steeping his soul in ineradicable guilt; more than 1,500 preachers in Illinois, and more than 20,000 in the United States, are preaching repentance and good-will, only to be banished to lower depths than the pen can portray; more than 15,000 members of Evangelical churches in Illinois, and more than 200,000 in the United States are forever doomed! Millions are lost souls!

Was there ever such wholesale judgment rendered before? Let us hear no more from that source of the usurpations of the Pope and the Roman church! Purity of life, blameless conversation, disinterested benevolence, and wide-spread charity pass for nothing, but to the bottomless pit this man sentences them!

Take care, sir! "With what judgment you judge, you shall be judged; with what measure you mete it shall be measured to you again."

John P. Ferns, 33d.

We are in receipt of a beautiful photographic likeness of W. Bro. John P. Ferns, the able and faithful Grand Tyler of the Grand Lodge. Bro. Ferns was a charter member of Lafayette Lodge No. 18, granted in 1843, has long lived in Chicago, and by his industry and uprightness, has a character clear and cloudless, is without an enemy, and enjoys the universal respect of the Fraternity. Though well along in years, he is still active and vigorous, and we hope he may long live to enjoy the home he has built up, and the respect of his brethren.

The Freemason's Journal.

Published in Montreal, Canada, once a month, is a new candidate for Masonic favor. The price is one dollar yearly. It is in pamphlet form of sixteen pages, and is the special advocate of the Grand Lodge of Quebec. We cannot see much in its efforts, except a strong inclination to widen the breach in Canada, and force recognition, right or wrong.

The Interior.—The first number of the first volume is before us. It is a plain, good paper, well printed, and very ably edited. It is the organ of the Presbyterian persuasion in the Northwest, and is published at Room 5, Monroe Building, Chicago, by the Western Presbyterian Publishing Company, of which Mayor Mason is the President. The price is $2.50 per year, which is very low for so large and well-filled a paper. We like it because it unfurls its own colors, speaks its own language, and stands squarely on its own platform.

The Bright Side.—The March number of this popular children's paper, just received, presents an unusual variety of contents. Its success has been very remarkable, 25,000 circulation being already secured; the publishers say they intend to make it 100,000 by the time it is one year old, which will be next July. They offer to send the four numbers for March, April, May, and June, free to all who subscribe before July first. Terms, 50 cents a year. Specimen copy free.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—Isa. 8, 20.

9.—No Mason can be lawfully expelled or suspended, by less than a two-third vote of all the members present. Where a Mason is declared suspended or expelled in any lodge by less than a two-thirds vote, the declaration is void, and upon a proper representation of the facts, the Grand Master or grand lodge will set the declaration aside, and both the Master and the lodge where such a declaration is made are liable to discipline.

10.—All lodge dues are payable in advance, unless otherwise provided. Brethren who join in applications for new lodges without demits, are liable to the lodge of which they are members for dues up to the end of the quarter or term in which the charter was granted. If not previously paid, the new lodge becomes responsible for all such dues, lawfully chargeable against any of its members, from and after its constitution.

11.—Whenever a candidate presents himself for initiation, and then solemnly avows his disbelief in Deity, he absolves the lodge from all obligation to him, and virtually declares himself rejected, and his money should be returned to him; if he should reconsider his declaration, and still desires initiation, he must pass through all the forms of petition, reference, report and ballot.

12.—Where a candidate for advancement has been stayed by objection one year or more, and the objection ceases, a new ballot is necessary.

13.—Where an Entered Apprentice or Fellow Craft, has stood as such beyond the ordinary time, a new ballot may be ordered upon the demand of any member.

14.—No brother can be demitted without the vote of his lodge; nor is it proper for the W. M. to entertain a motion for demit while the applicant is in arrears for dues, or under charges. In the absence of any lodge by-laws or rules to the contrary, a demit may be granted upon verbal application, by a majority vote and show of hands.

15—Votes in lodges should be taken by ballot, by rising, or by show of hands.

Editor Trowel:

Dear Sir and Bro: New Jerusalem Lodge of this jurisdiction has received during the past five or six years, communications from various lodges in the west, asking to be informed as to the standing of Bro. John T. Evans, who had applied for charity, and claimed to be a member of the above named lodge.

I feel it to be my duty to state for the information of all concerned, that a person of that name, and answering to the description given in the communications above referred to, was made a M. M. in New Jerusalem Lodge No. 9, on the 1st day of May, 1856, from which date he has paid no lodge dues, in consequence of which he was dropped from the roll of members of said lodge, on the 18th day of October, 1857.

An insertion of this in your valuable paper will probably save many lodges in the Western States the trouble of communicating with my lodge in regard to the standing of Bro. Jno. T. Evans.

Hoping you will warn the Fraternity through the columns of your excellent paper, I remain

Respectfully and fraternally yours,

A. Smith.

Montana, Iowa, Jan. 10th, 1870.

Secretary of Peoria Chapter No. 7.

Dear Sir and Companion: I write to put you, and through you the members of your chapter, on their guard against one A. E. Crippen, a member of our commandery, at this place. He lived here last summer, and succeeded in fleecing several of the Craft here out of various sums of money, kept very bad company, deserted his family and left them in very destitute circumstances indeed, and finally, after several months has turned up in your city, from whence he wrote for a demit to enable him to join your commandery, or rather the commandery in your city. He is a man you can not trust, and I wish you would tell the E. Com. Recorder, also the Fraternity generally. There will be charges preferred against him, at our next meeting, probably. He is probably in some railroad business, or professing to be.

[Signed] H. M. Case.

Expulsion.

Virginia City, Montana, March 1, 1870.

Bro. H. G. Reynolds & Son, Editors Masonic Trowel, Springfield, Illinois:

Dear Sirs and Brethren—At a regular communication of the above lodge you were fraternally requested to publish the following in your journal:

George W. Todd, of Virginia City Lodge No. 1, A. F. & A. M., Montana Territory, was on February 26th, 1870, after trial duly had, expelled from all the rights and privileges of Masonry.

Fraternally yours,

Theo. Muffly, Secretary.

New Work.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF COLONEL E. D. BAKER, United States Senator from Oregon, &c.

We have had laid upon our desk a pleasant little volume of 150 pages with the foregoing title, from the pen of our fellow-townsmen, Jos. Wallace, Esq. The necessity for some such work as this has long been felt by the many friends and admirers of the late Colonel Baker, and we are glad to see this want being supplied. The book contains the fullest account hitherto printed of the eventful and brilliant life of the deceased, including some of his more celebrated speeches and orations, with an appendix, embracing the eulogies of ex-Senator Browning, the late Senator McDougall and Representative Colfax, pronounced in Congress on the occasion of the formal notice of Senator Baker's death. The sketch is written with care, and the style of the closing portion especially — devoted to a review of the orator's character — is brilliant and eloquent. We trust the work will meet, as it deserves, with a ready sale.

The Technologist.—We have received the first number of the above named publication, which is to be published monthly, and is devoted to engineering, manufacturing, and building, and is issued by the Industrial Company, at 176 Broadway, New York, at $2.00 per year, and at 20 cents for single numbers. It is full of instructive articles, good plates, and late art news. Its exposure of the sunless and airless tenements of the city, is worth the price of the work.

The Mothers' Journal for March opens with an elegant plate engraving of the Falls of the Yo Semite. On the last page is a piece of music entitled, "Nearer Home." There is variety enough in its articles to please all, from the grand-parents to the little children. It contains fifty pages monthly, at $2.00 per year. For specimen copies, free, address with stamp, Mothers' Journal, Chicago.

The Protestant Missionary is edited and published by Rev. J. G. White. Its intention is to expose the danger of the Roman Catholic Religion. The editor is a Freemason, and the Cynosure says that Masonry is worse than Catholocism.

Subscriptions Received for The Masonic Trowel from February 8th to March 10th, both days Included.

Miscellaneous Reading.

"My Mental Habitation."

BY MISS EMILY E. MAYO.

I had been for several hours, vainly endeavoring to bring my scattered thoughts into a channel, which might result in some ideas, from which to frame a composition. My attention was at length arrested by a low murmuring, which seemed to proceed from the chambers of my mental habitation. My organs had been aroused by my late efforts, and were kindly offering me advice.

Havn't you finished your composition yet? said Combativeness; why how slow you are. Go on and write. Don't stop to look at every word. I could compose one while you are thinking of a subject.

Caution interrupted this uncomplimentary speech, by saying that he thought it better to delay writing, until I was in a better mood for it, lest by being too hasty, I should spoil a good composition.

Approbativeness agreed with the last speaker, and begged that I would not be offended; but suggested that unless I was sure of having a production that would elicit much praise, I had better not write at all.

Self-Esteem now stalked forward with an air of so much importance, that I commanded him to remain silent.

Destructiveness, who had worked himself into quite a passion, wondered why I waited; he believed now, the fault was with Language; it was always the way, that when there was writing to be done, that person was never ready to perform his part of the labor.

Do not be too hard upon poor Language, said Benevolence; he works harder to perform his part, than all the rest of us.

You might borrow a composition, said Secretiveness; it would save us all much trouble, and none ever need know it. For shame! said Conscientiousness; would you palm off the production of another for your own? Secretiveness, thus repulsed, retired, amidst the laughter of Mirthfulness.

Continuity and Firmness advised me to persevere, and complete a subject once begun. Don't write much, said Acquisitiveness; it will take to much paper. Yes, chimed in Alimentiveness; people may be tired and want their supper. Inhabitativeness thought "the pleasure of home" would be an excellent subject. Ideality suggested something elegant, refined and rather poetic. Sublimity urged the grand and beautiful in nature. Order hoped that I would preserve my sheet from blots, and arrange my ideas systematically.

Veneration now appeared, attended by Faith and Hope; and the assembly was instantly hushed into silence. He advised me to refrain from everything light and frivolous, and to choose some sacred subject, as prayer. Faith suggested confidence in God. Hope encouraged me to proceed, and pictured to me the satisfaction I should win, when success crowned my efforts.

I listened attentively to all his advice, and came to the conclusion, that since they had manifested such a desire to render me assistance in my need, it was no more than a simple performance of duty to enter their abode, and examine separately the capabilities and tendencies of the different organs, that I might select also, from the higher, those who should guide and control wisely, the inferior and more selfish occupants of my mental habitation.

I appointed Conscience, Reason, and Benevolence, chief officers. These I directed to act in concert, and each consult the others on all occasions; to be faithful in the discharge of duty, and oblige the other organs to listen to their dictates, and obey them. I gave Mirthfulness into the charge of Veneration. Hope I desired to be much with Caution. Faith was to exert an elevating and purifying influence over all.

I charged Veneration never to let the fire of Devotion grow dead upon its altar, but assisted by Faith and Hope, to keep the inner sanctuary pure, a beautiful repository of holy aspirations. Having given these directions, I entrusted the key to Conscientiousness, and left them, resolving that my visits there should be more frequent, for nowhere could I spend an hour more profitably, than in gaining a thorough knowledge of the dwellers of my mental habitation.

Stick to Your Bush.

Mr. Morgan was a rich, and also a good man. The people of the town respected him, sent him to Parliament, and seldom undertook anything without asking his advice. If a school-house was to be built, the plan had to be talked over with him. Widow P—— asked him what she should plant in her field; farmer S—— always got his advice in buying cattle, and Mrs. —— consulted him about bringing up her boys.

When asked how he was so successful, Mr. Morgan said: "I will tell you how it was. One day, when I was a lad, a party of boys and girls were going to a distant pasture to pick whortleberries. I wanted to go with them, but was fearful that my father would not let me. When I told him what was going on, and he at once gave me permission to go with them, I could hardly contain myself for joy, and rushed into the kitchen and got a big basket, and asked mother for a luncheon. I had the basket on my arm, and was just going out of the gate, when my father called me back. He took hold of my hand, and said, in a very gentle voice: 'Joseph, what are you going for, to pick berries or to play?' 'To pick berries,' I replied. 'Then, Joseph, I want to tell you one thing. It is this: when you find a pretty good bush, do not leave it to find a better one. The other boys and girls will run about, picking a little here and a little there, wasting a great deal of time, and not getting many berries. If you do as they do, you will come home with an empty basket. If you want berries stick to your bush.'

"I went with the party, and we had a capital time. But it was just as my father said. No sooner had one found a good bush than they left their several places and ran off to the new-found treasure. Not content more than a minute or two in one place, they rambled over the whole pasture, got very tired, and at night had but very few berries. My father's words kept running in my ears, and I 'stuck to my bush.' When I had done with one, I found another, and finished that; then I took another. When night came, I had a large basket full of nice berries, more than all the others put together, and was not half so tired as they were. I went home happy. But when I entered I found my father had been taken ill. He looked at my basket full of ripe blackberries, and said, 'well done, Joseph. Was it not just as I told you? Always stick to your bush.'

"He died a faw days after, and I had to make my way in the world as best I could. But my father's words sunk deep into my mind, and I never forgot the experience of the whortleberry party—I 'stuck to my bush.' When I had a fair place, and was doing tolerably well, I did not leave it and spend weeks and months in finding one a little better. When other young men said: 'Come with us, and we will make a fortune in a few weeks,' I shook my head and 'stuck to my bush.' Presently my employers offered to take me into business with them. I stayed with the old house until the principals died, and then I had everything I wanted. The habit of sticking to my business led people to trust me, and gave me a character. I owe all I have and am to this motto—'stick to your bush.'"—Moore's Rural New Yorker.

A Wife's Earnings.

"She considereth a field and buyeth it. With the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard."

There are many, who like Solomon's woman, would rejoice to do something to aid their husbands in the task of getting, yet who can devise no method of doing so. The few avenues open to women for earning money, seem almost all to be available only to single women. Yet there are wives, who, without neglecting home duties, do aid largely in building up a husband's fortunes.

One lady I knew, who with a good sewing machine, often earned six dollars a week, besides attending faithfully to her home-cares. She had taken the pains to make it known that she wished to obtain such employment, and as she was a superior worker, and made but moderate charges, she usually had as much stitching on hand as she had time for.

Another married lady, who was very skillful in dress-making, found it profitable to employ a good domestic in the kitchen, while she busied herself in sewing. The demand for her services was so great she was often obliged to employ extra help to do the plainer part of the work.

Another friend in New York city, with a large family of little ones, still kept up her music by constantly giving lessons to a few pupils. She was in comfortable circumstances, but she was anxious to teach her own daughters as they grew up, and the tuition fees were a very convenient addition to even a good income.

Where there is capital enough to make the investment, a knitting machine may be made very profitable. It is yet so little in use that there could be but little competition as there is in the case of sewing machine work. A woman of an energetic stamp might set up a little bazaar of such work in her own parlor, and make it a source of much profit. A lady who had tried various other methods in getting a living, says that she finds this by far the most profitable. She could often make nearly twenty dollars a week, and found always a good demand for her services.

We should take this matter into consideration in the education of our daughters. Wo should strive to qualify them in some way to earn their own living, and then they are prepared for many emergencies of life which would otherwise plunge them in the deepest despondency.

It is a pleasant feeling for a wife that she has some little resources of her own to draw upon, for many little things she would otherwise, very probably, do without. Her little gifts particularly, seem doubly her gifts, when she has fairly earned them.

A beloved friend who is a constant and most fearful sufferer, yet has earned several hundred dollars this past year by her pen, and by giving music lessons.

Still many a wife who has never earned a dollar in her married days, has bought fields and planted vineyards by her prudent economy in the management of a husband's earnings, and this is a department that is open to all house wives. "A penny saved is two pence earned," and on this principle any wife may become a famous money getter.—Mother's Journal.

Sea-Side Thoughts.

I had turned over the wet pebbles and the damp weeds, and sought with naked feet amongst the waves for some bright shell or colored stone to carry home, but I could find none. Tired out, I sat down on a pile of stones to rest, and to watch the waves unroll themselves on the waiting sands. I heeded not the tide, but let it go and come without notice. After a longer interval than I dare tell, considering I was without boots and stockings, and my coat damp with the spray of the last tide, I woke up from my dreaming and renewed my search for a prize; and sure enough there was a shell, glistening and gleaming, colored like sunlit crystal, just dropped from the white fingers of some darling wave. I did not hurry to possess myself of it, but sat still, admiring. It was mine; I was sure I could reach it at any moment with my stick, and there was no one near on this lonely beach to pick it up. Splash, splash, and up rolled a huge wave, hissing and hurrying, rattling the stones, wetting my feet; and the shell—where is it? I looked round; I followed the receding water; dripping sea grass and creamy clots of froth only remained to meet me; the shell, the beautiful shell, was gone! Old Neptune had altered his mind, and taken back his pearl. A little loss this, but uttering a lofty lesson—never to lose an opportunity of taking every gift of mercy or usefulness the tide of time may bring us. If unused, neglected, the wave that brought it will soon take it away.—Masonic Mirror.

Sober Meditation by Mark Twain.

In Mark Twain's new volume of reminiscences of foreign travels, he for once abandons his persistent habit of making fun of everything, and thus discourses of the Egyptian Sphynx:

After years of waiting, it was before me at last. The great face was so sad, so earnest to longing, so patient. There was a dignity not of earth in its mein; and in its countenance a benignity, such as never anything human wore. It was stone, but it seemed sentiment. If ever image of stone thought, it was thinking. It was looking toward the verge of the landscape, yet looking at nothing—nothing but distance and vacancy. It was looking over and beyond everything of the present and far into the past. It was gazing out over the ocean of time—over lines of century waves which, further and further receding, closed nearer and nearer together, and blended at last into one unbroken tide, away toward the horizon of remote antiquity.

It was thinking of the wars of departed ages; of the empires it had seen created and destroyed; of the nations whose birth it had witnessed, whose progress it had watched, whose annihilation it had noted; of the joy and sorrow, the life and death, the grandeur and decay, of five thousand slow-revolving years. It was the type of an attribute of man—of a faculty of his heart and brain. It was Memory—Retrospection—wrought into visible, tangible form. All who know what pathos is in memories of days that are accomplished and facts that have vanished—albeit only a trifling score of years gone by—will have some appreciation of the pathos that dwells in these grave eyes that look so steadily back upon the things they knew before history was born—before tradition had being—things that were, and forms that moved, in a vague area which even poetry and romance scarce knew of—and passed one by one away, and left the stony dreamer solitary in the midst of a strange new age and uncomprehended scenes.

The sphynx is grand in its loneliness: it is imposing in its magnitude; it is impressive in the mystery that hangs over its story. And there is that in the overshadowing majesty of this eternal figure of stone, with its accusing memory of the deeds of all ages, which reveals to one something of what he shall feel when he shall stand at last in the awful presence of God.

The year 1870 corresponds to the year 6583 of the Julian period; also to the 7378–79 of the Byzantine era; the 5630–31 of the Jewish era, and the 1287 of the Mohammedan era. It embraces the latter part of the ninety-fourth and the beginning of the ninety-fifth year of American Independence. The first day of January, 1870, is the 3,404,064th day since the commencement of the Julian period.

The Jewish year 5530 is the sixth of the 297th cycle, and is embolismic, i. e., having time inserted to produce regularity. It began September 5th, 1869, and ends September 25, 1870. It contains 13 months, or 385 days and 55 Sabbaths. The year 5631 will have only 355 days and 52 Jewish Sabbaths. It will begin September 26, 1870, and end September 15, 1871.

The names of the Jewish mouths are Tisri, Marchesvan, Cisien, Thebel, Schaf, Adar, Nisan, Ijas, Sivan, Tammuz, Ab, and Elul. The month Sebat corresponds very closely with our January, and Tisri, the first Jewish month, with our October. For the year 5630, the month Veader is inserted between Adar and Nison.

The Mohammedan year 1286, or 355 days, begins April 13, 1869, and ends April 2, 1870. The year 1287, of 354 days, begins April 3, 1870, and ends March 22, 1871. The first month of the Mohammedan year is named Muharrem, and corresponds to our April. The names of the other months in their order are Saphar, Rabia I, Rabia II, Jomadhi I, Jomadhi II, Rejeb, Shaban, Ramadan, Schewall, Ds'l-Kadah, and Ds'l-Rejiah. The month Schewall corresponds to our January,

Among his most violent critical assailants was R. H. Horne, of whom I have already treated. I have related, in a previous number how, after twenty eight years' estrangement, I had reconciled Wordsworth and Leigh Hunt. I consequently resolved to try a similar experiment on Horne and Montgomery. Upon my arrival at my house with Montgomery, on the evening in question, I was privately informed by my servant that Horne was in the library. Taking Montgomery into the room, I introduced them to each other under the assumed names of Smith and Jones. Excusing myself on the plea of dressing for dinner, I left them alone. As neither had seen the other before, they were puzzled; but as Horne knew he wasn't Smith, and Montgomery was equally convinced he wasn't Jones, they sat for a few seconds gazing at each other in a state of pleasant bewilderment.

At last Mr. Horne broke the spell of silence by saying—

"Sir, as I am not Mr. Smith, perhaps you are not Mr. Jones; my name is Richard Henry Horne."

To which the other replied—

"And I am the Rev. Robert Montgomery." And extending his hand, he added, "I am very glad to meet you, my dear Mr. Horne."

"The devil you are!" exclaimed Mr. Horne, grasping the proffered hand.

When I returned, in a few minutes, they were laughing and chatting as though they had been friends all their life. They were mutually pleased with each other, and maintained a pleasant social intercourse from that time.

Montgomery humorously told me afterwards, "When Horne said, 'The devil you are!' I thought it was a sly allusion to my sobriquet of 'Satan Montgomery'"—a title which was bestowed upon him by his enemies, from his famous epic poem of Satan.—Oliver Optic's Magazine.

INDIAN SAGACITY.—An Indian, upon his return home to his hut one day, discovered that his venison, which had been hung up to dry, had been stolen. After going a short distance, he met some persons, of whom he inquired if they had seen a little, old white man, with a short gun, accompanied by a small dog with a short tail. They replied in the affirmative; and upon the Indian's assuring them that the man thus described had stolen his venison, they desired to be informed how he was able to give such a minute description of a person whom he had never seen. The Indian answered thus: "The thief, I know, is a little man, by his having made a pile of stones in order to reach the venison, from the height I hung it standing on the ground; that he is an old man, I know by his short steps, which I have traced over the dead leaves in the woods; that he is a white man, I know by his turning out his toes when he walks, which an Indian never does; his gun I know to be short, by the mark which the muzzle make by rubbing the bark of the tree on which it leaned; that the dog is small, I know by his tracks; and that he has a short tail I discovered by the mark of it in the dust where he was sitting at the time his master was taking down the meat."

ONE OF THE OLDEST PATRIOTS.—Among the visitors at the Presidential mansion recently, was John Kitts, of Baltimore, a soldier of the Revolution, now residing in Baltimore, accompanied by Miss Kate H. Simpson, a relative of Mr. Kitts, who called to pay their respects to the President. The veteran, with but little assistance, walked up the long flight of stairs leading to the President's office, and although over one hundred and eight years of age, did not complain of fatigue. The President received the aged visitor with the profoundest respect, and listened to his conversation with the deepest interest. He alluded to the fact that he had met every President of the United States; that he witnessed the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, and that he could not hope to survive another Presidential campaign, and while his memory still served him he had called to pay his farewell regards to the Chief Magistrate of a nation for the independence of which he had fought, and whose glory remained undimmed. Leaving the executive mansion, he proceeded to the capitol, where General Banks met him and escorted him to the floor of the House of Representatives, and on the motion of General Banks, the privileges of the floor were extended to the old veteran. During his visit there a large number of the Representatives gathered about him to pay their respects, and for a time the business of the house was suspended. A voluntary contribution of $250 was presented to him, and it is expected a bill granting a pension will soon be introduced.

ROBINSON CRUSOE'S home—the island of Juan Fernandez—is encircled with a halo of wild, romantic interest by the boys and girls who have found De Foe's narritive most delightful entertainment. But the island has been invaded and utilitized. In 1868 Robert Wehrdan, a Saxon engineer, bought Juan Fernandez, and induced a comapny of Germans, sixty or seventy in number, to migrate thither. They are delighted with their new home. They find it a lovely and fertile spot, stocked already with herds of wild goats, and with a few wild horses and donkeys. They have carried with them cattle, swine and fowls, agricultural and fishing implements, and all needful equipments for a strong colony. The grotto, so famous as Robinson's house, still remains. It is situated in a large valley, covered with an exuberant growth of wild turnips.

George I. Bergen.

When we resided in Knox Co., we were acquainted with Hon. Geo. I. Bergen, late assessor of Internal Revenue in the 5th District, lately deceased. No one enjoyed the confidence of all classes more. He resided in Galesburg from the age of eleven years, learned the wagon-makers' trade, and after his majority became famous in business. He was born in Menard Co., Dec. 31, 1827; has been twice married and leaves a widow and three children. Nothwithstanding the anti Masonic sentiment in Galesburg, he joined the Masonic Fraternity and marched onward to the Templars' degree. He was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church. Attacked with cancer in the tongue, he battled manfully with the disease, but his premonitions are well set forth in words penned by him, Nov. 18:

> "Just two years ago to-day, Mrs. Bergen died. If I should not live until after mother is buried, I want a separate funeral, on account of the brethren. Oh, I have hoped and hoped against hope. It is better to be prepared for the worst. Ten days ago I went some ways down into the dark valley, until sight was dim and I felt its cold chill, but 'Our Father,' for some cause, called me back. I trust I am prepared to enter the Grand Lodge above, and to rest in peace with the Great Architect.
> "It is hard to leave those three little chidren to the cold charities of this world. This has been my greatest source of anxiety."

RELIGION IN FRANCE.—There is no country in Europe where religion "of all kinds" is so carefully and impartially cherished and maintained by the State as in France. The population of the empire consists of 36,300,664 Roman Catholics, whose clergy receive pay from the State amounting to 49,819,936 francs, or about $10,000,000; 1,591,150 Protestants, whose clergy receive 1,493,463 francs, or about $298,685; and 158,994 Jews, whose rabbis receive 206,000 francs, or $41,500. These are the official figures. The whole income of the Roman Catholic clergy is about $20,000,000, and that of the Protestant ministers about $750,000. There are 17 archbishops and 69 bishops of the Catholic Church. The pay of the Archbishop of Paris is $10,000; each of the other archbishops have $4,000, and the bishops have only $3,000 each. It is a considerably better thing, it appears, to be a minister of a fashionable church in New York than an archbishop in France. Six of the archbishops, however, get an extra allowance on account of their being cardinals, and, as they are also ex-officio Senators, they get a further sum of $600 in this capacity. There are 192 vicar generals, whose pay is from $300 to $500 a year; 723 canons, with salaries ranging from $320 to $480; 3,531 cures, with incomes from $240 to $320; and 31,569 curates, whose stipends are from $180 to $240.

Died.

He was a faithful Mason, good citizen, and much respected, and was buried with Masonic honors.

Witches in the Cream.

Through all the long, long winter's day,
 And half the dreary night,
We churned, and yet no butter came;
 The cream looked thin and white.

Next morning, with our hopes renewed,
 The task began again;
We churned and churned till back and arms
 And head did ache with pain.

The cream rose up, then sulking fell,
 Grew thick, and then grew thin;
It splashed and spattered in our eyes,
 On clothes and nose and chin.

We churned it fast, and churned it slow,
 And stirred it round and round;
Yet all the livelong weary day
 Was heard the dasher's sound.

The sun sank in the gloomy west,
 The moon rose ghastly pale;
And still we churned, with courage low,
 And hopes about to fail.

When in walked Granny Dean, who heard,
 With wonder and amaze,
Our troubles. As she crossed herself,
 And in the fire did gaze.

"Lord help us all," she quickly said,
 And covered up her face;
"Lord help us all," for, as you live,
 There's witches in the place.

"There's witches here within this churn,
 That have possessed the cream.
Go bring the horse-shoe that I saw
 Hang on the cellar beam."

The shoe was brought, when round and round
 She twirled it o'er her head;
"Go drive the witches from that cream,"
 In solemn voice she said.

Then tossed it in the fire, till red
 With heat it soon did turn,
And dropped it 'mong the witches dread
 That hid within the churn.

Once more the dasher's sound was heard—
 Have patience with my rhyme—
For, sure enough, the butter came
 In twenty minute's time.

Some say the temperature was changed
 With horse-shoe glowing red;
But when we ask old Granny Dean,
 She only shakes her head.

The Leaf.

I saw one leaf upon a tree remaining
 Which by a feeble, trembling tenure hung;
The cold, chill winds of Winter, were complaining,
And heaps of dead leaves, wet with constant raining.
 Were here and there in fitful eddies flung.

Still in the piercing blast that lone leaf quivered,
 As though each gust would force it from its hold:
Or, as it dying were, and feebly shivered,
Ere to the dull cold grasp of earth delivered,
 And with its dead and rotten brethren rolled.

From the black north a fiercer blast came sweeping,
 And from its tottering hold the leaf was hurled
Down to the ground; the bitter rain seemed weeping,
In its sad, icy tears the dead leaves steeping—
 While in the rushing wind they madly whirled.

And then it seemed the only hope had parted,
 While desolation did supremely reign;
'Twas like the last trust of the broken-hearted;
Yet was a consolation then imparted,
 Which eased my spirit of a weight of pain.

For as my heart was thus so sadly viewing
 The dying leaf, and seeing but its tomb,
I thought upon the coming spring; renewing
All that seemed desolate, and for dead leaves, strewing
 The laughing earth with flowers of gayest bloom.

'Tis thus we should forever look at sorrow—
 But as a casting our dead leaves away,
To give place to a brighter bloom to-morrow;
And from the freshening face of nature borrow
 All joyous emblems—a perpetual May.

The Opposers of Masonry.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

There is an old Spanish proverb which says: "Tell me who you live with, and I will tell you who you are." Though it may not aptly apply in every case, or to every individual, yet the rule as a general one, that a man's character can be judged by the company he keeps, is indisputably true. Every one naturally seeks the society of congenial minds, and associations are what make up the joys as well as the sorrows of human life. In all nations and countries, and under every form of government, cliques, societies, associations, and organizations exist, founded on the fact that persons of the same or similar mental culture, of the same tastes and habits, of the same inclinations and characters, seek companionship.

But this rule extends still further than this. We may judge of the character of an individual, and of an association also, by knowing the character of those who oppose it, and show themselves to be its enemies. We judge of a Christian church by the demeanor of its members. We also may arrive at a conclusion concerning it, by noticing who oppose it, or who constitute themselves its enemies. In regard to Masonry, we have seen that it is a moral, religious, and benevolent Institution, and have the right to draw the inference, which is undoubtedly true, that its members are moral, and religious, and benevolent. This conclusion is legitimate from the premises laid down, and the positions established, and is beyond successful contradiction true. We now propose to adopt the other method of examination and see what is the character of the opposers or enemies of Masonry.

In the outset, we say that the enemies of Masonry are illiberal in their feelings and ideas, destitute of true charity, and wanting in generosity to their fellows. This is the general rule. Of coure there are exceptions to it, as there are to all such rules. This we shall endeavor to make appear before we close this paper. And if we should succeed in our design, we shall then have proved that our Fraternity is worthy the patronage and support of all liberal, charitable, and generous minds.

Perhaps we can not do better than to commence in our own age and country, and see what is the opposition that is now surging against us. A society has organized to destroy Masonry. It is led and managed by those who could say with the Apostle, that "after the most strictest sect I lived a Pharisee." A liberal idea would be out of place in their minds. Even in their religious opinions they are as morose and unbending as the early Puritans, and adopt a creed that includes none in the terms of grace, except they accept the propositions held out by their sect. So true is this, that it has been said by some of them that a Mason's chances for ultimate salvation are doubtful. But little affected by the progress and expansion of ideas which the present age has witnessed, they cling with unbending tenacity to the ancient opinions—the ancient ideas – the ancient forms, and even to the ancient prejudices, and bring up together to do battle against our Institution. These cast-iron-souled men no doubt have their uses; but they were doubtless more useful in an iron age, than now. Of all the leaders of the late crusade against Masonry, we do not recollect one who possesses a liberal and expanded mind, a genial character or a character that commends itself to men of liberal views and feelings. So true is this that we do not believe that they will claim to possess those attributes. On the contrary we believe that the leaders of that crusade would think it praise to have it said that they were stern, unbending, "severe in aspect, and austere in act." They make no pretension to suavity of manner, to liberality of ideas, or charity of sentiment, and scarcely of mercy towards the sinful and those who go astray.

Now we ought not to expect that such men should speak well of an institution founded upon charity and benovolence. When men reverse the apostolic apothegm and hold that faith and hope are greater than charity, and contribute more to the formation of a Christian character, we have no reason to expect they will favor any institution that holds to the truth of that saying with the fullest belief, that "now abideth Faith, Hope, and Charity, but the greatest of these is Charity." And we find that they do not. They build their perfect character on the former principles, we on the latter. There can be little more assimilation between the two, than there is between God and mammon. Thus when the men who think it a sin to laugh, and that a charitable act brings us no nearer the Divine Presence, avow themselves the enemies of Masonry, we exhibit no surprise. Our association does not recognize that kind of spirit as social or desirable. Hence they oppose us, as they will do as long as they possess these morose and sour dispositions. When they get rid of them, they may be able to appreciate the beauties and benefits of our Order. Until then, we say they should be permitted to growl and bark as much as their austere dispositions may demand.

There is another class, or perhaps it would be more proper and exact to say another portion of the same class, which take a slightly different view of the case, and oppose Masonry for different motives. We refer now to those who assume an antagonistic position to Masonry, because they suppose it will decrease their influence with their churches. Of this sub-class the Catholic clergy form a fair, but not an isolated example. We fear that there are many other Christian ministers who occupy the same ground. Masonry is at war with whatever is exclusive. It is antagonistic to everything that cramps the mind or binds it in shackles of party or sect. Hence those who wish to so bind the mind must oppose the power that breaks the chain, and gives liberty to the captive.

There can be no doubt, and in fact we ought to acknowledge it, that the associations of the lodge are calculated to remove the prejudices of the members which they may have entertained against persons or societies, and to inculcate a broader toleration. We doubt exceedingly whether it would be in the power of President Blanchard to convince an intelligent Mason, whose daily walk and conversation was that of a Christian, that he would be cast off because he did not happen to believe in the peculiar system of faith which is received by that distinguished divine; and we are just as certain that his Holiness Pius IX. would lose caste with one of his believers, who after having attended the lodge for a series of years, and found a member to be all that a Mason should be, should be told that the fact of his membership in the lodge would secure his everlasting destruction.

Masonry is a great leveler. It is also a great reformer of ideas. It is no friend of pretense or profession. Hence those who assume to stand on higher ground than their neighbors; those who are cramped and confined to a narrow space in ideas; those who profess and do not possess true merit, will not be found among its supporters. Hence it is that almost all the opposition that the Order now encounters comes from the churches. There is no organized opposition that we are aware of, outside of churches. There are very few individuals even, who denounce Masonry, but are members or followers of a Christian church. It may be a saddening fact, but it is a fact nevertheless. And we think we have shown in a brief manner why this is so. Gloomy Christians can not endure the rays of light and liberality that it sends forth. Ambitious Christians can not book its influences which counteract their selfish designs. This is the whole subject in a nutshell.

We have but a word to say of the argument which may be raised on the ground that being opposed to the Christian church, it must be wrong. It is not opposed to the Christian church. Let this be understood. It is opposed to that pharisaic pride that some members of Christian churches exhibit, but is in harmony with the Christian religion which breathes "peace on earth, good will to men." Against the pure Christianity of the Great Master, Masonry has no warfare. Against those who make it a stumbling-block in the way of the progress of truth, we draw the keen blade of reason and fact.

But suppose these arbitrary rulers of the church do oppose Masonry? Suppose they account themselves as enemies? Let it so be! We would not change the fact if we could. We remember that when the Saviour was upon earth, and teaching the Gospel of love that these ambitious Christians seem to have forgotten, that those who made the loudest professions of religion were his most cruel persecutors. If they persecuted the Master then, what ought we to expect of them now, towards those who humbly seek to be governed by his law, and to "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God."

Such are the enemies of Masonry. The Order has friends in every Christian church; in every religious sect in Christendom; humble workers, liberal in sentiment, honest in purpose, and generous in action—the salt of the earth and the light of the world.

Spring-Time.

Yes, sweet spring has come again. The grim ice king has been compelled to surrender to the melting power of the young prince of the year. Nature comes forth to give him a glad welcome. Even now the tender shoots of grass begin to exhibit themselves; the mild south wind is blandly breathing a renewed vitality into our systems; the feathered songsters are again appearing in their wonted haunts, and all animated nature is uniting in one universal chant of praise for the return of young spring. The very sky manifests a fresher aspect.

What a beautiful type of that resurrection so graphically described in the Bible, most distinctly by St. Paul in the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians, and through which we, as Masons, hope to gain admission to the Celestial Lodge above, into the immediate presence of our Supreme Father and Master.

It seems to me that the Mason should love the spring-time more than any other season of the year, because, if properly used or improved, it must impart to us more pure happiness than any other.

There are some practical lessons to be drawn from a thoughtful contemplation of spring time which will greatly benefit us if heeded, viz.:

1st. It is a winning season. By its melting, subduing power it has moulded the hoary fellow into something more pliable, more pleasant to see, has won him from his ice-bound castle and snowy bed to bathe in the oblivious stream, and, by old Time's transmuting power, to be changed into a person of a much more pleasing exterior, who comes rushing tumultuously upon us, shedding joy all around. This young creature is spring-time himself, with curling tresses shaken by the breezes, created by his own tumultuous and erratic movements, rosy-cheeked, dimple-chin, fair-complexion, the very personification of grace and beauty. This, then, we learn from spring that we should be winning, by our own intrinsic worth and melting power.

2d. It is a happy season. Spring comes into existence as cold winter passes away, making room for him, as it were, leaping from the cold and uncongenial embraces of King Winter, and in its joyous course is joy triumphant. So should we, as we pass from the cold and weird influences of a selfish world into the warmer climes or homes, as social friendship, as evinced by the principles of this most ancient Institution, become happy and joyful also.

3d. It is a mild and sympathetic season. The winds come upon us more gently; the storms more soft-like; the sun beats not so fiercely. The breezes, as they fan our brows, seem to enter the inner of our being, and become identified with the very subjects of our thought, and the gentle rain storm makes us sad or thoughtful, according to the circumstances which may affect us.

The sun also has a powerful effect upon us. So with our brother Mason. We should be mild and sympathetic, no matter how much or how sore the temptation that calls us aside from the mild exercise of power inherent in us. We should always endeavor to cultivate a mild exterior, and in the woes and sorrows of an afflicted or distressed brother, we should ever be joined in a close and generous sympathy.

Therefore, no matter whether shorter or longer we may live, the feelings growing out of the spring-time of our existence should be felt and cherished always.

M. W. H. G. Reynolds:

Dear Sir and Brother—In the last Trowel, page 41, you say: "The Louisiana Grand Lodge once had exclusive jurisdiction over the entire Louisiana purchase. * * * The Missouri Grand Lodge under the old Territorial government once held exclusive jurisdiction over what is now Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, and Colorado." In the above you committed several errors which I take the liberty of calling your attention to, simply for the purpose of keeping history correct. Louisiana was purchased in 1803, and the Louisiana Grand Lodge was organized in 1812. After the purchase, and before the formation of the Grand Lodge, the purchase was divided into the Territory of Orleans and District of Louisiana. In 1812, the latter became the Missouri Territory, and in 1820, a portion of it became the State of Missouri. After the formation of the Louisiana Grand Lodge, and before the formation of the Missouri Grand Lodge in 1821, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Indiana, all exercised jurisdiction by creating lodges in what is now known as Missouri, but the Grand Lodge of Louisiana never exercised any kind of jurisdiction in this portion of the Territory. From these facts I conclude that she confined her exclusive jurisdiction to that portion of the purchase called the Territory of Orleans, and simply claimed concurrent jurisdiction in the District of Louisiana, and probably used it in Arkansas and other places, but not in Missouri. The State of Missouri was organized in 1820, and the Grand Lodge of Missouri the next year, with exclusive jurisdiction within the political boundaries of the State, and concurrent jurisdiction only in the Territories you mention.

From the above statistics, you will see at once that the Grand Lodge of Louisiana never had exclusive jurisdiction over that portion of the Louisiana purchase now known as Missouri, and that the Grand Lodge of Missouri never had exclusive jurisdiction over any of the Territories.

Fraternally yours,

W. R. Penick.

Bro. Reynolds:

My Dear Sir and Bro.—Knowing you to be deeply interested in the advancement and prosperity of the Craft, I thought it might be interesting to yourself, as well also, to the numerous readers of The Trowel, to receive information as to its present doings and condition in this comparatively newly settled portion of the Great West.

Walla Walla, as you are undoubtedly aware, is a flourishing young city in Washington Territory, and is situated in a central part of one of the most extensive, desirable, and fertile valleys to be found west of the Rocky Mountains.

There are but few older communities who take greater interest in the advancement of religion, education, and civilization, than does ours, and, as with them, Masonry always goes hand in hand. Our noble Order flourishes here most vigorously.

We have two lodges (Walla Walla No. 7, and Blue Mountain), working in beautiful harmony, doing good work, and with approved material.

The brethren, under supervision of Walla Walla Lodge, have just completed, or nearly so, a fine and commodious lodge-hall, which they dedicated to Masonic purposes on the 22d ult., with the usual forms and ceremonies.

With great respect, I am

Fraternally yours,

W. S. MINEER, M. D.

Proceedings Abroad.

KENTUCKY—Grand Lodge.—The book has 520 pages, and contains the proceedings proper, together with officers and members of lodges, and a great variety of valuable information. The Grand Lodge met at Louisville, October 18, ELISHA S. FITCH, G. M. His address is a good one, full, quite literary in character, with considerable commentary. While declining further service, he deprecates their system of annual change of Grand Masters. The address favors Grand Lodge representation, and condemns the unwarrantable course pursued by the Grand Orient of France in recognizing the spurious body in Louisiana, claiming the right to create lodges.

The tendency to socialistic Masonry by a portion of the Masonic press gets a severe notice, and anti-Masonic conventions get the last and sharpest hit.

The report of the Grand Treasurer shows a debit account of $26,641.50; credit, $26,744.26.

The resources of the Grand Lodge in stock and bonds of Masonic Temple Company, are $66,650; bank stock and city bonds, $15,800, besides a judgment of about $1,500 more. A very large proportion of the credits is for money paid in the purchase of temple bonds. The temple company assets including building, are $120,481.65, which is being rapidly bought in. The stock pays well. On the second day of the session, the Grand Lodge assisted the Grand Master in laying the corner-stone of the Masonic Widow's and Orphan's Home.

Charles Eginton, of Winchester, was elected Grand Master; V. H. Jones, Deputy; E. B. Jones, S. G. W.; E. W. Turner, J. G. W.; A. G. Hodges, G. Treas.; J. M. S. McCorcle, Louisville, Grand Secretary; Rev. H. A. M. Henderson, G. Chaplain; and Jos. T. Davidson, G. Steward and Tyler.

Four hundred and four lodges; 19,484 members. Dues paid $19,609.00.

Grand Secretary McCorcle presented the report on correspondence. He makes no attempt at display, but there is a natural felicity about his writings as there is about his speaking, that gives a charm to all his pen utterances. He approves our style of doing business.

MASSACHUSETTS—Grand Lodge.—The book covers 256 pages. Quarterly communications, March 10, June 9, Sept. 8; annual and elective, Dec. 8; stated and installation, Dec. 28. WM. SEWELL GARDNER, G. M. In his March address, he called attention to the necessity for more full and lucid reports upon many matters and things. The address in June was largely devoted to matters abroad, and the Grand Orient of France was severely condemned. The report upon the action of the Grand Orient was made by C. L. Woodbury, C. W. Moore, and L. R. Paige, in which the whole subject was handled by master hands.

At the September Quarterly, the constitution was amended by a vote of 100 to 2 providing for a board of nine directors for the temple.

At the annual meeting, 132 lodges were represented. The liabilities of the Grand Lodge were $361.552.52.

Bro. GARDNER received every vote for Grand Master, amounting to 392.

Samuel C. Lawrence was elected S. G. W.; Richard Briggs, J. G. W.; John McClellan, G. Treas.; Solon Thornton, Boston, Grand Secretary; Sereno D. Nickerson, William Sutton, P. L. Everett, and G. O. Carpenter were elected Directors for two years, C. L. Woodbury, W. F. Salmon, S. C. Lawrence, and Henry Endicott were elected for one year.

The petition of Lewis Hayden and 24 others, signing their names as Master Masons of Boston, A. G. Jordain, Jr., and 25 others as members of Union Lodge, at New Bedford, of Thos. Thomas, and 20 others, as members of Sumner Lodge, at Springfield, colored men, praying for recognition, was referred to Past Grand Masters Heard and Warren, Deputy Grand Master Woodbury, and Breth. B. L. Wales, I. H. Wright, and T. P. Cheever, who reported that the petitioners did not avowedly represent any lodges; that their prayer included only themselves; that although they believe their original charter to be authentic, still, that such lodges existing without the sanction of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts are irregular and spurious, and that the members must of necessity be denied intercourse with members of regular lodges, and cannot be recognized by the Craft. The committee also say: "Our Constitutions make no distinction on account of the color of persons who desire the benefits of Freemasonry; and there are no rules or regulations whereby the petitioners, if 'worthy and well qualified,' are excluded from our Fraternity, if they seek admission through duly organized lodges." The work and lectures were exemplified in the presence of 700 brethren.

At the stated communication, Dec. 27th, Past Grand Master Dame installed the Grand Master elect. The installation address occupies 21 pages, and includes the Grand Master's official acts. He had granted eleven dispensations for new lodges. The Grand Mastership of Henry Price has been questioned; Grand Master Gardner sets that question at rest. The London Grand Lodge commissioned Henry Price Grand Master of Masons in North America in 1733. The Masonic schism in England reached the colonies, and St. Andrews Lodge was chartered in 1756, and a Grand Lodge was organized in 1769, which assumed the name of Massachusetts in 1782. The other Grand Lodge was known as St. John's. The St. John's Grand Lodge, deriving its authority from England, and the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, deriving its authority from Scotland, united in March, 1792, under the title of "The Ancient and Honorable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts." The inception, progress, and completion of the Masonic Temple was admirably set forth in a report by P. G. M. HEARD, and it appears that when the temple shall be cleared of its liabilities, that it will become the Grand Charity Fund of Massachusetts, worth at least half a million of dollars.

MICHIGAN—Grand Lodge.—Met at Detroit, January 12. A. T. METCALF, G. M. Two hundred and thirty-seven lodges were represented. Among our Ypsilanti acquaintances we noticed Past Grand Master Moore, Rev. D. C. Jacokes, Judge McCardy, and Grand Secretary Fenton, and, among our Scotch Rite acquaintances, Grand Treasurer, Landon, Rev. F. A. Blades, and Past Grand Master Johnson.

The address of the Grand Master was complete and methodical. He recommended the representative system, but the Grand Lodge did not concur. Grand Secretary Fenton presented his very best report yet made on Masonic correspondence. Twenty-two charters were granted. The Michigan Freemason was recommended. A case similar to one in the Illinois Grand Lodge arose, and resulted, upon motion of M. W. Bro. COFFINBURY in the expulsion of the accused.

Correspondence and intercourse with the Grand Orient of France was suspended. A. T. Metcalf, of Kalamazoo, was elected Grand Master; J. W. Champlin, Deputy; E. R. Landon, S. G. W.; J. V. Lambertson, J. G. W.; R. W. Landon, G. Treas.; James Fenton, Detroit, G. Visitor and Lecturer; and Alex. Pape, Jr., of Houghton, D. D. G. M. for Upper Peninsula. Michigan has 279 lodges, and 20,346 affiliated Master Masons.

NEW JERSEY—Grand Lodge.—Met at Trenton, January 19th. Henry R. Cannon, G. M. Eighty-eight lodges were represented. The address discloses great harmony and peace in that jurisdiction. The Deputy, Grand Wardens, Grand Treasurer, Grand Secretary, and Grand Lecturer made reports.

Robert Rusling was elected G. M.; William E. Pine, Deputy; W. W. Goodwin, S. G. W.; J. H. Patterson, J. G. W.; W. R. Clapp, G. Treas.; and Joseph H. Hough, Trenton, G. Sec.

A valuable digest of decisions, made at various times, is inserted in the body of the proceedings.

Upon a careful report made by P. G. Master Whitehead, the Grand Lodge declined to recognize the Grand Lodge of Quebec.

IDAHO—Grand Lodge.—From that far-off mountainous region, lying north of Utah, there comes a beautiful pamphlet containing the proceedings of the second annual meeting of one of our most youthful Grand Lodges. Its six lodges have 279 Master Masons. The Grand Lodge met at Idaho city, Oct. 4, Geo. H. Coe, Grand Master.

All the lodges were represented. The Grand Master presented a faithful report of doings. The Grand Treasurer reported, debits, $1,189.00; credits, $596.13.

Jonas W. Brown was elected G. M.; S. B. Connelly, Deputy; L. P. Mikkleson, S. G. W.; Augustine Haas, J. G. W.; A. G. Hamlin, G. Treas.; P. E. Edmondson, Idaho city, Grand Secretary.

ARKANSAS—Grand Lodge.—Met Nov. 1, at Little Rock. E. H. English, G. M. Some more "sack," and the very best of white wheaten bread. We must make liberal extracts; we know that our readers will enjoy them.

Beyond the pleasure of an approving conscience, men who labor for the good of humanity, need not ordinarily look for their rewards in this life. Socrates devoted his life to teaching virtue, and yet his own wife abused him, and his neighbors condemned him to be poisoned with hemlock. Moses abandoned the luxury of the Egyptian court, and the prospects of a crown, to labor for the emancipation of his people, and yet they were stubborn, disobedient, and ungrateful. Hiram, the companion of kings, and yet the friend and and associate of the working men, was slain for his love of truth and unyielding integrity. The Great Teacher went about doing good, and yet the multitude crucified him. We Masons labor to promote virtue, and to alleviate the sufferings of the destitute and the wretched, and yet because we think proper to assemble quietly to ourselves, instead of parading our works of charity in public meetings, there are fanatical men, claiming to be saints, who denounce, and perhaps would crucify us, had they the power. Masonry will flourish after all such men are dead and forgotten. You may not be rewarded for your good works in this life, but we teach that there is an immortal life beyond the tomb, where virtue is rewarded.

After reciting his official acts, he discourses thus:

Thus nineteen new lodges have been created during the year; more than half as many as the whole number of lodges in the State when I was first made Grand Master in 1849. Masonry is on the increase in Arkansas, as it is in all of the American States, and as it is in all civilized countries, where it is not proscribed by tyrants, or denounced by a jealous, domineering priesthood. It is the strongest and most wide-spread moral organization on the globe. It comprehends all dialects, yet it speaks one universal language. Men of all countries, of all politics, and of all religions, agreeing upon a few cardinal principles, and leaving all else to perfect freedom of opinion, are united as a great brotherhood. The observing craftsman, who travels, is struck with the number of Masons he finds everywhere among the better classes of men. Looking around him in any rail car, boat, or ship cabin, hotel, office, or church, at the persons accidentally collected there, and the faces may be all strange and unknown to him, yet he will hardly fail to notice symbols with which he is familiar—the cross of the Templar, the keystone of the Mark Master, the ring of the M. E. P. and Sub. Knight, and the trowel or the gavel of the blue Master.

Away up in Minnesota, the Father of Waters passes through a beautiful lake, from the bluff shore of which swells up a great rock, called "Maiden's Leap." Its name is taken from an Indian legend. Far back in the dim ages of the children of the forest, the daughter of an old chief, the fairest rose of her tribe, was loved by two young chiefs, both of whom sought her of her father. One of them she loved, and the other she did not. The father required the young men to settle the contest by a race, and promised the fair prize to him who should prove the fleeter of the two. The victor was the young chief which the maiden did not love, and when the result was made known to her, and he came to claim her hand, she leaped from the great rock into the lake, and perished, and her defeated lover followed her example, and shared her sad fate. Often after, when the moon was on the lake, and the night winds moaned along the shore, the spirits of the lovers were seen hovering about the rock.

On a recent trip up the Mississippi, our boat reaching the lake after dark, a party of us, strangers to each other, sat until late in the night upon the deck of the vessel, for the purpose of seeing the "Maiden's Leap." A dark cloud came up over the lake, and a chilling gale springing up, we instinctively huddled together for comfort and for company. While looking at the rock, by the dim light of the moon, and conversing about the legend, the cloud spread its black wing over the rock, and a vivid flash of lightning curved into an arch above it, from which shot out beneath three tongues of fire, and formed a triangle, and the arch and the triangle staying a moment in the cloud over the rock, one of the party exclaimed: "See the living royal arch of fire!" and all the others recognized him to be a Mason, for they, too, were Masons, and there upon the deck of the vessel, at midnight, we held a kind of traveling lodge.

After this, on the same trip, I made one of a party of nine gentlemen, from as many States, who accidentally met at the Falls of Minnehaha. We stood in the shade of an old tree, whose branches had been whitened by the snows of a thousand winters, perhaps, looking at the "laughing waters," and listening to their roar, as they tumbled over the bluff, and foamed and rushed on through the gorge to the great river. On the face of the sand-stone bluff across the gorge, from where we stood, were many carvings, and among them the sun, the moon, and a man. One of the party said, may be the man was a chief, and Master of an old Indian lodge, and so there are the three lesser lights of Masonry. Whereupon the whole party clapped their hands, and gave the grand honors, to the old Master carved in the rock.

One day in August last, in the grounds of the Water Cure, near Cleveland, there was a group of men under the shade of a Norway pine, and there was another group under the shade of a poplar. An old woman, wrinkled and bent with age, came into the grounds, leading a blind Irish girl, and stopped at the first group. The blind girl played upon a violin, and in a plaintive song, appealed for alms, but received nothing. The aged mother conducted her sightless daughter to the second group, where a similar appeal filled a little basket, held out by a withered hand, with fractional currency. An observer said that the first group were of the hard-shell type, who piously denounce Masonry as a secret society, in league with Satan, and that the second group were of that noble Order whose hearts are always touched by the appeals of the destitute and afflicted, and whose hands are ever open to relieve their wants.

By some, the wearing of Masonic symbols is condemned, because since Masonry has become popular, an impostor is occasionally detected in false colors, and now and then an unworthy Mason is seen parading the symbols of the Craft about his person. But the logic that would persuade us to forego the wearing of the beautiful symbols of our Order because bad men desecrate them, would strip us of all ornaments, and indeed of all clothing. Bad men wear all that is ornamental, as well as all that is useful and they parade the insignia of all societies. They array themselves in the "livery of Heaven to serve the devil in." But the innocent lamb need not abandon his white fleece, because the sly wolf covers his deformity with a similar, but stolen garb. Masonic symbols often serve as the means of introduction, and lead Masons to become agreeable traveling companions, who might, without them, fail to recognize each other, and remain indifferent strangers. Where the impostor is found clothed in our symbols, the intelligent Mason discovers his cloven foot too readily to be seriously imposed upon; and the abandoned Craftsmen poorly conceals his vicious habits with a jewel. It is like a diamond in a swine's snout.

Not long since, I went to the lodge in a great city, where I was a stranger, and unfamiliar with the streets. The work, and a banquet which followed with speeches, lasted until the herald of Peter's fall clarioned the midnight. On leaving the hall, I missed the way to my hotel, and rambled until I became confused and bewildered in the maze of streets and houses. Taking my stand by a lamp-post, I inquired of several late street-walkers the way to my hotel, and received for answer the name of the street, and number of the house, which left me no wiser than before, because I did not know where I was, nor the direction to the street named. Finally, a gentleman came along in whose bosom I perceived a triangle. "Sir," said I to the stranger, "I presume from the symbol you wear in your bosom that you can lead the blind by a way they know not. As on several previous occasions of my life, I need a guide?" "Where do you desire to be conducted?" said he. To the Spencer House," said I. Taking me by the arm, "come," said he, "go with me, and I will prove that to be true which you have doubtless often heard asserted—that two are better than one." He proved to be a Mason of rank, kindly accompanied me to the hotel, and though our meeting was accidental, and as strangers, we parted as friends and brothers.

Bro. English, having been elected G. H. P. of the Grand Chapter, declined further service as Grand Master, and his Elberta's husband, W. D. Blocher, was elected; E. A. Warren. Jr., was elected S. G. W.; David Burton, J. G. W.; R. L. Dodge, G. Treas.; Luke E. Barber, Little Rock, Grand Secretary; and Bro. English was elected Grand Lecturer.

Masonic correspondence with the Grand Orient of France was discontinued. The report on correspondence is from the pen of Bro. O. C. Gray. He selects well, and writes keenly and humorously. Illinois escaped his notice.

Two hundred and forty lodges; 8,187 members; 1,086 initiations.

Alabama—Grand Lodge.—Met at Montgomery, Dec. 6. Geo. D. Norris, G. M. Two hundred and twenty-nine lodges represented. The address was very full; he reported twenty-seven decisions.

The Grand Treasurer accounted for $8,967.61 received, and $4,204.96, expenditures. The Grand Lodge refused to recognize the Grand Lodge of Quebec.

Bro. Penick presented an exhaustive and able report on correspondence. He is quite sharp on our reports, so far as they affect his. On the whole, he treats us quite fairly, but he evidently intends no liberties with him.

The statistics show 10,729 members. W. P. Chilton, Montgomery, Grand Master; J. H. Johnson, M. D., Deputy; G. Frank Smith, S. G. W.; I. A. Wilson, J. G. W.; E. M. Hastings, G. Treas.; Daniel Sayre, Montgomery, Grand Secretary.

Wisconsin—Grand Chapter.—Met at Milwaukee, January 18. A. V. H. Carpenter, G. H. P. His address is sound and characteristic of the man. He thinks that a Royal Arch Mason should be a member of a lodge. All honor to a G. H. P. who acknowledges his superior and inalienable allegiance to symbolic Masonry.

The Grand Treasurer's debit is $5,709.08; credit, $2,792.35. Thomas B. Tyler, Sparta, G. H. P.; Joseph Yates, Deputy; C. F. G. Collins, G. K.; J. H. Evans, G. S.; John M. Levy, G. Treas.; W. T. Palmer, Milwaukee. Grand Secretary; Rev. C. D. Pillsbury, G. Chaplain; Jos. Winslow, G. C. H.; S. H. Allan, G. P. S.; Oliver Libbey, G. R. A. C.; Jarius Alcox, C. C. Church, Noah Shaw, G. M's. of Veils; Ebenezer Clewett, G. Guard. Kilbourn, Wisconsin, and Milwaukee Chapters have an aggregate membership of 388. Of this number, Wisconsin Chapter has 231 members.

Thirty-nine chapters; 2,298 members.

North Carolina—Grand Chapter.—Met at Wilmington, Dec. 2. W. G. Hill, G. H. P. He recommended a careful consideration of the position of the Grand Chapter of North Carolina towards the G. G. Chapter. The Committee on Correspondence gives Illinois a lengthy notice.

Wm. Murdock, G. H. P.; T. M. Gardner, Deputy; E. H. White, G. K.; John Nichols, G. S.; T. W. Brown, G. Treas.; Thos. B. Carr, Wilmington, G. Sec. Grand Council—Met at Wilmington, Dec. 2. Thos. Carr was elected G. M.; Wm. Murdock, Deputy; C. M. Van Orsdell, G. P. C. W.; T. W. Brown, G. Treas.; M. M. Katz, Grand Recorder.

Iowa.—Grand Chapter.—Met at Mt. Pleasant, Oct. 20. P. C. Wright, G. H. P. His address is terse, clear, and meets every point. He says he spent more money in visiting the chapters then he received, but that he would balance the fun against the money. That's Wright. Whenever one sees Comp. Langridge's name to a report on correspondence, it may be set down as good without question. While he has music enough to make his say agreeable, there are no quips, quirks, or quiddities.

The Illinois report in regard to Iowa, made in 1858, was pretty strong; stronger than we should state it now; but it was our honest view of the case. To this Comp. Langridge replies with more reason and good temper than could be expected, and it resulted in a square concession that the O. B. required the G. C. to resume its allegiance. This was done, but with implied assurance that Iowa would labor for the dissolution of the General Grand body. We think that when our sister grand chapters, which have abandoned the parent body, shall return, that a dissolution would be a wise step. Let the grand chapters be supreme in their own jurisdiction. When Iowa and Indiana desire to dissolve, Illinois will bear them company.

Pitkin C. Wright, G. H. P.; C. S. Rollin, Deputy; W. J. Law, G. K.; L. I. Coulter, G. S.: O. P. Waters, G. Treas.; W. B. Langridge, Muscatine, Grand Secretary; D. S. Deering, G. C. H.; G. R. Foster, G. P. S.; A. Wingate, G. R. A. C.; H. M. Case, M. E. Gillette, W. A. Hursey, G. M's. of Veils; T. Schreiner, G. G. Fifty-one chapters; 2,124 members.

EXTRACTS

5. Histories of religious, moral, and political institutions, which had their origin in antiquity, and have either been handed down to the present day, or obscured or entirely lost in the descent of time, have peculiar interest for the educated, thoughtful and reflecting mind. As far back in the centuries of time as we have authentic histories of mankind, representative men have promulgated their peculiar creeds, opinions, and philosophers in regard to the existence, powers and attributes of Deity; of natural laws which control the Heavenly bodies; and, also, those by which the earth and all created things, both animate and inanimate, were directed, ruled, and governed.

6. Confucius, the great apostle and mentor of the Chinese, who, as a people, are the most ancient of the distinct races now known to civilized man, commenced his career about the year 555 before the Christian era. "The analogy between the philosophy which he taught and the functions of Chritianity is truly remarkable," and furnishes a parallel equally beautiful to that of Saint John the Baptist, and Saint John the Evangelist.

7. Buddhism, however, which arose in India about the seventh century before the advent of Christ, began to be promulgated in China about half a century afterwards; which intervened to disturb and, to a great degree, destroy the peace and harmony which had prevailed through the simple mysteries and primitive religion of the former.

8. By the introduction of strange innovations and strange gods, the Chinese retrograded and relapsed into idolatry; and, to-day, they are, as a nation and a people, the most completely enveloped and confirmed in the dark suprestition of Paganism, of any other in the known world.

9. During the rise and fall, advance and decline of religious and political denominations and opinions, and while the sword and the fire-brand have swept kingdoms, empires, and republics from the face of the earth, as by the besome of God's divine wrath, and while kings, princes and potentates have been hurled from their high pedestals as by a thunderbolt, and while the world in all ages has been disrupted, dismembered and engulphed by idolatry, sectarianism and priestcraft, Freemasonry has unostentatiously pursued the even tenor of its way; and is the only principle of equal antiquity which now prevails as it was originally taught, which fact, alone, should be sufficient guarantee to the uninitiated for its genuine merits.

10. Masonry arose from necessity, was practiced for convenience, and perpetuated by its virtue. According to our history and tradition, it arose at the building of King Solomon's Temple.

23. One of the first lessons taught in Masonry, is to be good and true. Also, that no great and important undertaking should ever be commenced without first invoking the aid of Deity—"prayer is, therefore, offered to the Supreme Architect of the Universe as a declaration of the sacred and religious purpose of our meeting, of our profound reverence for that Divine Being, whose name and attributes should be the constant theme of our contemplation." And yet, many persons, I have no doubt, are either indifferent to, or look upon Masonry with mistrust, simply because they are entirely ignorant of the great principles which it is intended to symbolize.

24. Man is born into the world; in childhood and youth he prepares for the arduous duties of manhood, when he plays his little part upon the stage of life, passes into old age, withers, dies, and is borne to the silent tomb. "The time for toiling is now over; the opportunity to learn has passed away; the spiritual temple that we have all been striving to erect in our hearts is now nearly complete, and the wearied workman awaits only the word of the Grand Master of the Universe to call him from the labors of earth to the eternal refreshments of Heaven."

25. What a beautiful appropriateness then, is there in the symbolism of the Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason's degrees, to the three principal stages of human life. Mankind, however, has in all ages been slow to accept great truths. They will hardly believe until proof be received by evidence of one of the five senses, and even then avoid the evidence, fearing they may be compelled to believe. The monks persecuted Galileo and refused to look through his telescope, lest they should be convinced. Harvey, who demonstrated the circulation of the blood, was thought an enthusiastic maniac, and died in obscurity for his pains. The man who produced the first printed letters from type, was threatened by a mob for being in league with the devil. Dr. Jenner fled from his indignant countrymen for introducing vaccine; and even but a few years ago Cyrus W. Field took refuge in Canada to avoid being overwhelmed by the people of New York city, because the sub-marine cable was not a success on the first trial.

26. On this eventful day, it is peculiarly fitting that we lay our Masonic offerings upon the altar of our fathers. On the 22d day of February, 138 years ago, was born the father of our common country; he, whose name is written in letters of gold upon the scroll of fame; around whose memory rests a halo of immortal glory, and who deemed it most honorable to wear the emblematic lambskin and wield the Master's gavel. We, therefore, my brethren of the mystic tie, have assembled here to-day, being in a free country, among a free and enlightened people, in an age of free institutions, and as Freemasons, to dedicate this beautiful lodge hall, which has been erected to God, to our patrons, Saint John the Baptist, and Saint John the Evangelist; and as symbols of consecration, being corn, wine and oil; the corn of nourishment, which develops and invigorates the body; the wine of refreshment, which elevates our minds and aspirations to purer and holier lives; the oil of joy, which sanctifies our faith in hopes of a glorious immortality. We dedicate to him who cried in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight," and who was glorified in the baptism of his Mesiah, in the waters of the river of Jordan, when the heavens were opened and the spirit like a dove descended, and a voice was heard, saying, "Thou art my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased.' Also, to him who, when upon the isle of Patmos became glorified by influence of the Holy Spirit, which, like gentle zephyrs, when laden with the aroma of fragrant flower, whispered peace to his troubled spirit and bade him "fear not, for I am the Alpha and Omega.

Bro. Magill has sent to the Mystic Star a newspaper published in Ireland, which contains the following;

FREEMASONRY VERSUS THE CHURCH OF ROME.—To the editor of the Kerry Evening Post.—SIR: Though no Freemason myself, I have watched with interest the progress of the contest carried on in your columns, and those of your local contemporary, between the champions of that ancient and benevolent Order, and the advocates of that system which, while it anathematizes all societies that presume to organize themselves independently of it, is itself "The secret society" par excellence. Acting under the order of their "Grand Master," who, in his allocution of 1865, declared of the Freemasons, "not a moment is to be lost in striking and lacerating with one sentence of condemnation, as with a sword, this sect that broodeth crime, and assaulteth all things human and divine;" the underlings of that arrogant system in this county recently prevented all its votaries who were simple enough to obey their commands, from attending a concert, the proceeds of which were to be devoted to the laudable object of completing the Tralee Masonic Hall. I see by the papers, a somewhat parallel case, that a bazaar is shortly to be held for the purpose of raising funds to complete the new Dominican Chapel in Day place. That the true character of the Romish order, for whose use it is being erected, may be clearly understood, I trust you will allow me to place before the public an incident in its history, which, in my humble opinion, throws completely into the shade those symbolical and visionary "horrors" which, in the last issue of the Chronicle, are laid to the charge of Freemasonry, and gives a seasonable insight into the spirit and practice of Popery when in the ascendant. The incident which I am about to relate, is the massacre of the Knights Templar—themselves an illustrious branch of the Freemasons—in the reign of Philip IV. of France. According to the account from which I quote, this monarch, after trying in vain to extort from them, either by promises or threats, an avowal of guilt "gave them up to the tender mercies of the Dominicans, who were never known to fail when any act of monstrous cruelty was to be performed. They had gone through a long apprenticeship to the trade of torture, and were perfect masters of the craft." The scene, at first, is laid in the Temple House at Paris, whence had once issued forth, like a glorious stream, a host of heroes marshaled under the auspices of the King and of the Pope, and under the banner of the cross, for the defense of the Holy Land, and which, we are told, "was again crowded with gallant knights; but they were no longer armed for the defense of the Sepulchre. The sword was no longer drawn for the fight. The battle-horse bore them no more to the charge. Captives to their fellow-Christians, in the power of enemies more pitiless than the Saracens, they lay in chains, each in his silent cell, loaded with base accusations, and expecting death." The first victim to whom we are introduced is described as "an old man with a long white beard, and floating locks as pure as snow. He is an old brother of the order, of a princely race, with the blood of a long line of nobles flowing in his veins. Sixty-five years have passed since his mother first held him with pride and delight in her arms." His numerous deeds of valor on the battle-fields of Palestine are then recounted, after which follows this heart-rending description of the reward which he receives from his former patrons—"They have kept him without food or drink for eight and forty hours; they are condemning the old hero of the cross to die the death of a wolf. Lank hunger is upon him, gnawing his very entrails. He could tear his own flesh with his teeth. He has knocked and called in vain at the barred and bolted door; and now he lies and gazes at it with haggard eye, listening as the steps pass and repass; but they bring him no relief." But far more horrible are these scenes which are next to be described. "In a great hall, stretched upon a machine, formed somwhat like a bed, but having moveable joints and various wheels and windlass, lay a tall and powerful man of the middle age. His broad brow was knit with a stern and resolute frown; but his eyes had the anguish of apprehension in them; and his teeth were firm set, as if to prevent any sound escaping from his lips. His ankles and his wrist were firmly fastened with cords to the beams of the machine; and his body, too, was fixed with a hoop of iron. By his side stood the Grand Inquisitor, William of Paris. A number of Domincan monks were around. Near at hand was a surgeon with a phial and a cup; but by the side of the machine stood two powerful men, in a lay habit, with their arms bare. I exhort you, brother, in the name of God and the Holy Trinity, said the Inquisitor in a low, sweet voice, 'to make confession of the truth, and save us the necessity of using means to force it from you.' 'I have said the truth,' replied the Templar firmly, 'and take notice, everyone, that if under your biabolical hands, I speak otherwise than I have spoken, I lie. These are my last words. Do your worst.' There was a profound silence. The two strong men, bending by the machine, lifted their eyes and gazed earnestly on the face of the Inquisitor. He spoke not, but made a little sign, waiving his hand so slighly you could hardly perceive it. The men applied their whole force, and moved round the winch. There was a creaking sound, as of straining wood. The thick beams were forced apart; the joints in the wooden frame separated. The limbs of the Templar were drawn slowly, but forcibly, from each other. You could hear the stout sinews crack. There was a deep groan. 'Hold! hold!' said the surgeon, who had watched the tortured man's face. But the Inquisitor made no sign. The strong men forced the wheels round, and there was a shriek of direful agony."

Here is another scene in the awful drama: "In the wide chimney of the refectory, there was a great fire, logs piled up and blazing high; and before it were two screens, covered with linen cloth. The fire had a cheerful light, blazing and flashing over the stone walls, and the arches of windows, and the great round columns. But what is that before the fire? It is the good Knight Bernard de Vado, stretched out upon an iron frame, pinioned with cords, and bound tightly down, so that his limbs have no motion. The screens are so placed as to cover his face and body from the blaze of the fire; but his naked feet are extended to the full heat, within a few feet of the burning logs. What are those incarnate devils doing, in their gowns of black and white, those Dominican fiends, bred to the art of torture? They are greasing the scorched soles to prevent the flesh from being actually burned away. Vain are his cries, his groans, his shrieks. It is speech they want and he speaks not. They interpose one of the screens to moderate the heat and then ask him—'Wilt thou confess now? He is silent; the Dominican moves his hand toward the screen again. 'What must I confess? What must I confess?' cries the unhappy man: and with a smile the soft Dominican instructs him."

And here is yet another sickening scene: "In the interior of a small cell, one of the cells of the order, and on his own pallet-bed, is seen another knight with a single figure seated quietly beside him. Is the poor Templar sick? It must be so; for see, the kind Dominican drops water from a cup upon his mouth! Now, this is charity indeed! Under the coarse rug that covers him, his body is bound down to the bed. He can move neither hand nor foot. Over his face is stretched a thick wet cloth, through which he is forced to draw the breath of life; and ever as the fearful heat of his intense agony dries up the moisture, so that he can breathe more fully, the Dominican drops more water on the cloth, and renders every sigh a pang. See how convulsively his chest heaves! See how the fingers move in the struggle for air! Now clenched, till the nails sink into the palms of his hands, now extended wide with every sinew starting out like a rope; and now, faint and ill-defined stains of crimson begin to mark the cloth over his face. It is blood starting from his eyes and nostrils." But bad as are these scenes, we are told that there were other tortures inflicted upon these unhappy victims, too indecent and horrible to be mentioned; nor was any torment spared that human beings could inflict or suffer. The result was that thirty-six Templars died under the torture without having uttered one word which could criminate their order, while many more were crippled for life. But their enemies were not yet satisfied, for we are further told "the Inquisitors proceeded throughout France, accompanied by lay commissioners from the king, and in each of the preceptories of the order, the system of murder and torture was renewed. These transactions were generally carried on in secret; but the tongue of rumor could not be kept quiet; and amazement, horror, and alarm spread throughout Europe. The Pope himself interfered with an affectation of humanity; but his letter to the King of France savors strongly of avarice. It exposes more clearly a design to get the whole property of the Temple into the hands of the church, than a desire to save the Templars. A new tribunal was then erected under the presidency of the Archbishop of Paris, before which the surviving Templars were dragged, and refusing to avow the crimes of which they were accused, and persisting with constancy and firmness in a general denial, they were condemned to die at the stake. Their fate is thus recorded: "Fifty-nine, or, according to some, fifty-four, gallant Knights were led forth in one day to the fields at the back of the nunnery of St. Antoine, where stakes had been driven into the ground, and faggots and charcoal collected. The sight did not daunt them; and each was bound to the stake. The faggots were piled around them; the torches of the executioners lighted, and they were offered pardon if they would confess. They refused to a man, and were burned to death by slow fires, calling upon the holy name of God in the midst of their torments. In other parts of France the same horrible scenes were transacted. At Senlis nine were burnt, and many more in other places." Such are some of the horrors which history declares to have been perpetuated under the sanction, and by the servants of that system which was openly charged only the other day, by the great orator Castelar, in the Spanish Cortes, with canonizing the executioners—the assassins—of the night of St. Bartholomew. I shall await with interest to see what palliation of the atrocities these advocates of 'Catholicity" can produce in the columns of the infallible 'Chronicle,' and whether they can bring forward a few charges equally authentic against the order of Freemasons, failing to do which, they will be constrained to acknowledge themselves beaten in the contest. I shall subscribe myself, sir, yours truly,

"A LOVER OF FAIR PLAY."

United Grand Lodge.

The quarterly communication of Grand Lodge was held at Freemasons' Hall on Wednesday last. In consequence of the announced retirement of the Earl of Zetland from the post of M. W. G. M., and the nomination of the Earl de Gray and Ripon as his successor, there was a numerous assemblage of brethren from all parts of the kingdom, there being upwards of 300 present, and before seven o'clock the hall was crowded. Precisely at that hour a procession was formed, and the Earl de Grey and Ripon, in the absence of the M. W. G. M. the Earl of Zetland, took his seat on the throne, and the grand officers took their respective places, viz: Bros. Lord de Tabley, as D. G. M.; Earl Percy, S. G. W.; Algernon Perkins, as J. G. W.; Chas. J. Martyn, G. Chaplain; S. Tomkins, G. Treas.; Æneas J. McIntyre, G. Reg.; John Hervey, G. Sec; J. C. A. Powell, and Leith Tomkins, S. G. D's.; Brackstone Baker, J. G. D; Sir A. W. Woods, G. Dir. of Cers.; Conrad C. Dumas, Asst. G. Dir. of Cers.; Joshua Nunn, G. S. B.; James Coward, G. Org.; William Ough, G. Purst.; J. Brett, Assist. G. Purst.; C. B. Payne, G. Tyler.

There were also present: Breth. W. W. Beach, M. P., Prov. G. M., Hampshire and Isle of Wight; Col. Burdett, Prov. G. M., Middlesex; and several other Prov. Grand Masters, and a numerous attendance of Past. Dep. Prov. G. Masters and other prov. grand officers, the Grand Stewards for the year, and Past G. Stewards (indeed of the latter by far the largest attendance we have seen for many years); Bro. Llewelyn Evans, President of the Board of General Purposes; J. Monckton, Vice President; Edward J. Fraser, President of the Colonial Board; Francis Bennock, Vice President, were also present.

Grand Lodge having been opened in ample form, a very appropriate prayer being offered by the Grand Chaplain, Bro. Martyn. The regulations for the government of Grand Lodge during the time of public business were read by the Grand Secretary in accordance with ancient usage.

The minutes of the previous quarterly communication of December 1st, were read and put for confirmation.

The election of the M. W. Grand Master was then proceeded with.

Bro. Raynham W. Stewart proposed the Right Hon. Earl de Grey and Ripon, adding some appropriate remarks upon the career of the Right Hon. brother. The motion was seconded by Bro. Edgar Horne, W. M. of Moira Lodge No. 92, and put to the meeting by Lord De Tabley, and carried unanimously, every member in Grand Lodge with the exception of the Earl himself holding up his hand, even to the brother who formerly put himself in nomination for that high and distinguished office.

The M. W. G. Master elect returned thanks in an admirable address, and in conclusion moved, pursuant to notice, a resolution expressive of the regret of Grand Lodge at the retirement of the Earl of Zetland from the office of Most Worshipful Grand Master, a post which he had filled with the highest credit to himself and advantage to the Craft, for the long period of twenty-six years.

The Earl de Grey and Ripon then proposed that the resolution of Grand Lodge be engrossed on vellum and emblazoned and presented to the Earl of Zetland in the usual manner.

The proposition was seconded by Bro. Dumas, and carried in the most enthusiastic manner.

The election of Grand Treasurer was then proceeded with, Bro. Raynham W. Stewart proposing, and Brackstone Baker seconding Bro. S. Tomkins for re-election to the office which he has held for several years, which was carried unanimously.

The acting M. W. G. M. then made a communication to Grand Lodge in reference to the formation of a Grand Lodge of New Brunswick, and moved a resolution to acknowledge it. In the course of his remarks he explained the correspondence which had taken place in the matter, which reflected the greatest credit upon our colonial brethren for the good faith and Masonic zeal by which they had been actuated.

The G. Rigistrar entered into further details respecting the proceedings, and Bro. Brackstone Baker having seconded the resolution, it was put and carried unanimously.

The report of the Board of Benevolence was taken as read, and ordered to be entered upon the minutes. The several grants of money were put seriatim, and passed as follows:

The widow of the late Bro. H. W., of the Royal Oak Lodge No. 871, Deptford	£50	0	0
The widow of the late Bro. E. C., of the Lodge of Fidelity No. 269, Blackburn.......	40	0	0
The widow of the late Bro. W. J. N., of the Robert Burns Lodge No. 25, London.........	30	0	0
Bro. R. L., of the Lodge of Australia Felix No. 474, Melbourne, Victoria	50	0	0
The widow of the late Bro. T. H. W., of the St. Andrew's Lodge No. 222, London.........	50	0	0

The vote of £30 to six orphan children, was the subject of special mention, and several members of Grand Lodge expressed regret that the sum was not larger.

The report of the Board of General Purposes was then presented, and it was moved by Bro. J. Llewellyn Evans, President, to be taken as read, and was ordered to be entered on the minutes.

To the report was subjoined a statement of the Grand Lodge accounts at the last meeting of the Finance Committee, held on the the 11th February, 1870, showing a balance in the hands of the Grand Treasurer of £2,628 9s. 4d., and in the hands of the Grand Secretary, for petty cash, £75.

A memorial from the Provincial Grand Lodge of East Lancashire against certain proposed alterations in the rules of the "Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and the Widows of Freemasons," was mentioned, but by consent was referred to the committee of the Institution.

A motion by Bro. Joshua Nunn, G. S. B.: "That provided the resolution, proposed by the Committee on the Fund of Benevolence, to replace the last paragraph of No. 6 Fund of Benevolence (in the Book of Constitution), be passed by the Grand Lodge," "That the form of the Certificate required to be sent to Lodge of Benevolence with all petitions (and to be signed by the visitor, a member of the lodge, or some other brother) be referred back to the said committee on the Fund of Benevolence for details and adjustment." This was carried.

The next motion was that of Bro. J. Rankin Stebbing, P. G. D.: "That in the opinion of this Grand Lodge, no future Grand Master should hold that office for more than five years in succession, unless in case of a Royal Prince."

At an early period of the discussion which followed, it appeared that the notices of motion given by Bro. Raynham W. Stewart and Bro. John Savage, respectively, had in the Grand Lodge club meeting, been withdrawn by consent, leaving Bro. Stebbing's motion alone in the field. We can not, however, as previously stated, give even a fair abstract of the discussion which followed, within ordinary limits. We may state, however, that amongst several excellent speeches that were made, those of the mover of the resolution, and of the seconder, Bro. F. Bennoch, in favor of it, and those of Lord de Tabley, Bro. Brackstone Baker, and Bro. John Havers, against it, went so thoroughly into the subject that they deserve to be printed in extenso. The motion was put and lost by a very large majority.

It being now past ten o'clock, the further considerable business of the agenda paper, was deferred till the next quarterly communication, and Grand Lodge was closed in ample form, and with solemn prayer.

During the whole of the meeting the acting M. W. G. M. conducted the meeting with much ability, a duty which was by no means easy, the meeting being exceedingly large and impatient.—Magazine, London.

From the Michigan Fremason.

"While we remained the guests of Col. D——, at St. Louis, the same procession of Knights Templar was repeated every morning on the street, with an intensified interest and demonstration of public satisfaction on each successive occasion."

"On the third morning, the daughters of Col. D joined in the salutations, and waved their white handkerchiefs enthusiastically as the procession passed."

"Carlos," said Florence, turning to her brother, "you must join the Freemasons."

Carlos drew his sister's arm in his, and leading her to the further end of the large parlor, they joined the other two sisters. After the exchange of a few furtive glances towards the Colonel, and a few suppressed whisperings, the three young ladies simultaneously bounded forward to where we still sat in conversation with our host and hostess, all exclaiming at once as they rushed forward:

"Mother! father! Carlos is a Freemason!

"The old man rose to his feet, and fixed his eye upon his son in a stern dignity in which rebuke and indecision were singularly mingled. The mother and daughters, with pale lips, stood the while in silent suspense, After a minute's struggle with himself, the Colonel spoke:

"Carlos," said he, "it is all right. I have not a word to say. It is not sufficient, Carlos, my boy, I will say, you have done well, you have my approbation." With a reverential bow the young man withdrew. The conversation continued. After the lapse of fifteen minutes; every eye was attracted to the entrance of the large parlor by the clatter of arms, and, to our surprise, there stood Carlos dressed in the rich uniform of a Knight Templar. He drew his straight sword, and first saluting his parents, then his sisters, then his father's guests; he touched the cross at the hilt to his lips, and returning it to its scabbard, he disappeared. The next morning, as the procession slowly moved up the street, the three sisters threw kisses to a young Templar in the procecsion as it passed below the balcony; it was their brother Carlos. The old Colonel took off his hat and gave three hearty cheers as his whitened locks fluttered in the balmy breeze."

"Through the courtesy of one of your Sir Knights from Detroit, I was furnished with tickets which admitted Reuben Mitton and myself to the steamer Mississippi, one of the excursion boats. Of course, we had the politeness to extend our invitation to the daughters of Col. D——, who accompanied us. We found their brother Carlos on that boat, and we six made a pleasant party."

"It was a magnificent sight to see our immense boat, accompanied by the Lady Gay and the Belle of Alton, their decks crowded with fair ladies and Knights Templar, bands of music, distinguished citizens, and invited guests, as they steamed up the Mississippi, then down to Jefferson Barracks, where we all went on shore to spend a pleasant hour, after which we again went on board and steamed merrily up the river."

I was standing near the captain. The commander of the Templars came and leaned wearily on the capstan. I turned to Reuben Mitton and whispered in his ear these words: "That man was born to command." He had the form of a Hercules, the head of an Apollo, and the eye of an eagle, and, as circumstances afterward demonstrated, the heart of a lion. Although not so very large, he appeared larger than he really was: he was full and athletic, and still every proportion was a symmetry, and every movement a grace.

"While he was still leaning silently on the capstan, and while I was yet analyzing his fine countenance, the captain of the steamer, with pale lips and blanched cheeks, approached the young Templar, and in a low tone and trembling voice, said:

"Great God! sir, we are sinking, We are snagged, sir, in the bottom, and nothing can save us."

"How long can you keep her afloat?" carelessly inquired the young Templar.

"She may go down in five minutes; she cannot keep afloat more than fifteen," replied the captain.

"Do not make your situation known to any one except your crew, or we will have a panic, and then all will be lost. Signal the Lady Gay to lean to; none will notice or understand the signal of distress. Get your crew and hands ready to move, I will manage the rest."

"Blow, Warder, blow," said the young Templar, speaking to his ensign, who stood near him, at the same time leaping upon the capstan. Every one was startled by a shrill blast trom the Warder's trumpet. A hundred Templars' swords leaped from their scabbards at the blast.

"Attention, Sir Knights," shouted the young commander. "The next ceremony in the programme is, for the Sir Knights, ladies and gentlemen on this boat to make a visit to our friends on board the Lady Gay. As the steamers are rapidly approaching each other, and cannot be kept but a minute or two together, the movement must be a rapid one. You will form procession at once, and as the boats come together, pass over the gangway under an arch of steel, to the lower deck of the Lady Gay. Forward, Sir Knights, to the gangway. Music in in front. The band will play 'The Knights Templar Quick-step.'"

In obedience to these orders, the Knights formed a double line to the gangway, facing around, with swords crossed above the heads of those forming the procession. In less than eight minutes the whole precious cargo of human life had passed from the Mississippi to the Lady Gay, even to the colored cook, except the two files of Templars, when the young commander ordered: "From the rear, right and left inward wheel, march," and filing inward, the Templars rapidly passed over the gangway to the Lady Gay, the young commander being the last to leave. One minute more and the Mississippi steamer sunk to the bottom.

As the noble young Templar sheathed his sword, I gazed at him in admiration and deep homage, and for the first time in my life, felt in its true sense the meaning of the word Chivalry. "What the deuce has become of my pipe," continued Barney Hagerman, feeling in first one and then another of his pockets. "That was chivalry," continued he; "that was a hero for you, worth a dozen of those mock heroes who appear before the world suing for its commendation with hands red with the blood of their brother men. My pipe! my pipe! where can it be? There was shrieking, and fainting, pale lips and trembling limbs, as the noble steamer sunk below the cold blue waters. I can't find my pipe. Perhaps I may have left it in the library; I will go and see. If it is not there, some of those mischievous girls have hidden it away." So saying, Barney Hagerman left the room.

A Masonic Swindler.

One of the vilest and most unscrupluous Masonic swindlers of the day was detected and exposed yesterday by M. O. Waggoner, Esq., in connection with the Toledo Masonic Board of Relief of this city. A man apparently about sixty years of age, calling himself G. W. Straus, applied to Mr. R. E. Richards, of said board of relief, asking assistance to reach Chicago. He represented himself as hailing from St. Andrew's Lodge No. 10, Charleston, South Carolina; that he had lost a fortune by the war; had two sons in the Union army, who were starved to death in Libby Prison, &c. He was now entirely destitute and desired to reach friends in Chicago. He produced a letter of recommendation as a minister, and also a certificate of Masonic standing, signed by a P. M. of the lodge in Charleston. This latter document also had appended to it the name of A. G. Mackey, G. H. P. Suspecting the signature of Mackey to be a forgery, Mr. Richards instituted inquiries and ascertained that such was the case. Calling M. O. Waggoner, and C. M. Lang to his assistance, these gentlemen satisfied themselves that Straus, with his numerous aliases, was a villian of the deepest dye. Under fears of being turned over to the authorities if he did not confess, he made a statement of which the following is a synopsis:

I, G. W. Straus, do make this statement: I was a member of the 5th New York Heavy Artillery, and at the battle of the Wilderness received five wounds, and was taken prisoner, and, with two sons, confined in Libby prison. My sons died of starvation while in prison. After my release I assumed the name of C. A. Caperton, afterwards that of John C. Ely; again that of Geo. W. Gillett. My representation that I was in Charleston is false. The paper that I presented to Mr. Richards, claiming to be signed by A. G. Mackey, is a forgery; Mr. Mackey did not sign it. I do not live in Charleston, as stated, but in New York, 48 First St.; I have been a minister and preached in Laurens street, New York, four years ago. I was convicted and sent to the State prison at Trenton, New Jersey, for bigamy. My true name is Geo. Levison; have a brother living in Brooklyn, N. Y. I was in Norwalk within the past year and obtained $15 of the Masons by fraud; while there I met M. O. Waggoner, whom I recognize here to-day, I then told him and others that I belonged to a commandery in Charleston, S. C.; I never belonged to any body of Masons in that city. I got $10 at Meadville, $5 from Mr. Palmer, of Corry. I hereby deliver to C. M. Lang, R. E. Richards and M. O. Waggoner, of my own free will the property in my possession belonging to the Masonic Fraternity for their disposal. I told another lie when I stated that I went by the name of Remington, of Lexington, Ky.

The above is a brief synopsis of the confession to which the villain made oath before a Notary Public. The Masonic property alluded to, consisted of a valuable work which furnished him a foundation upon which to pursue his swindling operations, and a memorandum book, which will be of service in informing those who have been defrauded that the fellow has "come to grief." The gentlemen named are entitled to great praise for exposing the villain. The Fraternity will be informed of his operations, and his "photo" will hereafter meet him wherever he may attempt to resume the operation of swindling of Masons.

Lectures on the Holy Land.

R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson, is now delivering lectures in public upon such matters as came under his own observation in Palestine, Syria, and Egypt.

Bro. Thomson is an earnest lecturer, a pleasing speaker, and is thoroughly at home with his subject. We give some of the resolutions adopted at various times:

By Oriental Lodge No. 33, May 7, 1869.

Whereas, R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson, Past Grand Lecturer of this State has at request, this evening related his Masonic researches in the Holy Land, thereby verifying our traditions and history. That he has also given a very interesting and lucid description of the mode of work in British Freemasonry, as compared with that of American Freemasonry; therefore be it

Resolved, That we tender to Bro. Thomson our thanks for his delivery of this lecture in review of our Institution, its work, and history. That we consider its matter has been clear, able, and well calculated to interest and benefit every Master Mason, who can find time and opportunity to listen to it, on any future occasion, and cordially recommend it to our sister lodges.

By Cyrus Lodge No. 188, March 4, 1869.

Whereas, Our R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson, has just completed his course of lectures in this city upon the Land of the Bible, under the auspices of this lodge, and we deem it fitting that some expression of our sentiments in reference to said lectures should be given: therefore,

Resolved, That we have listened to Bro. Thomson's lectures with great pleasure; that we deem them highly interesting and instructive to all, but especially to Masons and students of the Bible; and that we cordially commend Bro. Thomson and his lectures to the Masonic Fraternity at large, and to all other persons wherever he may sojourn. To the Craft we desire to say that Bro. Thomson's private lecture to Masons, exhibits an amount of study and research among Masonic antiquities and rituals that we have never seen surpassed.

By Horicon Lodge No. 144.

The pleasing and easy narrative style of delivery arrests your attention. His historic description of the country, as told by him, causes you to see it as clearly as we saw it.

He holds his audience from beginning to end, more and more interested. Minutes pass like seconds—to your surprise you have sat one hour and a quarter. You return home thankful that you, too, have visited the Holy Land.

The members of Horicon Lodge, feeling that the favor granted them in the delivery of this course of lectures under their auspices, do, in the following resolutions, offer—

1. That we hereby tender our heartiest thanks for this, another demonstration of his brotherly good wishes for our prosperity.
2. That the clear, plain, and lucid description of the Holy Land deserves the attention of ours and other lodges of Masons, as well as all who seek for the truth of the authenticity of the Christian faith, the Bible.
3. We feel it a pleasure to say that we have learned much that is of great interest and importance to us as Masons.

Several lodges have passed similar resolutions, and we believe that his lectures in public, and to the lodge, give general satisfaction. Bro. Thomson is also about to apply for a commission as grand lecturer, having been posted up by Bro. Barnard in the Grand Lodge work. There are but very few now who are holding on, or even favoring any prohibited work, and we are earnestly looking for that glad time, when "universal tranquility" shall pervade this jurisdiction.

William S. Rockwell.

On the 23d of January, 1870, the Fraternity of Baltimore, Maryland, performed the sad duty of returning to its mother earth, the remains of this illustrious Mason. He was Past Grand Master of Masons of Georgia, Past Grand High Priest, and Past Grand Commander of Knights Templar of that State, and, at the time of his death, was the Lieutenant Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States. The ceremonies on the occasion were appropriate and imposing, Illustrious Albert Pike, Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, presiding.

The deceased was emphatically a scholar of the highest order. By profession a lawyer, he, as such, gained considerable renown. At one time he was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia. As a writer he achieved considerable celebrity in the world of literature, and especially among the Masonic Fraternity, being the author of several valuable Masonic works. In his searches for information he was indefatigable, and seldom gave way to disappointment, perseverance being one of his chief characteristics. He was master of several languages, being proficient in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, together with nearly all the modern languages. From early youth to ripe old age industry marked his life, as it was ever his delight to peruse Egyptian Archæology, and in this study, he had but few, if any, superiors. After the war had been ended, he went to Maryland in search of health, and for the proper education of his children. He settled in Harford county, where he resided until his death.

Upon the coffin in which his mortal remains now lie, is the following inscription: "William S. Rockwell, Lieutenant Grand Commander of the Supreme Council A∴ and A∴ Rite—Died Jan. 23rd, 1870. Aged 60 years."—Record.

Opposition of the Pope to Freemasonry.

Persons unacquainted with the internal workings of Romanism may think that the opposition of the Pope to Freemasonry, and secret societies generally, is merely a vagary of arbitrary power, but it is not so. Rome admits of but one secret society; that is the Inquisition. The history of Freemasonry would throw a good deal of light on the conflict which has always raged between this secret society and he Roman secret orthodox society, the latter fighting it step by step in the deepest recesses of civilized society. The absolutism of continental governments stimulated secret societies at the first, as to-day the autocracy of the Vatican keeps alive the Roman Committee. Freemasonry entered Italy at Florence, and Clement XII., jealous of the existence of another secret society in opposition to his own, condemned it in a bull A. D. 1739. In the following year the cardinal Vicar issued an edict, announcing capital punishment on all Freemasons detected in the Papal States. This edict was committed for execution to the Inquisition, and is now in force.—["Ten Years in Rome"] —Galaxy for April.

The Masonic Trowel.—We have received No. 96 of The Masonic Trowel, published monthly at Springfield, Ill., by H. G. Reynolds, Jr. The Trowel is a sixteen page paper, and contains a vast amount of valuable Masonic information. Every member of the Order wishing to keep himself well informed should subscribe. Terms: $1.25 per annum We take pleasure in placing The Trowel on our exchange list.—Experiment, Texas.

Anecdote of Anti-Masonic Times.

The Hon. Francis Granger, one of the great anti-Mason leaders, who has passed away, used to relate the following anecdote with great zest to his friends. During the anti-Masonic excitement, Mr. Thomas Armstrong, a Democrat, was elected to the Assembly. He first took board, at Albany, in one of the cheaper hotels in the lower part of the city, but in a few weeks afterwards he changed his location, engaging board upon Capitol Hill, at that time a more expensive resort. Some surprise was expressed about it, when he explained that there were so many anti-Masons at his previous quarters as to make it unpleasant.

"But you have made yourself worse off up here," said his friend, "for here are Francis Granger, Thurlow Weed, and all the leaders of the anti-Masonic party."

"Oh, yes, I understand all that," replied Armstrong; "but all those fellows down there at the hotel believe in it."—Landmark.

Exchanges.

The Technologist for March is at hand. It is devoted to engineering, building, and manufacturing: $2, 176 Broadway, New York. The second number is fully up to the promises of the first. It contains a very fine full page engraving, on tinted paper, giving the details of the East River Bridge Caisson.

The Landmark is about four-fifths as large as The Trowel, and is devoted to Masonry, literature, arts, and sciences. It is published weekly at 40 Fulton St., New York, at $3 per annum. It is a good paper.

The Figaro is devoted to Music, Masonry and the Drama. Published weekly $3 yearly; 41 Park Row, New York.

Bro. M. M. De Levis, has sold the Clinton Public, to G. B. Richardson. The Public has been managed with marked ability.

Good Health for April is at hand: 11 Broomfield St., Boston, $2 per. annum. Every young wife should read the article "Advice to young Mothers, and the management of children."

The Magazine, Boston; Freemason, London; Freemason's Magazine, London; The Freemason's Journal, Toronto; Gavel, Montreal; Michgan Freemason; Voice of Masonry, and Mystic Star, Chicago; Evergreen, Dubuque; Freemason, St. Louis; Kentucky Freemason; Record of Western India; Record, Nashville; Keystone, and Hand-Book, Philadelphia; Landmark, Democrat, Dispatch, Figaro, and Courier, New York; Review, Cincinnati; Mirror, San Francisco; and Monthly, of Boston have all come regularly to hand.

American Sunday School Worker.—This magazine, edited by prominent gentlemen connected with the various evangelical denominations, and published by J. W. McIntyre, St. Louis, at $1.50 per year. On trial four months for 50 cents.

The Odd Fellow's Companion, and the New Age, both official organs of the I. O. of O. F. come regularly and are very welcome.

The Mother's Journal for April is "just the thing." Chicago, $2. per annum.

Affiliation.—Initiation indicates the first reception of a person into a Masonic lodge; affiliation denotes the reception of one already a Mason into some other lodge than the one in which he received the light.—Macoy.

The Supreme Court.

With the confirmation of Judge Bradley, the United States Supreme Bench is once more full. We give a list of the Judges, with their ages and the dates of their appointment, as follows:

The Symbolic Degrees.

The foundation of Masonry is the first degree. Science and symbolism rule in the second, and man's future immortality pervades the third. Capitular Masonry is an outgrowth of the first three degrees; Cryptic Masonry illustrates all before it; Ineffable Masonry is a philosophical and practical exposition of the symbolism of Ancient Craft Masonry, while the other branches of Scottish and Templar Masonry—very similar in many things—are systems of themselves.

Scottish Masonry has no extensive foothold as yet in this country. As a system it is immense, and its working requires patience, time, and study, besides heavy outlays for operating, and for dramatic effects. Templar Masonry seems to have captivated the senses and the judgment of the multitude. Its soldierly dress and knightly manners awe common minds, and charm those who delight in externals, while its very impressiveness gains the favor of the thoughtful and candid. No part of the Masonic system has been, or can be, so arranged in harmony with modern ideas and taste as Templar Masonry. And to all reflecting brethren, the discarding of the representation of innocence—the apron—is an innovation and a step in the way of disintegration. All these systems are well enough, so long as they do not obscure the broad and comprehensive office of symbols and emblems, as taught in the first three degrees.

The Entered Apprentice degree contains matter for life-time thought. From the start, until the last work is done, a symbol or emblem meets the novitiate at every step. In the hands of skilled workmen, impressions are made which are lasting as life; instructions are permanently fastened in the memory, and principles are grafted into the being of the initiate which influence his future life and conduct. In no other degree in Masonry is there any comparison in either the amount or intrinsic merit of the symbolism, doctrines, instructions, and practical lessons of the first degree. There is more drama in some; striking incidents in others; instructions grateful to men of science, culture, business habits, deep piety, high moral tone, and benignant dispositions, in one or other of the various degrees; but there is matter for all these in the first.

We are, however, deviating from our intention. Our judgment and affection are for the degeees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason. In the days of our boyhood, every Master Mason had his apron, sash, and gloves, usually kept in a box or satchel, ready for use. Royal Arch and Templar regalia were addenda, and the architect would as soon think of laying aside the implements used by a carpenter, as the Royal Arch and Templar Masons would have thought of laying aside, or being unprovided with the clothing of a Craftsman. It is different now. In places where Templarism prevails, or where the chapter is in the ascendant, the lodge degrees are considered as a sort of bridge to be passed, or stream to be crossed, in order to reach Chapter Masonry where the bright and rich regalia can be worn, or Templar Masonry where the splendid costume of the Templar can be put on.

This is not as it should be. And herein there is great danger. The higher degrees are exercising the functions and privileges of symbolic Masonry. We write now as the friend of all these grades, in words of warning and admonition, and we will give our reasons.

First. There are brethren who have passed all or some of the higher steps, and are in love with them, who deplore the waning regard for the symbolic degrees. They have studied Masonry, are familiar with its history, its unwritten teachings, its mysterious cabala, and its moral significance, and they know, that the higher degrees are only so much utility, beauty, symmetry, or elegance added to the main building. Without this main building, perfected by the experience of centuries, this additional utility, beauty, symmetry, or elegance, would not appear. They lament the loss of interest in the substantial, and deprecate the indecent hurry, the improper haste, and the manifest anxiety of the Entered Apprentice to reach the highest round of Capitular, Templar, or Scottish Masonry. The information obtained, and the time spent in order to pass the third degree, would seem to be regarded as so much waste.

Second. There are persons and influences at work peculiarly hostile to Capitular, Templar, and Scottish Masonry. Some of these persons are good men and good Masons. But they can not become Templars, nor Scottish Masons above the 16th degree. It is not so much their real hostility to these departments of Masonry, as it is to their assumptions, and the diminution they have caused in the love of Craft Masonry. And when we use the terms, Ancient Craft, Craft, Blue, or Symbolic, they all mean the first three degrees. These brethren, finding their zeal for Craft Masonry, and their dislike of any innovation, charged to their religious persuasion, naturally find themselves companions, not from choice, but from natural tendencies, with such as have no respect for Masonry in general, who are Philistines by nature, and who can not gain access to the higher degrees, or who are too cynical or timid to apply. There are some brethren, honest and sincere, who believe that Masonry should begin and end with the three degrees. Every honest man is entitled to the privilege of enjoying his own opinions. We have no controversy with these brethren. But there is still another class, who are striving with full intent, with malice aforethought, and in a spirit of revenge, to overturn all the glorious structures which are the monuments of labor and design, and which answer all the purposes for which they were intended. If our Chapter, Templar, and Scottish brethren think we are an alarmist, or that we are unnecessarily disturbed, let them dismiss that idea. If the organized forms of Masonry were to disappear to-day, the same God who has ruled in the past, will govern in the future, and all who put their trust in HIM, will be as safe under the blue canopy as they are in tyled lodges. These brethren are working—and working hard—in the cause of real infidelity. Their God as their writings show—is a non-entity—their morals, those which are convenient, and their religion as variable as the atmosphere. They are gods unto themselves, and their religion—"as you like it." The divine attribute of Truth is divine as they are divine, and that only, for falsehood and crime pervade their writings and their utterances. Chameleon-hued, they advocate symbolic Masonry because it is for their interest; they work into the hands of anti-Masons for revenge; they join hands with honest men to gain strength, and they circulate atheistical books because they are atheists, or no better, themselves. Such men will halt at no means to sow dissension among Masons. We caution all our brethren not to be lured or deceived by them, for their touch is leprosy and death. We caution all our brethren of the higher degrees to give no cause to deplore, or maliciously to assert that higher Masonry is sapping the foundations of the Institution.

Third. What is the remedy? It is manifest, that if the structure were undermined, and should fall, that all it contains would perish also.

So when the main building—the first three degrees—is neglected, suffered to decay, or to be undermined, rest assured that the downfall of the higher degrees is but the work of a day.

It becomes, then, as a matter of caution, of prevention, and of safety, the duty of every brother of the higher degrees to cultivate the first ones; to strengthen them; to add to their influence and power. Attendance upon lodge meetings, familiarity with the work and the business of the lodge, interest in all that affects it, and a sincere effort to develope and enforce Masonic teachings, should characterize the Royal Arch, Select, Templar, and Scottish Masons. They should show their equality and humility by teaching the lessons of patience, forbearance, brotherly kindness, and charity, and prove that their advancement, instead of separating, has endeared them more and more to every member of the mystic Fraternity of every degree.

And all Masons should learn and practice the great precepts of self-denial and moderation. Fault-finding and complaining are serious drawbacks in every society. He who is constantly complaining of neglect—of want of companionship—of want of sympathy, is sure to be shunned. All who desire friends should be friendly. Friendship grows of friendship, and if repelled, the one who refuses has himself only to blame. It is because men conceal these unamiable traits, that they get into our lodges, where they have no business and are a constant pest. We know that where brethren respect each other's differences and opinions, "meet upon the level and part upon the square," that jealousies of higher degrees are not common, and Masonry prospers because they WILL to have it so.

But, says one, the Templars usurp our funeral service; let us analyze the sentiment or motive which prompts the complaint. A member dies, and instead of requesting lodge burial he asks for the Templar service. Very well; that is his right. But we are met with the remark, "if the Templars had no such service, he would have asked to be buried by the lodge." Perhaps so; perhaps not. But it discloses this, that the lodge wished to perform the service. Now the law is, that a worthy Mason shall be buried by the lodge, if he requests it. This is now disregarded, and deceased brethren are buried by the Fraternity, whether they request it or not, and it would seem invidious to refuse or even neglect to do so. If a brother desires to be buried in the forms of Christian knighthood, none should complain. But when a brother who has been cared for and nursed in his sickness, and whose expenses have been oftentimes borne by the lodge, is taken by the Templars at the request of the family, it seems both hard and aggressive. But this is no cause for ill-natured comments or disruption of brotherly ties. Some things are better borne in silence, and this is one of them.

But, when a brother is buried by the Templars, they should bury him, and all other brethren who wish to attend as a mark of regard, should do so as citizens. The same rule which requires all who attend lodge funerals to appear in lodge regalia, should also prevail in Templar services.

But we wish that every lodge in the country would act independently, and just as if there was no other Masonry. We should be glad to see them have halls of their own, comfortably furnished, decently ornamented, and fitted up for comfort and use. We would rejoice to see every Master Mason have his lambskin apron, his nice blue sash, his good white leather gloves, plain or ornamented, so that when installations, dedications, constitutions, or public ceremonies occur, the brethren might appear in the grand old clothing of Masonry, and prove that there is no public display more imposing or significant than that made by a body of Master Masons.

Not long since a good brother was lamenting that a youthful friend, who is well posted in the work of the lodge, who is rather above average capacity, and is ambitious of preferment, was inclined to seek support from men whose positions in the Fraternity were far beneath their Masonic professions. How many young Masons and young men are stranded and made useless in this manner!

We want to point a moral to our young brethren upon this very point. In every society there are men of small minds—men of questionable habits—men who know themselves to be unworthy of respect, who seek to bolster themselves, and add to their importance by drawing to their companionship those—especially young men—who are more distinguished for ability or position. By means of flattery, support, and deceit, they win their confidence, undermine their moral principles, destroy their respect for men of superior character and attainments, and at last reduce them down to or far below their own level. Masonry is used by such men for their personal benefit, or as a sort of character by association. Few men who fall into their hands imbibe their sentiments, and imitate their practices, ever recover. They may prosper for a while; good men, hoping for improvement, may lend them countenance, but in the end they are sure to fall, or become non-entities.

It should be the positive, decided, and resolute determination of every young man to improve in personal, intellectual, and moral character. Especially should this be so with every young Mason; every night should welcome real improvement, and every morning a fresh resolution to "go up higher." Every young man who strives to do right, has an approving voice within, and every young Mason who is striving for real elevation and nobleness of character, will find men of generous minds, of real worth, of liberal attainments, who will give him aid, counsel, and direction, which will lead him to success and prosperity. Let our young brethren remember that they must soon become the men of the country; that on them will rest the burdens of the land, and that the only guarantee for the elevation of men and the continuance of a free government, is the intelligence and virtue of the people. Masonry is the friend of good and stable administration and of wise and humane laws. No matter what society a man moves in, he will find his natural level. Fools may be improved, but can seldom be made useful. Young men of sense, of education, of talents, of worth, who should rise in the scale of being, and be a blessing and an honor, may, by bad associations, become worse than a fool in his folly. The work of a fool is charged to a fool and forgotten, but the foolish acts of a man of ability, excites derision, pity, and scorn.

Young brethren, be pleased to lay this lesson to heart.

Opening of the Lodge.

All rites and ceremonies should aim to instruct and improve those concerned. They should be plain, adapted to the purposes designed, and easy of performance; earnestness, precision, correctness and proper time should attend them. The opening ceremony is important. To conduct it with propriety ought to be the peculiar study of all Masons, especially of those who have the honor to preside in our assemblies. To them, every eye is directed for regularity of conduct and behavior, and from them other brethren less informed, may naturally expect to derive instruction. No Mason is exempted from a share in this ceremony, and it is the prelude to business. The presiding officer should take the chair precisely at the appointed time, and at the proper signal, every officer should take his proper place, and every brother should clothe himself and be seated. No common excuse should be allowed to interfere with punctuality. Cautions are to be first observed, and no excuse will permit any want of fidelity. After the cautions, the opening at all regular communications proceeds in regular order from the first to the third degree. At the opening, the blessing of Deity should be invoked; it should never be omitted; in fact, no lodge is regularly opened without it. The Master is reminded of the dignity and character of his position, and the brethren of the respect due to him in their sundry stations. A reverential awe for the Deity is inculcated, and he is supplicated that the labors then begun may be continued in peace and closed in harmony. At a regular communication, the first business is the reading of the minutes of the last stated and subsequent special communications, for the information of the brethren. Transactions should be read at the close so that proper corrections may be made before they are recorded.

Montana--Gouley--Nash.

Past Grand Master Frary, of Montana, has sent us the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of that Territory, and directs our attention to an article published by our worthy cotemporary of the St. Louis Freemason, on page 62 March number, entitled "Grand Master of the United States." The editor alleges that the Grand Master of Minnesota called his attention to several errors and mistakes, which are mostly attributed to the printers and proof readers. Among other things, the Freemason represents that M. W. Bro. John J. Hull is made to appear by the Montana proceedings to be the "Grand Master of every Grand Lodge in the United States, and Bro. F. W. Sanders, Grand Secretary of all of them," and that Bro. John J. Hull is the last Past Grand Master of Montana. We feel quite sure that our cotemporary "run" before he read, and has unwittingly lacerated the feelings of good brethren, which he would not have done had he carefully looked through the proceedings.

The Grand Lodge of Montana was formed January 24, 1866. John J. Hull was elected Grand Master, and C. W. Mather, Grand Secretary. The annual communication was held October 1, the same year. Bro. Hull was re-elected Grand Master, and Wilber F. Sanders was elected Grand Secretary.

At the grand communication in 1867, Leander W. Frary was elected Grand Master, and Bro. Sanders was re-elected Grand Secretary.

In 1868, Bro. Sanders was elected Grand Master, and Solomon Starr, Grand Secretary. There come to our hands no record of proceedings in better order than those of Montana for 1868. The reports of officers and of committees, the accounts of the Grand Secretary and Grand Treasurer, and all the transactions are clear, definitive, well stated, and in proper place. The usual report on correspondence is printed last in the pamphlet. It is a very able document, and would be creditable to any committee in our older Grand Lodges. On page 108 is the following resolution:

> "Resolved, That the Grand Secretary be requested to publish in the report on Masonic correspondence, or as an addition thereto, such comments as have been made in other grand lodges upon the organization or proceedings of this Grand Lodge."

The italics are ours. Instead of making these "comments" a part of the correspondence report, the committee preferred to make them "in addition thereto," and they were published immediately after the regular proceedings, and the list of lodges and members was sandwiched in between these "comments" and the report on correspondence. This is a departure from custom, but it is proper enough, more particularly as it gave our Montana brethren a chance to see and preserve what was said of them by others, and at their own willing cost.

At the last grand communication, Bro. N. P. Langford was elected Grand Master, and Bro. Starr, Grand Secretary. So that, instead of Bro. Hull's being the last P. G. M., he was the first, Bro. Frary the second, and Bro. Sanders the third.

Masonry flourishes in Montana and is in good hands. We are not quite able to say, but we are very confident that several of the brethren have been distinguished in other jurisdictions, especially Breth. Sanders and Frary.

Since the above was put in type we have received the Freemason, which handsomely acknowledges its mistake, as follows:

> MONTANA--APOLOGETIC.
> "In another column of the Freemason we have alluded to our remarks in the March number on the "Universal Grand Master," and we have already received two or three letters from our good brethren and friends in that flourishing Territory relative to the same, complaining that we did them injustice in the premises.

We think our readers will bear us out when we say that we never published anything with an intention of doing injustice, and also, that whenever we were assured of having committed a mistake, we at once frankly acknowledged the fact, and made the amende honorable. This has been a ruling principle of our private and public life. Therefore it gives us pleasure to again call the attention of our readers to the Montana proceedings, by saying that we were misled by the remarks of a distinguished brother before we had fully read the proceedings, except the "Appendix A;" but before our March number had reached Montana we discovered the mistake, and hastened to get it straight. "Appendix A" was a review of remarks by other Grand Lodges on Montana, whereas "Appendix C" contained the original report on correspondence, which latter one was overlooked at the time we hurriedly wrote the March article; hence the joke is on Bro. Nash, of Minnesota, and ourself, and we honestly "own up the corn." As we have several times remarked we now repeat, that no Grand Lodge in the world publishes such elegant reports of proceedings, nor are any more devoted to the great and intelligent interests of the Fraternity, than the young Grand Lodge of Montana. The proceedings of 1869 have not been received, but from a letter received since reviewing the proceedings of 1868, on page 76, we learn that M. W. Bro. N. P. Langford, was elected Grand Master, and Bro. Sol. Starr, of Helena, Grand Secretary.

What Correspondents Say.

W. Geo. Smith, Albion.—We are getting along pleasantly, and working good material. A great deal of the old prejudice is dying out.

Bro. H. O. Sleight, Cambridge.—We guard the outer door; our lodge is prospering, and Masonry here is in good repute.

G. Lec. Dewey reports Forrest Lodge, 614, at Forrest, Livingston county, as a good and harmonious one, and that the brethren meet, act, and part as Masons should.

Theo. Jones, Sec. King Solomon's, 197.—We are in our new hall, and prospering.

G. W. Owens, Sec. Caman Lodge, 343, Clifford, Ind.—We have 25 members and are poor, but we are just completing a hall 22 by 44 feet, and are united and happy as a lodge.

S. H. Fawcette, Blair, Neb., formerly of Princeton.—Blair is 25 miles above Omaha, on the Missouri River, at the crossing of the Sioux City R. R.; is but eleven months old, has 500 people, a symbolic lodge, and measures are in progress for a chapter.

Bro. G. W. Fuller, Wyoming.—The lodge at this place is a real success. I have visited many lodges within the last two years, and this is one of the most pleasant and best working lodges in my knowledge.

W. Bro. Louis Zeigler, Chenoa.—We have obtained a dispensation for a new chapter, and are about to organize. We have a plenty of good material ready.

W. Bro. A. B. Davidson, Lexington.—Our lodge is harmonious, and we are having plenty of work.

W. Bro. R. W. Moore, Buda.—Our lodge-room was totally destroyed by fire on the 23d of March. We saved our charter, records, and a part of our jewels. It is a heavy loss, but we are thankful it is no worse. We are determined to move on, and have made temporary arrangements for our meetings.

R. W. Thomas J. Wade, Ottawa.—All our Masonic bodies here are operating in harmony, and are all prosperous.

Bro. J. M., Whitesville, Mo.—When Whitehall, No. 162, was formed, it had but few members, and was very poor. But by the efforts of Bro. E. Myers, a charter member and W. M. for several years, it is in comfortable circumstances, has about 70 members, and a good hall. And it has helped to build up two lodges in its neighborhood.

R. W. Bro. W. R. Penick, St. Joseph, Mo.—Last Monday eve, M. W. Grand Master Muir set Charity Lodge U. D. to work. It commences with the hearty approbation of the chartered lodges in this city. Dr. Knight, the W. M., presided over a lodge in this city eight years, and the S. W. has had a similar experience, has served as D. D. G. M., and held important positions in Grand Lodge. The Senior Deacon, Bro. Goslee, is a superior workman, and all the officers are skilled in their duties.

Bro. W. W. Haley, Sec. of Arkabutla Lodge, Miss.—I should like to have all of Bro. Rounseville's articles. I find them to be quite a recommendation in procuring subscribers.

[We are sorry to say that the papers for Oct., Nov., and Dec., are entirely exhausted.]

Note to Correspondents.—We intend to make this a prominent department of The Trowel. But our brethren are requested to be sharp, short, and decisive. The world is moving, and readers skip the long extracts. Be brief, pointed, and explicit, or else our brethren must not complain if we act the surgeon unmercifully.—Ed.

Examiners—Odin.

Starting March 22d on the 6:30 train, with R. W. Bro. Chas. Fisher, we reached St. Louis by the C., A. & St. L. R. R., about 11 A. M. We called upon R. W. Bro. Gouley, G. Sec. of Missouri, who courteously conducted us through the lodge, chapter, and commandery rooms of the Masonic temple. The chapter room is hard to excel, and its appointments are perfect.

The commandery has two convenient halls, while the paraphernalia is admirably adapted to the use of the Orders.

The lodge-room is spacious, and near by is a smaller one for special meetings. Then there are drill, lecture, banquet, and committee-rooms in addition, besides an immense hall for the meetings of the grand bodies, and an office for the Grand Secretary conveniently fitted up.

The finish of all the rooms and halls is in a high style of art.

At 4 P. M. we were on route for Odin. Arriving, we found R. W. Breth. Pricket, Chamberlin, and Barnard, awaiting. Comfortable quarters were provided at the Depot Hotel, kept by Bro. Badolet, who knows how to please his guests, satisfy their wants, and make them feel at home.

In the evening we were handsomely received by the lodge, the W. M. Bro. T. J. Whitehead, presiding.

The second degree was then conferred in a masterly manner, Bro. Barnard presiding, Bro. Fisher on the floor. On the following day the examiners went through the ritual and lectures, and in the evening the third degree was conferred in a very correct and thorough style, Bro. Chamberlin presiding, Bro. Depew in the west, Bro. Fisher in the south, and Breth. Prickett, Barnard, and Whitehead on the floor. A large number were in attendance from Centralia, Carlyle, Kinmundy, Salem, Xenia, Flora, Clay City, and Parkersburg, we noticing, among others, Grand Lecturer Jones, Breth. DeLancy, Case, Peterson, Shultz, Whitaker, Shadwell, Geo. Mason, Power, Evans, and many others. There were at least fifty brethren from abroad. We dined with Bro. Morrison, and found a hospitable family, an elegant matron, and a lot of beautiful children.

The examiners, and other visitors were made welcome at the mansion of Bro. Depew, H. P. of Odin Chapter, and tea was served by the amiable hostess in a charming manner that made one feel at home. Here, too, are children that will make their mark in the world.

The lodge at Odin is a strong body of men, enterprising, persistent, and industrious, it would succeed anywhere. But, with a pleasant, eloquent, and graceful Master like Bro. Whitehead, and so efficient a supporter as Bro. Depew, the Secretary, both of whom are thoroughly posted, failure is impossible. But few young lodges escape the frictions incident to a new organization, and this has not been an exception. But the good sense which pointed out these two brethren as the men to manage railroad business for the two roads crossing at Odin has been well used in the management of Masonic matters. The town is growing, and a fine, strong lodge will be the result.

Thursday morning, farewells, and the party went four different ways, and we homeward on the fine chair train to St. Louis, and thence to Springfield.

The Chicago and Alton road is not surpassed for speed, smoothness or certainty in the west. It connects two metropolitan cities, and has a management and force that are seldom equaled.

We found a new man on the road, Bro. Bulman, of Alton, who runs from Bloomington to St. Louis. He is an accommodating, spirited, and patient man, combining precisely the qualities needed for such a place.

The Ohio and Mississippi road has ever been noted for its large passenger patronage. It is a fine railway, and connects Cincinnati and St. Louis.

The next meeting of examiners will be held at Galesburg, commencing in the evening of the fourth Tuesday in April.

Got his Change.

There lives somewhere in this State, a man of some distinction, talents, and learning. In his general demeanor he is a very courteous gentleman. But he is unfortunately a monomaniac on the subject of Freemasonry. We don't say he is a wise man in anything. Superior abilities and pertinacity stand in the stead of wisdom or discretion.

Near by him lives a deacon who is wealthy; not by any management of his, for by any ordinary thrift he ought to be ten times more wealthy than he is. But he is rich in spite of himself. He gives where it is sure to be published; not elsewhere. Honest people do not respect him, neither do the poor bless him.

It so happened that these two met at the deacon's house, and way into the small hours of the night, they talked about Masonry. A certain preacher in the deacon's town was noted for his cheerful piety, and for attending to his own business. It was a passing wonder to these men why this preacher did not rail against secret societies, and how he could be so cheerful where Masonry abounded so much. At last they hit upon the reason. The rascal certainly must be a Freemason. No man could do as he did but a Freemason. He acted like one. All night they gloamed over it. Doughnuts and green tea confirmed the certainty. With early dawn the deacon's companion started for the preacher's residence, roused him from his pleasant slumbers, and confronted him with the awful question, "Are you a Freemason?" With a feeling of intense indignation, and a look of supreme contempt, the preacher slowly and emphatically replied, "It is none of your business, sir." To that man, that preacher will always be a Freemason, although he is not one.

Robert D. Holmes.

The distinguished brother whose name heads this article, died on the 12th March last, in New York city. He made his way from poverty and obscurity to rank and fame as a lawyer, critic, author, and writer. For many years he was editor of the Masonic department of the New York Dispatch, and there was a racy solidity in all his writings that secured attention from all his readers.

He was made a Mason in 1852, and immediately achieved distinction, and from W. M. of Mystic Tie Lodge, he worked his way to the Grand Mastership in 1865, and was re-elected in 1866.

He was also proficient as a Chapter and Templar Mason.

He has been unwell all winter, but was supposed to be mending, when he passed suddenly away at the age of fifty-four.

Ninety-seven lodges, and several other Masonic bodies attended the funeral, and the procession of Masons alone exceeded two miles in length. Deputy Grand Master Anthon presided.

Propriety and Impropriety.

There is great propriety in making apology where one is wrong, and circumstances are such that an apology does not make the matter worse. It is generous to forgive, and magnanimous to forget injuries. It is unwise to be at war, or even at arm's length with a man of sense, ability, or character, whatever may have been the occasion of difference, if parties are willing to meet, act like men, pass over the past, and endeavor to forget each other's errors. It is not necessary for such men to descend into the valley of humiliation, to exact terms, or even to review the past. As gentlemen they meet; they are equal, and they instinctively understand each other.

But when clowns, whose business is insult and abuse; who have no moral sense, no good breeding; who exact everything and yield nothing; who sport with things sacred and sacred feelings; when they want apologies, it would be like "casting pearls before swine" to give them. No. We have no war with, or concessions to make to clowns or fools. There could be no greater impropriety.

Concerning God and Religion.

A Mason is obliged by his tenure to obey the moral law; and if he rightly understands the art, he will never be a stupid atheist, nor an irreligious libertine. But though in ancient times Masons were charged in every country to be of the religion of that country or nation, whatever it was, yet it is now thought more expedient only to oblige them to that religion in which all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves; that is, to be good and true men, or men of honor and honesty, by whatever denominations or persuasions they may be distinguished, whereby Masonry becomes the center of union, and the means of conciliating true friendship among persons that must have remained at a perpetual distance. Ancient Charges, 1722.

Ole Bull and Henry Clay.—At one time Henry Clay was lying ill at his hotel at Washington. Ole Bull arrived in the city and put up at the same hotel. Learning that Clay was also in the house, he was desirous of seeing him. As no callers were allowed in the sick-room of the great statesman, Ole Bull took a room adjoining, and taking up his violin, began softly and gently to play "The Last rose of Summer." As soon as the artist had finished, Clay ordered the servant to open his door, and Ole Bull was at once admitted to the chamber of the great man, who had actually left his bed, and throwing his arms around the musician, said; I knew that was you, as no human being but Ole Bull can play that beautiful melody as I have just heard it."

Tennyson's new home on the Surrey hills is to be a stately mansion, with extensive grounds, and has been named "Tennyson House." Somebody, who probably owns real estate in the neighborhood, gets the English papers to say that the pleasure of having so great a neighbor will doubtless draw many people to erect other homes in the vicinity. But Tennyson is not a very "sociable" neighbor, and is likely to treat them as John Randolph did the Virginia planter who said to him, "Mr. Randolph, I am a neighbor of yours; I pass your plantation frequently." "You are welcome to pass it sir," said Randolph, "as often as you please."

R. W. Bro. Jos. H. Hough, is now in his 29th year of service as Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of New Jersey. In appreciation of this, a valuable gold jewel was presented to him March 15th, by a committee appointed by the Grand Lodge. We think that he stands now at the head of the roll. Either him or R. W. Bro. Dove of Virginia.

Thanks to M. W. Bro. Drummond, Portland, for pages of the history of the Grand Lodge of Maine up to 160.

M. W. Bro. A. E. Ames, M. D., is President of the Alumni of Rush Medical College, Chicago.

We are sorry to learn that R. W. Bro. Virden, of Virden, has been afflicted by severe sickness of himself and family.

We are under very great obligations to R. W. Bro. Miles H. Wilmot, W. M. at Illiopolis, for his fraternal efforts to reconcile brethren grieved and offended. We hope he may succeed in his efforts.

We are to dedicate the hall at Tuscola on the first Tuesday in May.

Away back in 1825, such men as Robert P. Dunlap, Albion K. Paris, Samuel Fessenden, Peleg Sprague, were conspicuous as members of the Grand Lodge of Maine. They, were subsequently in the positions of Senator or Representative in Congress, Judge, or Governor.

M. W. Bro. John W. Simons, Past Grand Master and Grand Treasurer of the Grand Lodge of New York, is now editing the Masonic department of the New York Dispatch. If any one can fill the place of the lamented Holmes, it is "genial John."

Another War of Words.

Not content with the combing which Mrs. De Geer gave the young Blanchard at Lisle, the antis at Sycamore challenged her to a discussion with him in their goodly town. From the account given in the Sycamore papers, we judge that the boy was too big to be spanked, but for all that Mrs. De Geer tanned his jacket most thoroughly. If the young gentleman can find no better business he had better go to raising hogs. One of his brother antis can tell him how to increase their weight on the day of sale, and how he didn't get the money for his trick either.

Visit to El Paso.

El Paso is situated upon beautiful upland ground, in Woodford county, at the crossing of the Illinois Central main line, and the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railways. It is one of the thrifty towns which have sprung into being within a few years, and has a large number of stores, good hotels, and all kinds of mechanics usual in such places, with a bank kept by Bro. Tompkins. Bro. Moore, formerly Sheriff of McLean, is Postmaster.

A few weeks since we stopped over a train, and dined with Bro. Gibson, former Mayor, and agreed to make a visit soon. We accordingly gave notice, and visited the lodge, March 16. Brethren were present from Eureka, Minonk, Panola, and Secor. Unfortunately, the W. M., Doctor Lewis, and the Secretary, Bro. Gibson, were absent attending court as witnesses in a criminal case at Hennepin. The Senior Warden was also absent, but Bro. Hall, P. M., exemplified the manner of opening and closing a lodge; afterwards, Bro. Shockley, of Eureka, did the same work; both did well.

Bro. Shockley then conferred the first and second degrees with much skill and impressiveness; the floor work was managed by Bro. Hall as S. D., and the degrees were correctly conferred.

All that is needed at El Paso, is a little brushing up, which can be done without any help from abroad. The lodge is numerous, having more than one hundred members, and Mackey Chapter is also prosperous. We were the guest of Bro. TOMPKINS and wife, where we found children, mother, and other inmates all happy in a nice suburban home.

How changed! Fifteen years ago, Panola, two miles above, was a prosperous town; then there was hardly an El Paso. In 1861, we lectured this same lodge in Panola; the Messrs. Tompkius removed to El Paso; then the name was changed, and in due time a chapter was organized. El Paso has 3,500 people, and every appearance of future greatness, while its humble neighber is a finished town. Such is life!

Literary Notices.

Rummel's Illinois Hand-Book ought to have been noticed before. It gives a general view of the State of Illinois and its government, together with a brief views of the general government. Facing page 56 is a page of the portraits of John M. Palmer, Governor, John Dougherty, Lieutanant Governor, W. Bushnell, Attorney General, E. Rummel Secretary of State, C. E. Lippencott, Auditor Public Accounts, N. Bateman, Superintendent Public Instruction, E. N. Bates, Treasurer, A. H. Worthen, Geologist, H. Dilger, Adjutant Gen. Six of the above are Freemasons. Plates of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, Lincoln's Mansion, the Soldier's Orphan's Home, Industrial University, Hospital for the Insane, the State Penitentiary, Lincoln's Monument, and new State House, are interspersed among the pages, and at the endare three beautiful maps showing the counties, county seats, Congressional, Senatorial, and Representative Districts.

Gershom Martin.

While at El Paso, March 16, who should we meet but an old friend and brother, GERSHOM MARTIN, one of the publishers of the El Paso Journal. It is a live paper, and the originals are "rich, racy and rare." Our brother has struck "ile" this time.

Receipts for Subscriptions

The Masonic Orpheus.

A collection of songs, hymns, chants, and familiar tunes, especially designed to accompany the work in all the degrees in the lodge, chapter, council, and commandery; also adapted to the ceremonies of installation, dedication and funeral obsequies. Music arranged for male voices, by Howard M. Dow, Organist for the several Masonic bodies in the city of Boston.

The above work is published by Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston, embracing two hundred pages, bound in large quarto form, and will be sent to any address, post-paid, on the receipt of three dollars. It is the most complete work of the kind we have ever seen; the selections of hymns are good, and so far as we are able to judge, the music is well arranged.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—ISA. 8, 20.

16. An amendment to the By-Laws of a lodge, when lawfully adopted, is thenceforth a part of the law, and can not be reached by reconsideration at the next or any subsequent communication.

17. In answer to a query from a correspondent whose name is not signed.—In Illinois, if a petition is referred, it must be balloted on, if the lodge has jurisdiction. In some grand lodges, if the report of the committee is unfavorable, no ballot is required.

PHRENOLOGY IN CHICAGO.—During the latter part of March and the fore part of April, the publishers of the Phrenological Journal, New York, will occupy rooms in Chicago, where they will be happy to meet their Western friends.

Miscellaneous Reading.

Pharmacy, Etc., Etc.

BY W.M. CORNELL, M. D., LL.D.

PHARMACY, or the Preparation of Medicines, in this country, is far from receiving that attention which its importance justly demands. Much credit should be given to some of our leading druggists and chemists for what they have done in this direction; and yet the remark is true that this subject has not had such attention as it deserves.

England and continental countries are far before us in trainirg persons for special professions. Their laws require thorough instruction for all positions of importance; while here people go into business to learn their trade after they have entered upon the discharge of its duties. Their plan is much safer and in every way better than ours. There no man can take upon himself the duties of a physician or an apothecary without a thorough preliminary education and due licensure. Here any man may leave the plough or the workshop one day, and assume the duties of a physician or an apothecary the next, or the same. There he finds the officers of the law at his heels sooner than he wants to see them. Here he has scores of patients and purchasers of his "bitters" and "panaceas." They come—

"Thick as locusts on the land of Nile."

But we are a free people! Yes, and too often this freedom is seen and felt to be injurious and dangerous. What can place a sick man or his family in greater peril than an ignorant physician? Nothing, unless it be an ignorant apothecary—or a careless donkey—who puts up oxalic acid for Epsom salts, or deadly poison for harmless physic. The city of Boston, and every other large city in our land, swarms with those calling themselves doctors and doctresses, who have taken up the business as they jump into speculations and jobs of the most common kind. Recently, in conversation with a man who had hob-nobbed at half a dozen trades within as many years, he was asked, What are you doing now? "Oh, I'm a doctor now;" and out came his card, showing a partnership of Drs. So-and-So; "and we are doing a noble business."

Undoubtedly our laws are at fault as to the matters of ignorant men and women practicing medicine and pharmacy. But when this is said the reply is, People must take care of themselves—"every tub must stand on its own bottom;" "those who dance must pay the fiddler." It is true these old saws are carried out; and those who employ ignoramuses when they need a physician, or medicine compounded, do often pay dear for their folly, many very often by losing life.

. But does the matter stand exactly so? Ought legislatures and wise men to allow the ignorant to be thus imposed upon, and cheated out of their money, and their lives too? Is this what we support government for? are not laws for the welfare of the community? and does the welfare, the health, the life of the people, call fot ignorant physicians and ignorant apothecaries? It may be that these evils are destined to continue; yea, to go on as they have in geometrical ratio. But if it be so, it shall not be for want of a warning voice raised against them.

FAINTING.—Some time since a clergyman wrote to the editor of this journal, requesting him to give information upon the subject heading this article. Ha says, very truly, "The people need instruction upon this subject. Medical works are expensive, and in many cases are worse than Greek to the non-professional reader. Your magazine seems to be the proper medium of information for the masses."

This is all very correct; and something may properly be said upon the subject proposed.

Fainting, or syncope, has many causes; and is distinguished by physicians into various kinds, according to these causes and the peculiar features of the several cases. In one form of syncope the action of the heart is suspended; in another respiration simply ceases; and in still another, the blood seems not to be properly ærified, and particular nerves unusually irritated.

On the cause of the first of this kind ef syncope—the arrest of the heart's action—Brown-

Sequard has the following: "I will merely say that this arrest may take place—1. Through the influence of irritation of the sensory nerves of the limbs; or, 2. through irritation of different parts of the encephalon (head) in the neighborhood of the bulb, and of the cervical spinal marrow; or, 3. from irritation of the great sympathetic nerve, in its abdominal portion," etc.

The second of the forms of fainting named is caused, as in the case referred to in the letter (pregnancy), by the irritation of the abdominal ganglion of the great sympathetic nerve. The sudden movement of rhe fœtus, in the case named by the inquirer,are unquestionably the cause of the faintings to which he refers, The remedy is a natural one, which custom soon reconciles the patient to—that is, habit, experience. Till this occurs, if the case be a troublesome one, it is well to call in the family physician.

Brain Food.—Some of our modern wise ones have had considerable to say, lately, upon the various kinds of food which particularly nourish or supply the waste of the brain. That the labors of the brain are exhausting to the animal economy is very true; still, the experience of the most studious has proved that it is not so much the intensity of the study as the length of time spent in it, and neglect of relaxation, that produce the exhaustion.

We need no better proof of this than is furnished in the case of Sir Isaac Newton. No man has studied more intensely than he did, and few have lived to be octogenarians with so little sickness. Whoever has carefully perused the article in the first issue, which went the rounds of the press very generally and will carry out the suggestions therein made, will rarely be exhausted with brain-labor; and still more will be his sickness from over-study.

German students generally study more hours than we do, and yet break-downs are more seldom found among them than with us. The reason of this is, they take better care of the body for the sake of the mind—of the house because of the tenant that lives in it. The real fact is, more rust out, than wear out.

That the brain is affected both by the quality and quantity of the food and drinh, like other parts of the body—yea, more, in proportion to the amount of blood it contains, no physiologist will deny. But that certain kinds of food—say fish and milk, as some have maintained—are specially adapted to repair the exhausted brain, has never been demonstrated, and, like many statements of half-fledged geologists, should be received with many grains of salt.

We once asked the famous Elias Smith, who had belonged to all the religious denominations of the day, one at a time, why his sons, Daniel and Matthew Hale, were so changeable? "Don't you know?" said the old man. "No," he was answered. "Why, they are Smithy," was his reply. We have never known a man who strongly advocated a fish diet io augment brain-work, who was not fishy, and his brain-work milky.

The idea of this and that kind of food for particular organizations—bread for the feet, potatoes for the hands, and milk and fish for the brain—is a Will-o'-the-wisp, and modern ignis fatus. There is no foundation for it in facts.

The best and the only safe way to preserve the brain, and every other organ of the body, is to eschew alcohol and all narcotic poisons, eat temperately of such food as has been found by experience to agree with the stomach, avoid late suppers and night-study, and sleep as much as nature requires.

Obesity, in some cases, is a disease, and causes great inconvenience. Others are extremely anxious to gain flesh, and become "fat and fair." It is a fact that those persons have the strongest muscles, and are the firmest built, can endure the most, and, generally, last the longest, who are not obese. So there are substantial reasons why sensible people should prefer not to be fat; nevertheless, there is a degree of cheerfulness, and merriment, even, about some obese persons, that renders them very cheerful companions, and the most agreeable company.

It has been said all the flesh and all the fat we ever gain is accomplished during sleep. There is, no doubt, some truth in this remark. The infant is usually fat, and he sleeps the greater part of the time. The fat person, also, sleeps very much. Old persons sleep but little, and when this season comes, as it does with by far the larger part, they begin to lose the rotundity of body which characterized them at middle life, and, as the common expression is, "drp up." This is not the case where such persons sleep as well as they did when they were younger.

The conclusion, then, to be drawn from these facts, is, if any desire to lose fat, and become thin, they must sleep but little. This will reduce obesity faster than any other means can.

A young minister was once candidating, and a very fat man of the parish, and a constant attendant, was asked how he liked the young clergyman's sermons. "I have but one fault to find with them," said he; "they are too short." The fact was, the fat old man went to sleep when the sermon commenced, and waked up only when it closed.

The best remedy for obesity is, keep cool by day and night, sleep little, moderate indulgence in eating and drinking, and plenty of exercise. Whoever will observe these rules will not be likely to become too fat. Some kind of food produce more fat than others; nothing is more fattening than Indian meal. The old way of fattening a goose, so tasty to epicures, was to tie its legs, put it in the chimney-corner, and cram it with Indian meal. The same process will fatten a human goose—keep still, keep warm, sleep most of the time, and live on hasty pudding.

Why are Late Suppers Injurious?—An inquirer asks this question, and it deserves an answer. Some would answer it as Dr. Franklin did his question. Why, when a tub is full of water, if you put a fish into it, will the water not run over?

After several persons had given wise answers, he, being called upon for his, replied, it would. So, some say, late suppers are not injurious.

They reason on this wise. Animals, when full fed, go to sleep, and they tell us of the experiment which the physiologists tried upon two dogs. Both were full fed. One was allowed to go to sleep. The other was compelled to move about rapidly. At the expiration of two hours, both were killed. In the stomach of the one that slept, the food was found nearly all digested. In the stomach of the other, it had scarcely begun to digest. The argument, therefore, was, that food digests the most rapidly when we are asleep.

Still, we believe late suppers are injurious, and for the following reasons:

1. We never sleep well when we eat a late supper. This is an argumentum ad hominem, from experience.

2. A larger number of men that eat late suppers, die suddenly, than of those who do not. This may be called begging the question; but facts prove it. Many of our politicians, who are almost compelled to take late suppers, have died suddenly. Witness our late Governor Andrew, and the Hon. Mr. Pond, President of the Senate; and this without any moral delinquency. We once said to a hale clergyman, past the meridian of life, who was making a hearty supper at a late hour, of roast-beef and mince pie, Doctor, do your dare to eat heartily at this late hour? He replied, "Oh! my food never hurts me." In a few weeks, his sudden death was reported.

3. There are physiological reasons for late suppers being injurious. It takes food usually three hours to be digested, and some kinds six hours. As the process proceeds, more blood flows to the stomach than when it is empty. This, of course, creates greater action; and as the old theories of digestion, such as trituration and decay, were completely exploded by the observations of Dr. Beaumont, who had the privilege of looking into the stomach of Alexis St. Martin, and seeing his food as it was being digested, and found that it was dissolved by the gastric juice, and as this juice was not poured out so freely when he was asleep, this is a reason why food taken late at night should not be digested so readily as when taken at other times.

4. Others tell us that food taken late at night does not settle down so completely upon the inner coat of the stomach as that taken earlier.

5. Everybody knows that late suppers are injurious, whether we can give all the whys or not.

A Bad Taste in the Mouth may be caused by decayed teeth. To cure it, remove them. Or it may arise from a disordered stomach or torpid bowels. In this case particular attentio must be given to the diet. It should be light—farinaceous chiefly—well masticated, eaten slowly, and never washed down by drinking during the process. If constipation is present, much may be done to remove it by eating unbolted wheat flour, stewed apples, or any subacid fruit. Acids, as a general rule, afford relief by thinning the bile, which is nature's physic. If these do not relieve with proper exercise, call for some good physician.

Cold Feet is generally a symptom of dyspepsia, and will be cured by removing the cause. The advice given under Bad Taste in the Mouth will very generally apply to cold feet. The extremities of the body, hands, and feet, become cold because the heart's action is languid, and there is not sufficient vitality to throw the blood to these distant organs. Careful living, gentle exercise, basking in sunshine, and cheerfulness, have a wonderful effect in promoting good circulation in the hands and feet, and when this is the case they are never cold.

Hair Dyes.—Most of the famous hair dyes are poisonous, and should be let alone. We have had patients that have suffered much from them. Dr. Elisha Harris, Sanitary Superintendent of the Metropolitan District, New York, in his report to the Board of Health of that city, says: "In several instances death has ensued from their use. Some of the principal ingredients in them are fatal and rapid poisons, and yet so subtle as to give no pain or warning to their victim." The best and safest way is to let alone all cosmetics, specifics for making the hair grow, or keeping it on the head, or giving it a different color from what nature gives it. They are mostly vile cheats, and their sale should be prohibited by law.

American Cookery.—The process of frying so much of our food is not only injurious to health, but expensive to the purse. The usual custom is to fry almost everything we eat. By thus cooking meats we deprive them of a large portion of their nutriment, while, at the same time, we combine them with a great amount of grease, which is very indigestible and pernicious. There is scarcely anything more indigestible than fat. Indeed, experiments have shown that this substance is not digested by the stomach at all; and the best supposition in reference to it is that it is taken care of by the pancreas.

Oysters mixed with flour, or batter as it is called, are a very common dish—one in which epicures delight; and yet when fried in grease, they are about as indigestible as leather, and would oppress even the stomach of an ostrich. In the frying-pan, also, many cook chickens. After having been well soaked in grease, and simmered till hard as dried herrings, they are served up, and digested in agony, and afford little or no nourishment. In a similar way beef-steak is often spoiled by a slow simmering, so that it can be neither cut nor eaten; all its rich and juicy and nourishing properties have been destroyed. So in reference to bread; flour which should make light, wholesome bread, for want of proper kneading and baking, is clammy, heavy, and unfit to be eaten. We might go through with nearly the whole process of American cookery, and find it miserable enough.

Nor is its unhealthfulness all its evil; for it wastes a large part of our food, which in these days of high prices, is no small item. A piece of beef which would make soup sufficient for half a dozen Frenchman would all be eaten by an American, after it had been fried as above described. Verily we need a better system of cooking.—Good Health, by A. Moore, 21 Franklin St., Boston, at $2 yearly.

Children's Arms and Legs.—Nude arms are the means of the premature deaths of many of the little innocents. We often see these little mites, the darlings of their parents, with thick, substantial clothing about the body, mufflers around the throat, and caps on their heads, with their arms bare to the elbows, and their legs in a similar condition nearly up to their knees. These extremities of a child, in which the blood is never of so high a temperature as it is in the adult, and in which it is of the greatest importance that it should be kept in a circulating medium, ought to be warmly clad. Every parent, and especially every mother, should see that the clothing of a child comes down to the wrists upon the arms, and to the feet upon the legs. It may be fashionable, it may be gratifying to the mother's vanity and to the father's pride, to see the clear skin of their children; but it is often death to the children. Every practicing physician could tell a tale upon this subject that should make the ears of all such indiscreet parents to tingle. A distinguished English physician, who had practiced forty years, stated that he believed he had known several thousands of children brought to an untimely grave by going with their arms and legs naked; and a distinguished physician who died some years since in Paris, declared, "I believe that during the twenty-six years I have practiced my profession in this city, twenty thousand children have been carried to the cemetries, a sacrifice to the absurd custom of exposing the arms naked." As lovers of children, we warn parents against adopting such a deleterious custom.

Many have wondered why so many children die. We wonder that any live. Soon after birth they are crammed with food, dosed with medicine, and steamed with bed-clothes and stoves; then they are sent out in cold weather, clothed warmly upon all parts of the body, except where the clothing is the most needed. Their legs, arms, and necks are bare, and thus are they exposed to a temperature that makes a strong man shudder, though gloved, overcoated, stockinged, and booted.

But we want to harden the children; yes, and soon you find they are gone.

Put the bulb of a thermometer in a baby's mouth, and the mercury will rise to 90°. Now carry the same to its little hand; if the arms be bare, and the evening cool, the mercury will sink to 40°. Of course all the blood which flows through those arms must fall to within 30° to 40° below the temperature of the heart. Need we say, when these currents of blood flow back into the chest, the child's vitality must be more or less compromised? And need we add that we ought not to be surprised at its frequent recurring affections of the tongue, throat, or stomach? Many children, with habitual cough and hoarseness, or choking with mucus, have been entirely or permanently relieved by simply keeping their arms and hands warm. Every observing and progressing physician has daily opportunity to witness the same cure.

Large Bed-Rooms.—Air-tight bed-rooms are among the evils of civilization. We do not mean to say they are quite air-tight, but they come so near to it that health is much impaired by sleeping in them. The poorest economy is to have large, airy parlors, and small, ill-ventilated bed-rooms; and yet nothing is more common. In the bed-room we spend from seven to eight consecutive hours—on an average, one-third part of our lives. The demand of air for respiration to a single person is seven cubic feet a minute. Suppose, now, our bed-room does not contain more than six hundred cubic feet; the supposition is perfectly natural, for we can find hundreds of such sleeping rooms around us.

A person goes into one of these rooms with the door closed. How long will this air last him? Even if we suppose the sleeping-room to contain one thousand cubic feet, it would last its occupant only two hours and a half.

What is he to breathe the other five or six hours? Carbonic acid gas: in other words, a deadly poison; and, what is still worse, as our beds are located nearer the floor than the ceiling of the room, and as this gas, from its greater density than air, falls to the bottom, the poor sleeper gets the larger share of the poison.

It may be asked, if this gas is so poisonous that a man will die from breathing it as soon as by putting his head under water, how is it that we live at all? To this very natural question, we reply, there are some mitigating circumstances. None of our sleeping-rooms are perfectly air-tight. This is one. Then, though people do not die from this cause, yet many of them are suffering with dizziness, headache, dyspepsia, and a host of kindred diseases induced by sleeping in such contracted and ill-ventilated rooms.

To augment the evil, frequently there are two or three persons, with one or two cats or dogs, and plants, together with an air-tight stove, or a pan of coals in the same room.

We were recently called to visit a person attacked with severe neuralgic pain, and general debility. The patient was found in the evening in a small room, with a gas-stove, and gas burning blue in it. The air, upon entering the room, was pestiferous, resembling sulphuretted hydrogen. The gas was bad; the air so foul, that one could not breathe comfortably in it. The question was asked, "Do you know that this air is poisonous?" The reply was, "I could not tell what makes my lamp (a kerosene lamp was on the table) burn so dimly. When the gas is lighted in the stove, the lamp begins to grow dim, and soon it nearly goes out."

The secret was out; there was not air enough to support combustion. Yet, in this room, the patient sat and slept. Was it any marvel that debility and neuralgia soon supervened? Was it not rather miraculous that life did not become extinct?

We have all heard of the Black Hole of Calcutta: it was a room eighteen feet square. In this room one hundred and forty-six persons were confined. Eleven hours after they were imprisoned, twenty-three only, of the one hundred and forty-six, came out alive, and they were in a highly putrid fever.

There are many black holes used for sleeping-rooms among us; the chief difference between them and the one at Calcutta is, they are not crammed quite so full of human beings. Remember that a bed-room should be lofty, large, and airy, and it will contribute much to your comfort and health.

By a recent analysis of air made by the New York Health Board, the following interesting facts were disclosed:

The proportion of carbonic acid gas ranges as high as seven parts in a thousand. When two parts of carbonic acid gas are present in any room, there is no feeling of closeness or vicious air, but that is the limit of healthful proportion. One hundred persons would in two hours vitiate one thousand feet of air to the dangerous proportion of one per cent. Every gas jet produces as much carbonic acid gas as five persons. In a public school, he found children inhaling an atmosphere in which there were from three to four parts of carbonic acid gas. In the theatres, he found the thermometer ranging from 85 to 95 degrees, and the observation was generally made in the centre of the pit. What would it be in the gallery, where the hot air from the whole house came rolling up? An examination of dust found on the cornices of theatres disclosed the fact that it was principally composed of vegetable matter, which, after being consumed by animals and passing from their bodies, was taken up by the feet of pedestrians and carried into the theatre, where, beyond a doubt, it was to an extent inhaled by the audience.—Good Health.

Fulton's First Steam Voyage.

The following reminiscence of Fulton's first steam voyage, and the reception of the passage money, was communicated to the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, by R. W. Haskins. Some years since, I formed a traveling acquaintance upon a steamboat on the Hudson River, with a gentleman who, on that occasion, related to me some incidents of the first voyage of Fulton to Albany, in his steamboat, the Clermont, which I never met with elsewhere. The gentleman's name I have now lost, but I urged him, at the time, to publish what he related, which, however, so far as I know, he has never done.

"I chanced," said my narrator, "to be at Albany on business when Fulton arrived there in his unheard-of craft, which everybody felt so much interest in seeing. Being ready to leave, and hearing that this craft was to return to New York, I repaired on board, and inquired for Mr. Fulton. I was referred to the cabin, and there found a plain, gentlemanly man wholly alone, and engaged in writing.

"Mr. Fulton, I presume."

"Yes, sir."

"Do you return to New York with this boat?"

"We shall try to get back, sir."

"Can I have a passage down?"

"You can take your chance with us, sir." I inquired the amount to be paid, and, after a moment's hesitation, a sum, I think, six dollars, was named. The amount, in coin, I laid in his open hand, and, with an eye fixed upon it, he remained so long motionless that I supposed there might be a miscount, and I said to him, "Is that right, sir?"

This roused him as from a kind of reverie, and as he looked up at me, a tear was trembling in his eye, and his voice faltered, as he said, "Excuse me, sir, but memory was busy as I contemplated this, the first pecuniary reward I have ever received for all my exertions in adapting steam to navigation. I would gladly commemorate the occasion over a bottle of wine with you, but really I am too poor, even for that, just now; yet I trust we may meet again, when this will not be so."

Some four years after this, when the Clermont had been greatly improved, and two new boats made, making Fulton's fleet three boats regularly plying between New York and Albany, I took passage in one of these for the latter city. The cabin in that day was below, and as I walked its length to and fro, I saw I was very closely observed by one I supposed a stranger. Soon, however, I recalled the features of Mr. Fulton; but without disclosing this I continued my walk and waited the result. At length, in passing his seat, our eyes met, when he sprang to his feet, and, eagerly seizing my hand, exclaimed, "I knew it must be you, for your features have never escaped me, and although I am still far from rich, yet I may venture that bottle now."

It was ordered, and during its discussion, Mr. F. ran rapidly, but vividly, over his experience of the world's coldness and sneers, and of the hopes, fears, disappointments, and difficulties that were scattered through the whole career of discovery, up to the very point of his final crowning triumph, at which he so fully felt he had at last arrived. "And in reviewing all these," said he, "I have again and again recalled the occasion and the incident of our first interview at Albany; and never have I done so without its renewing in my mind the vivid emotion it originally caused. That seemed, and still does seem, to me, the turning point in my destiny—the dividing line between light and darkness in my career upon earth; for it was the first actual recognition of my usefulness to my fellow-men."

What he Did, and Who he Was.

One beautiful summer day there was a great festival in the large park at Vienna. This park is called by the people the Prater. It is full of lovely trees, fine walks, and little rustic pleasure houses. At the time of which I am speaking it was almost covered with crowds of people. Among a number of organ-grinders, beggars, and girls who played on harps, there stood an old musician. He had once been a soldier, but his pension was not enough to live on. Still, he did not like to beg; therefore, on this particular festival day he took his violin, and played under a tree in the park. He had a faithful dog with him, which lay at his feet, and held a hat in his mouth, so that passers-by might cast coins into it.

On the day which I have just mentioned, the dog sat before him with the old hat. Many people went up and heard the musician playing; but they did not help him much. I wondered the people did not give him more, for he was truly a pitiable object. His face was covered with scars received in his country's battles, and he wore a long gray coat, which he had kept ever since he had been in the army. He even had his old sword by his side, for he would not walk in the streets without carrying his trusty friend with him.

He had only three fingers on his right hand, so that he held the bow with difficulty. A bullet had taken off the two others, and almost at the same time a cannon ball had taken off his leg. The last money he had had been spent in buying new strings for his violin, and he was now playing with all his strength the military air he had learned when a boy with his father. He looked sad enough, as he saw the multitudes pass by in their strength, and youth, and beauty; for he knew that if he did not obtain some money that evening he would have to go to bed supperless. His dog was better off, for he sometimes found a bone here and there to satisfy the cravings of hunger.

It was late in the afternoon, the musician's hopes were almost like the sun—they were both going down together—and he placed his violin down by his side, and leaned against the tree, the tears streaming down his cheeks. He thought none of that giddy crowd saw him, but he was mistaken. Not far off stood a gentleman in fine clothes, who had a kind heart; and when he saw that no one gave the tattered soldier anything, he was touched with sympathy. Going to the dog, and looking in the hat, he saw only two small copper coins in it. He then said, "My good friend, why do you not play longer?"

"Oh," replied the old man, "my dear sir, I cannot; my arm is so tired that I cannot hold the bow; besides, I have had no dinner, and I have little prospect of supper."

The stranger resolved to aid him as best he could, and giving him a piece of gold, said, "I will pay you if you will lend me your violin for an hour."

"Oh," said the musician, "this piece of money is worth more than half a dozen fiddles like mine."

"Never mind," said the stranger, "I only want to hire it an hour."

"Very well, you can do what you will," said the owner.

The gentleman took the fiddle and the bow in his hands, and then said, "Now you take the money and I will play. I am quite sure the people will give us something."

The first air had not been finished before the people, observing a strange sight, and hearing beautiful music, stopped a moment in curiosity. Every one saw that the fine-looking stranger was playing for the poor man; but none knew who he was. By-and by the people began to drop money into the hat, and the dog seemed delighted to receive so many pieces of gold for his master. The circle of hearers became larger and larger. Even the coachmen of the splendid carriages begged the people inside to stop and hear the music. Still the money increased. Gold, silver, and copper were thrown into the hat by old and young. The dog now began to growl. "What could be the matter?" One gentleman, as he dropped a large piece of money into the hat, had struck him on the nose, and he came very near letting all the money fall. But the hat soon became so heavy that he could not hold it any longer.

"Empty your hat, old man," said the people, "and we will fill it again for you."

He pulled out his handkerchief, and wrapped the money in it and put it in his violin-bag.

The stranger kept on playing, and the people cried out, "Bravo! bravo!" He played first one tune and then another. The children seemed carried away with delight. At last he played God Bless the Emperor Francis! All hats and caps flew off their heads, for the people loved their Emperor. The music came to an end; the hour was ended, and the performer handed back the violin to the old man.

"Thank you," said the gentleman. "May God bless you!" and he disappeared in the crowd.

"Who is he? Who is he?" said the people. "Where does he come from?"

A certain person sitting in one of the coaches said, "I know him. It is Alexander Boucher, the distinguished violinist. It is just like him. He saw the poor musician needed help, and he has helped him to good purpose."

The children then gave three cheers for Boucher, and put more money in the hat. Its owner went home that evening richer than he had ever been before. When he went to his bed, he folded his hands and prayed that "God might bless good Boucher," so that when he should come to be old, he too might have a friend to help him.

The Handwriting of Great Men.

The Duke of Wellington's writing was large and forcible with no attempt at decoration. During the last ten years of his life, however, his writing was indifferent, and often illegible. None but a compositor in a newspaper office, accustomed to all sorts of hieroglyphics, could possibly decipher the characters. A letter of his to a minister in Lord Derby's Cabinet has not to this day been unravelled. Nine out of every ten of the Duke's letters treasured by autograph hunters were written by his secretary, Mr. Greville, who wrote a hand very much like that of the Duke in his best days.

Lord Brougham's hand betrayed much unconquerable restlessness of impulse. His manuscript was a mass of hieroglyphics; and, according to Dr. Blenkinsop, in all Mr. Clowe's extensive printing establishment in London, there was only one man competent to grapple with it, and he often gave up in despair.

The bold and careless freedom of Byron's handwriting, compared to the elegant little prettiness of Tom Moore's, reveals very clearly the peculiar qualities of the two poets. The elegant precision of Mrs. Heman's penmanship, and the free but clear and intelligible abandon of L. E. Landon's, were equally characteristic of their mental peculiarities.

The Royal family of England have generally written good, clear, and free hands. William IV. wrote a remarkably plain and legible hand, and that of his brother George was showy and fluent. Queen Victoria has an elegant signature.

Locke says that the faster a man writes the slower others read what he has written. Napoleon could write fourteen pages in a minute; unfortunately, however, each page consisted of eight blots and a splatter. Some of his lines to Maria Louisia appear as if scattered over the paper by the explosion of a bombshell.

Horace Greeley's manuscript is very illegible. A wag once observed that the sentence, "Virtue is its own reward," written by Mr. Greeley, was rendered by the compositor into, "Washing with soap is wholly absurd." Hon. Thad. Stevens, the "Old Commoner," wrote an illegible hand. His signature was little more than the scrawled initials, with a short, zigzag line following each of them. We once had occasion to write to him, and received a letter in reply which we found it impossible to read, though professing to be apt at deciphering manuscripts. Two weeks afterwards we handed Mr. Stevens the letter. He could not read it himself until we gave him a clew by reminding him of the matter we had made inquiry about.

A president of one of our popular railroads once wrote to an old farmer, requesting him to remove some shedding along the line. The old farmer could not make it out, and believing it to be a free pass, used it as such for a year, none of the conductors presuming to dispute the construction he had put upon the scrawl.—From Oliver Optic's Magazine.

A Word to Fathers.

We have read a story of a little boy who, when he wanted a new suit of clothes, begged his mother to ask his father if he might have it. The mother suggested that the boy might ask for himself. "I would," said the boy, "but I don't feel well enough acquainted with him." There is a sharp reproof to that father in the reply of his son. Many a father keeps his children so at a distance from him, that they never feel confidentially acquainted with him. They feel that he is a sort of monarch in the family. They feel no familiarity with him. They fear him and respect him, and even love him some, for children can not help loving some, everybody about them, but they seldom get near enough to him to feel intimate with him. They seldom go to him with their little wants and trials. They approach him through the mother. They tell her everything. They have a highway to her heart on which they go in and out with perfect freedom. In this keeping-off-plan, fathers are to blame. Children should not be held off. Let them come near. Let them be as intimate with the father as mother. Let their little hearts be freely opened. It is wicked to freeze up the love fountains of little one's hearts. Fathers do them an injury by living with them as strangers. This drives many a child away from home for the sympathy his heart craves, and often into improper society. It nurses discontents and distrusts, which many a child does not out-grow in his life-time. Open your hearts and your arms, oh, fathers; be free with your children; ask for their wants and trials; play with them; be fathers to them truly, and then they will not need a mediator between themselves and you.

HOLY-LAND LECTURES.

To the Several Masonic Lodges in Illinois, or Elsewhere.

After an extensive tour through Syria, Palestine, and the Holy Land, where I spent several months making explorations interesting to all BIBLE AND MASONIC STUDENTS, I am now prepared to deliver one public lecture, and one Masonic and private. The entire community will be interested in and instructed by the public lecture.

My charge for the course is thirty dollars. Any Lodge that will make arrangements for the Lectures, in addition to the benefit derived from them, can make a clear and substantial gain, sufficient to buy a floor-carpet, a melodeon, a set of jewels, official clothing, or Lodge furniture, or a surplus in money.

Address the subscriber at Fulton, Whiteside county, for engagements or further information.

Poetry.

An Outlook of Forty-three Years.

When we look to former years, when youth and beauty joined in song,
And call to mind who then were here, we feel like one left all alone;
How happy those days, when life so young and joyous—though far away—
Not thinking cares would cross us, spending'our time lively and gay.

'Tis well its so in early life, lest anticipation mar our pleasure,
And spoiled of the bouyant part of early days, suffering withont measure;
But as years roll on, the mist removes, and we can see more clearly,
How changed the scene from our early dawn; the earth looks far more dreary.

Of all that happy throng I knew, that made time pass so pleasantly,
Their graves are wet with evening dew—their spirits are with the Heavenly;
And I, now at three score years and three, battling the world almost alone,
Only three remain besides my wife and I, of all that happy, happy throng.

Masons' Marks.

They're traced in lines on the Parthenon,
Inscribed by the subtle Greek,
And Roman legions have carved them on Walls, roads, and arches antique.
Long ere the Goth with a Vandal hand
Gave way to his envy dark,
The saviour Craft in many a land,
Had graven its Mason's mark

The Obelisks old, and the Pyramids,
Around which mystery clings,
The Hieroglyphs on the coffin lids,
Of weird Egyptian kings;
Carthage, Syria, Pompeii,
Buried, and strewn, and stark,
Have marble records that will not die.
Their primitive Mason marks.

Upon column, and frieze, and capital,
In the eyes of the chaste volute,
On Scotia's curves, or on Astragal,
Or in the Triglyph's channel acute;
Cut somewhere on the entablature,
And oft like a sudden spark
Flashing a light on a date obscure,
Shines many a Mason's mark.

These Craftsmen old had a genial whim
That nothing could e'er destroy;
With love of their art that naught could dim,
They toiled with a chronic joy;
Nothing was too complex to essay,
In aught they dared to embark;
They triumphed on many an Appian Way,
Where they've left their Mason mark.

Crossing the Alps like Hannibal,
Or skirting the Pyrenees,
On peak and plain, in crypt and cell,
On foot or on bandaged knees,
From Tiber to Danube, from Rhine to Seine,
They needed no letter of marque;
Their art was their passport to France and Spain,
And in Briton their Mason mark.

The monolith gray, and the Druid Chair,
The pillar tower of the Gael,
In Ogham occult their age they bear,
That time can only reveal.
Shine on, old monuments of the past,
Our beacons through ages dark,
In primal majesty still you'll last,
Endeared by each Mason's mark.

Language of Masonry.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

In a former article, it was shown that Masonry has become universal; that all over the globe, in all climes and countries, Masons are found. This could never have become a fact, but that it possessed and taught a universal language. If it were impossible for one brother to make himself known as such to another, wherever they happened to meet, the Fraternity would be circumscribed in the sphere of its operations, and confined to those portions of the earth where its language could be comprehended. The adoption of a universal language—one that can be easily taught and safely retained—that can be understood by every one who has mastered its alphabet, and is alike heeded by him, and by those who have traced its sacred words to their most recondite meanings, have become a necessity. Here is the cause of the universal language of Masonry. Necessity was its mother. To make this universal language a means of easy and effective fraternal communication, it must be secret and simple—sacredly cherished by the brotherhood, and so plain and easy of comprehension, "that the way-faring man, though a fool, need not err therein." Herein is the necessity of secrecy, that we may know a brother wherever we may meet him. If the language of Masonry was open to the understanding of every one who saw cause, or had an inclination to study it, it would cease to be valuable, and fail to accomplish the purpose for which it was invented. The care with which is guarded, preserves it in its purity, and assures its availability. When the wandering Mason grasps the hand of one whom he meets in a far off land, and feels the "mystic grip," his heart goes out to him as a brother. He feels that he has found a friend. He knows he may repose trust in him. If in trouble, he may command his assistance. If in prosperity, he knows he has met one who will rejoice with him. He knows that somewhere in the broad world, a body of respectable men, governed by sound moral principle, and actuated by charitable and noble impulses, has pronounced this stranger whom he now holds by the hand, as honest and trustworthy—as fit to be a member of the universal brotherhood.

But if the language of Masonry was common to all, there could none of this assurance be conveyed through the agency of the method of recognition. Secrecy is one inherent element of success, which cannot be secured without it. And we cannot see wherein lies the harm in this method of recognizing friends. We send by a friend a letter introducing him to another friend, with whom we wish him to become acquainted. By this means we further business matters, and even secure political advantages; and no one finds fault with this procedure. Even the most bitter opponents of secrecy do not object to it, but make use of it every day of their lives. The language of Masonry is a letter of introduction to the Fraternity wherever scattered abroad. He who can present the letter, and translate its language, shows that he is worthy, just as he who can present a recommendation over the autograph of a mutual friend, proves his standing, and there is no greater wrong in the one instance than the other. There is, however, this preference given to the letter written in Masonic language: the simple letter of introduction is written on the spur of the moment, and often contains anything but the real sentiments of its author; the Masonic document is given in the most solemn and formal manner, after a full investigation into the character of the bearer. It is not very plain, then, why Masonic language is so much more heinous when practically used, than the more common language of mankind.

But it is also necessary to constitute a universal language that it should be easily understood, without hard study, and remembered without difficulty. The founders of the Masonic system were peculiarly happy in this regard in establishing the language of the Order. Months are required of intense application, for an individual to master the mysteries of a foreign language, and then he frequently finds himself at a loss to understand the meaning of its terms. But a few hours will serve to instruct a man of ordinary intelligence and ability in the universal language, and so impress it upon his mind that he will respond to its silent but all-powerful demands when on the opposite side of the globe, or beyond a lapse of scores of years. He never forgets it. It is so natural and simple that it is spontaneously received, cherished, and remembered. He can read the recommendatory letter in the dark as well as in the light, and no lapse of time corrodes the parchment on which it is impressed, or fades the ink with which it is traced. Thus it is that the language of Masonry, simple and secret, in this place an important alliteration, has become universal.

The effect which this language has upon the well-being of mankind, is well nigh incalculable. We ask the reader to call to mind what has been shown to be the influence and objects of Masonry. He will recollect that it is eminently a harmonizing Institution; that its devotees go out from its thousands of lodges impressed with the idea of virtue, benevolence, and charity. He will recollect that all the ceremonies have a tendency to soften the affections, to refine the natures, and to expand the feelings of those who pass through them. These traits of character are implanted, or at least cultivated in hundreds of thousands of hearts, to such a degree as to make charity an active and pervading principle. Masonic language is the expression of this principle. Whenever a brother hears the language, or reads that unwritten and mysterious system of communication which the founders of Masonry adopted, all these teachings are brought to his mind, in refreshing significance, and the well-springs of generosity are at flood in his heart. He remembers the lessons of love and regard for God's creatures which he has been taught. He recollects the duties which he owes to that brother whose hand he clasps and who is able to pronounce the words of the sacred language.

Would it be natural that a recollection of these lessons—that a recurrence to these principles—that a re-opening of the sacred books of the law in which are inculcated peace and love, honesty and truth, would produce evil fruits in the conduct of those who read them? Every intelligent person knows this would not be the result. Every intelligent Mason knows that it is not. On the contrary, under the light of these facts, we may see how Masonry becomes the great harmonizer of the world. Masons, traveling from place to place, become missionaries of charity and ministers of good will. Having assumed the vows of love and charity, they go forth, whatever their business, or wherever their destination, conveying the principles conveyed in that language which has no word to inculcate wrong; which has no syllable to express hate; which could not frame to pronounce aright a sentence opposed to the welfare of mankind.

Such a language cannot be used for evil, since it can only enunciate good. Masonry has no language for cursing. Its vocabulary is fitted for Gerizim, rather than Ebal. It was cradled in wisdom, nursed by charity, and has been supported by the good in all ages and countries; and yet the language of a sacred writer, used on a similar occasion, is not misapplied when written in reference to Masonry: "Rather shall they which go by say, the blessing of the Lord be upon thee. We bless thee, in the name of the Lord." But we have this for our encouragement: Our mysterious language has survived a thousand times more potent enemies than those which now array themselves against it. In every encounter it has come off conqueror; and now, with a slight reservation, we may adopt the words of the Hebrew language, and say that "the earth is of one language and one speech," since Masonic language is universal.

District Grand Lodges.

To the Editor of the Trowel:

I have read with interest the arguments advanced by R. W. Bro. Lanphere, in favor of his amendments to the constitution, creating district Grand Lodges; they are such as I supposed would be, and are, to my mind, all that can be employed in favor of the scheme.

I fully agree with Bro. Lanphere in his opening remarks concerning the Grand Lodge of Illinois—the second grand lodge on the American continent, and the fourth in the world in point of numbers, and second, or fourth to none in point of intelligence, ability, and influence.

He states that the present number of lodges (chartered) is 610, and that the number will soon reach 1,000. At the rate of increase for the years 1868—69, it will take twelve years to reach No. 1,000; but inasmuch as the number of new lodges created has been steadily decreasing since 1867, it is fair to presume that twenty years will elapse before that number is reached. That the business of the Grand Lodge cannot be transacted in the short time now allowed, is true, but the remedy for that evil lies with the Grand Lodge itself, and can be easily avoided. The reason why the sessions of the Grand Lodge are confined to two, and at the most three days, is because of the fact that so many of the representatives are representatives of chapters and councils, and being obliged to attend to the interests of those bodies, are anxious to crowd the sessions of all three bodies into one week's time. This cannot be done if the Grand Lodge holds for more than three days. The remedy for this is plain - to hold sessions until the business is thoroughly transacted regardless of the meeting of any other grand body. Bro. Lanphere states that the committees of the Grand Lodge have become the Grand Lodge itself. I am much of the opinion that if the Grand Lodge should meet as is proposed by Bro. Lanphere, with only 120 members instead of 600, just as much work would be done in committee as is done now.

He then speaks of three different propositions to reduce the number of representatives, one of which is to deprive the Wardens of the right of sitting in Grand Lodge, the other is he plan now under consideration, which not only cuts off the Wardens, but also the Masters. Another is the division of the Grand Lodge, which being utterly out of the question, I will not discuss. Before proceeding further, it might be well to analyze the plan proposed at the last session of the Grand Lodge, which is familiarly termed the District Grand Lodge system.

The first proposition is to divide the State into fifteen districts, in each of which a grand lodge is to be established. This number Bro. Lanphere proposes to reduce to ten. The second proposition is that these district grand lodges are to be officered by a District Grand Master, Senior and Junior District Grand Wardens, Treasurer, Secretary, and the usual complement of appointed officers; that they are to be composed of the Masters and Wardens of all chartered lodges within the district concerned, all elected past district grand officers (excepting the Treasurer and Secretary), and all Past Masters, members of lodges in the district.

The fourth is that these district grand lodges shall enjoy and exercise all the powers now enjoyed and exercised by the Grand Lodge, with the exception of granting dispensations and chartering new lodges. In this proposition we find the following remarkable words—remarkable, when it is considered in what connection they are used, "provided further, that the Ancient Landmarks are preserved." The fifth provides that appeals may be taken from the decisions and acts of the district grand lodges, to the Grand Lodge.

The sixth provides that each district grand lodge shall elect five, together with the first three officers, making eight delegates from each district grand lodge. These five elected delegates may be either Masters or Past Masters.

The seventh proposition provides that the district grand lodges shall pay to the Grand Secretary, for the Grand Lodge, twenty cents for each affiliated Master Mason in the district. This is substantially the amendment creating district grand lodges. The second amendment born of the first, and which cannot be separated, when the whole is considered, provides that the Grand Lodge shall consist of officers as now elected and appointed, together with the delegates from the district grand lodges.

Under the amendment as presented, this would give one hundred and twenty-one members of the Grand Lodge. Under Bro. Lanphere's amended proposition as presented in his article in The Trowel, it would give one hundred and sixteen. Now as to the reasons assigned for the adoption of these amendments. First. That every member of a district grand lodge who desires it, can take part in its proceedings, and the body will thereby obtain the benefit of the wisdom and experience of each member. The same remark will hold good as to the present system—for the reason that no brother has as yet been denied the privilege of being heard in Grand Lodge.

Second. "It will obviate the necessity of building an expensive Grand Lodge hall."

I venture the assertion that if district grand lodges are created, measures to build ten Grand Lodge halls, instead of one, will be brought before the Craft, and that the expense involved will be five times as great as if one was built.

Third. "It will be a direct saving of $5,000 to $7,000 per year." That depends entirely upon circumstances. If the district grand lodges are allowed to fix their own mileage and per diem, and the dues from each lodge, the supposition is that it will be $5,000 to $7,000 the other way.

In considering this reason I will adopt Bro. Lanphere's supposition that the average would be 65 lodges to a district, and pre-supposing that the same mileage and per diem would be paid, as is now paid in Grand Lodge, we have the following:

District Grand Lodges	10
Number of Representatives	65
Number of grand officers	10
Total	75
Average amounts of mileage and per diem	$5.00
Amount	$375.00
Multiplied by 10	$3,750.00

This sum would be increased every year.

Ten Grand Secretaries at $500 each	$5,000.00
Printing proceedings of ten district grand lodges at $500 each	5,000.00
Incidental expenses of ten grand lodges at $300 each	3,000.00
Total	$16,750.00

And every succeeding year larger still.

One hundred and sixteen representatives and grand officers of Grand Lodge—mileage and per diem, at an average of $18	$2,088.00
Grand Secretary	2,000.00
Proceedings	1,500.00
Grand Treasurer	250.00
Incidental expenses	600.00
Total	$6,438.00
Add district grand lodges	$16,750.00
	$23,188.00

Which is more money than was expended during 1868—9, as shown by the Grand Treasurer's report, and I am confident that in these calculations the sum total stated is far less than the actual amount would be. The same fault found by Bro. Lanphere, with the present Grand Lodge, viz: that a very few brethren control it, (which I do not credit), would be found in each district grand lodge. Any one who has witnessed the sessions of our State Legislature, which compared with the Grand Lodge is a small body, could not fail to observe how affairs are conducted by but very few men, or to bring the matter nearer home, observe the Grand Chapter and Grand Commandery, which are quite small bodies, and are controlled by very few brethren. The Grand Council is the only grand body meeting in this State, which is free from this sort of influence. That the Grand Lodge is controlled by few brethren as compared with its numbers, if true, is the fault of the brethren themselves, and is not to be charged to the present system. When they meet to do the business of the Grand Lodge, untrammeled with meetings of any other grand body, then this influence will cease. I am of the opinion that district grand lodges will be engineered by fewer brethren than is any other grand body which now meets. Now for the objections to the amendments.

First. The expense will be greater than under the present system.

Second. Ten different and distinct styles of work.

Third. Ten different "rings," "cliques," and "slates," instead of two.

Fourth. At least one hundred and fifty appeal cases instead of fifteen or twenty.

Sixth. The unconstitutionality of the amendments, when viewed in the light of the Ancient Constitutions and Landmarks. The first objection, based upon fair figures I have shown. If after these many years of heart-burning and jealousy, the Grand Lodge has only just succeeded in declaring the work, how long will it take district grand lodges, with all their diversified interests, opinions, and standards, to undo the whole, and each practice its own way. Upon nothing has the Grand Lodge come down with a "harder stamp" than "rings," "cliques," and "slates." In each district grand lodge there would be an election ring, a delegate ring, the "next place of meeting" ring, a "work" ring, and in all human probability a "hall" ring.

Every brother in the least dissatisfied with the decision of the district grand lodge (and nine out of ten would be), would rush straight to the Grand Lodge with his papers, and the case would have to be gone over again. The Grand Lodge would have to settle jurisdictional quarrels between almost every district grand lodge, at least once a year.

But the greatest objection to this scheme is its unconstitutionality, when the Ancient Constitutions and Landmarks are taken into consideration. The twelfth General Regulation of the Ancient Constitutions, compiled in 1720, and published in 1723, reads in part as follows:

"The Grand Lodge consists of, and is formed by the Masters and Wardens of all the regular particular lodges upon Record, with the Grand Master at their head, and his Deputy on his left hand, and the Grand Wardens in the proper places." * *

The tenth Regulation reads as follows:

"The Majority of every particular Lodge, when congregated, shall have the privilege of giving instructions to their Master and Wardens, before the assembling of the Grand Lodge, at the three Quarterly Communications hereafter mentioned, and of the Annual Grand Lodge, too; because their Masters and Wardens are their Representatives, and are supposed to speak their mind."

A part of the 13th Regulation reads as follows:

"Here also the Master or the Wardens of each particular Lodge shall bring and produce a list of such Members as may have been made, or even admitted in their particular Lodges since the last communication of the Grand Lodge."

These Regulations were by the Grand Lodge of England in 1754, digested, amended in some minor parts, and arranged in Articles, and in this shape published. That portion of old Regulation twelve which I have quoted, was made Article I.

Regulation ten was made Article one of the title, "Of the Masters and Wardens of Particular Lodges." The italics in the quotations are my own.

M. W. Bro. Simons, than whom no better authority on Masonic jurisprudence lives, thus speaks concerning the prerogatives of the Master:

"11. In company with the Senior and Junior Wardens, to represent his Lodge at all communications of the Grand Lodge. While it must be admitted that this is a right which came into existence at the establishment of a Grand Lodge, after the revival of Masonry in 1717, it is none the less now, inalienable. We see in the Regulations of 1721 that it is provided, that 'the Grand Lodge consists of, and is formed by the Master and Wardens of all the regular particular Lodges upon record.' And, again, 'the majority of every particular Lodge, when congregated, shall have the privilege of giving instructions to their Master and Wardens, before the assembling of the Grand Lodge * * * because their Master and Wardens are their Representatives, and are supposed to speak their mind.' From this it follows, that without the representatives of the subordinate or particular lodges, there is no Grand Lodge; and as no legislation can be effected without their consent, it is not to be supposed they will disfranchise themselves. By the terms of his installation, and as the executive of the lodge will, the Master is especially charged with the duty of representation."—Principles of Masonic Jurisprudence, page 107.

Of the Wardens he thus says:

"2. The right to represent the Lodge in company with the Master, at all communications of the Grand Lodge. The same reasons apply here as in the case of the Master. They are a constituent part of the Grand Lodge, and it is their right as well as duty to be present at its communications."—Prin. Mas. Jur., page 119.

The twelfth charge to a Master at his installation reads as follows:

"Do you promise a regular attendance on the committees and communications of the Grand Lodge, on receiving proper notice, and to pay attention to all the duties of Masonry, on convenient occasions?"

The eleventh charge is as follows:

"Do you admit that it is not in the power of any man, or body of men, to make innovations in the body of Masonry."

Answer.—Invariably, "I DO."

These charges are Landmarks, and cannot be removed.

From the reading of the Ancient Constitutions, Bro. Simons' opinions on the same, and the charges to the Master elect, the matter may be summed up as follows:

1st. The Master and Wardens of every particular lodge are constituent members of the Grand Lodge.

2d. That every lodge is entitled to representation in the Grand Lodge, not through the medium of delegates elected by district grand lodges, but direct representation in the person of its Master and Wardens, in the Grand Lodge.

3d. That the proposed amendments to the constitution, cannot be adopted without removing the old landmarks, and a violation of the Ancient Constitutions, and consequently making an innovation in the body of Masonry.

Yours fraternally,

JOHN C. REYNOLDS.

N. B. Since the foregoing was written, the following dialogue passed between a brother, upon whom I inflicted the reading of this article, and myself.

Question.—"Has the Grand Lodge (of Illinois) at any time formally recognized the Ancient Constitutions?"

Answer.—"Yes! six hundred and forty-one separate and distinct times."

Q.—"How?"

A.—"Once; by authorizing their publication."

Q.—"When?"

A.—"On the 3d day of October, 1853, when it passed the following order: 'Ordered, That "Anderson's" Ancient Constitutions be published with the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge, for the use of the members thereof.'"

Q.—"That accounts for one, where do you find the remaining six hundred and forty?"

A.—"In granting six hundred and forty charters to lodges, in which occur the following words, 'And we do hereby require you, the said * * to take special care that all and every the said Brethren are or have been Regularly Made Masons, and that they do perform, and observe, and keep, all the rules and orders contained in the Book of Constitutions.'"

Croner Stone Normal University Southern Illinois--Carbondale.

At the session of the Legislature, in 1852, the act incorporating the Illinois Central Railroad Company was passed. The population of the State was 850,000, and mostly within a day's drive of our navigable waters, including the canal. Soon after the passage of the act, Lieut. Gov. Dougherty, Col. Brush, and several other gentlemen, purchased the present site of Carbondale, laid out a town, and determined that it should be free from the destructive influences which have blasted the prospects, or retarded the progress of so many places in Illinois. And their intention, so far, is history. No town in the State has a better record; none, none, a better or more intelligent population, and few, if any, have made a better material progress. The Normal College, at Normal—near Bloomington—proving to be inadequate to the demand, the Legislature provided for another to be located in Southern Illinois. The bid of Carbondale was accepted, and a short time since we were invited to lay the corner-stone, on the 17th of May ultimo.

Great preparations were made, and invitations were sent all over Southern Illinois. Starting on the 16th, we glided swiftly over the smooth and newly-laid track of the Toledo, Wabash & Western Road to Tolono, and taking the palatial new passenger cars of the Illinois Central, we found ourself in company with R. W. Bro. Rodney Ashley, of Kankakee, D. D. G. M., and Bro. Edward Cook, W. M., of Blaney Lodge No. 271, Chicago, with several others. A few hours brought us to Centralia, where we found R. W. Bro. J. A. Hawley, S. G. Warden, R. W. Bro. H. W. Hubbard, D. D. G. M., and a large number of the Centralia brethren.

At Effingham, Bro. Brown came aboard, and at Odin we fell in with Rev. Bro. Mahan, and met Breth. De Pew and Badolet.

At 12:30 (midnight), weary and exhausted, we arrived at Carbondale. Bro. Frank J. Chapman, captured Bro. Ashley and ourself, and with several others, we were made welcome to his mansion. In the days of our need, Bro. Chapman lived at Vienna. We had run THE TROWEL two years, at no profit. Our brethren had provided us with a press and type, freely. But at a time when all kinds of living were the very highest, and gold was from 175 to 250, our salary was cut down to $1,000, not one-third of what we then needed for a bare living in Springfield. It is needless to say, that in starting our press, and taking care of our family, our funds ran low. We asked a few friends to loan us a little money, that we might lay in a stock of paper. As we write this article, we find the following in a letter from Bro. J. F. Smith: "Brother Frank Chapman sends you $25, and says you can have more if you want it." By the light of day we found a palatial and beautiful residence, with elegant surroundings, and what was better, a charming hostess, with beautiful daughters and active sons around her. We were made welcome; and while Bro. Ashley chatted with the girls, we romped and played with the merry boys. A two-days' tarry made us sorry to part with our brother and his interesting family.

The 17th came on bright and fair. By ten o'clock the town was full of people, who came on horseback and in wagons, forty miles away. Trains came from the north, south and west, bringing thousands. The lodges at Cairo, Mound City, Jonesboro, Cobden, Dongola, Moscow, Villa Ridge, Vienna, Cedar Bluffs, Reynoldsburg, Crab Orchard, Lick Creek, Makanda, Marion, Benton, Shawneetown, Mt. Vernon, Bloomington, Chester, Kaskaskia, Murphysboro, De Soto, Du Quoin, Ashley, Richview, Irvington, Centralia, Odin, Salem, Iuka, Nashville, Lebanon, Olney, Ewington, Kankakee, Xenia, Flora, Louisville, Tamaroa, Raleigh, Greenville, Anna, Harrisburg, New Columbia, Lynchburg, Fairfield, McLeansboro, Middleton, Albion, Kinmundy, Sparta, Frankfort, and Andrew Jackson, Blaney, Central and Tyrian Lodges were represented. Cairo Commandery, Em. Sir Charles H. Foote, Commander, was out in force, and was largely reinforced from Centralia. The Chapters at Cairo, Mound City, Jonesboro, Vienna, Marion, Du Quoin, Kaskaskia, Sparta, Centralia, Salem, Nashville, and Odin, were also represented.

And not least among the celebrities present was P. G. Master Picket, now Postmaster at Paducah, Kentucky. In 1848, we entered Grand Lodge together, at Alton. In 1851, he was elected Grand Master, and we Grand Secretary. Subsequently he had charge of Rock Island; was colonel in the union army, and State Senator. He found many Masons, many companions in arms, and old associates in the Legislature, to give him a cordial welcome.

At nine o'clock A. M., the Templars, in their elegant costume, formed for escort duty. The Craft Universal and the Craft Royal, assembled at the city hall, and formed in procession, as follows:

J. M. Prickett, Grand Marshal.
J. S. Hartman, Adam Burkhardt, D. A. Ghent, Assistants.
Isaac D. Yocum, Tyler.
T. C. McKinney, J. M. Hamilton, Grand Deacons.
Entered Apprentices.
Fellow Crafts.
Master Masons.
Harry Duval, Alexander Keown, G. Stewards.
Secretaries of Lodges.
Treasurers of Lodges.
Junior Wardens of Lodges.
Senior Wardens of Lodges.
Masters of Lodges.
Past Masters of Lodges.
Royal Arch Masons.
J. M. Reichart, Jas. H. Campbell, Grand Deacons.
E. J. Palmer, Architect.
David Johnson, Builder.
J. M. Campbell, Contractor.
S. E. North, Grand Secretary.
M. L. Chase, Grand Treasurer.
H. J. Huggins, with the Holy Bible, Square and Compasses.
Rev. Isaac H. Elkin, Grand Chaplain.
Geo. E. Lounsbury, J. G. Warden.
Jas. A. Hawley, S. G. Warden.
Edward Cook, Deputy Grand Master.
Rodney Ashley, Junior Grand Deacon, and Thomas J. Prickett, Senior Grand Deacon.
Thomas J. Picket, Past Grand Master, and Harman G. Reynolds, Grand Master.
Frank J. Chapman, Grand Tyler.
Lieut. Gov. Dougherty, President of the day, in Masonic Sash, and Col. B. L. Wiley, General Marshal, in Masonic costume.

The general procession formed around the square, and thence proceeded to the grounds of the University. The wall of the northeast corner of the basement was ready, and the stone in position. A platform was erected upon which the grand officers, State Dignitaries, University Trustees, and college professors from abroad assembled. Near by, a choir and organ were ready. One hundred and twenty Templars stood watch and ward, and eleven hundred other Masons formed in quadruple columns on the east and north. Not less than ten thousand men, women and youth surrounded the foundations of one of the most magnificent structures every erected in this State. The walls are to be built of purple sandstone, which hardens by exposure, is elegant in appearance, easily worked, and near by.

The vast crowd having been called to order by the Grand Master, the choir sung—

"When earth's foundation first was laid."

The stone was then raised, the Grand Secretary read the list of articles to be deposited, the Grand Treasurer filled and closed the box, and placed it in the corner stone.

The Grand Chaplain offered appropriate prayer.

The band played a slow march while the stone was lowered and fixed in its place.

The architect presented the plumb, square, and level to the Grand Master, who tried the stone, and pronounced it to be well formed, true, and trusty.

The Deputy Grand Master then presented the golden vessel of wheat, the S. G. Warden the silver vessel of wine, and the J. G. Warden the silver vessel of oil, which were emptied by the Grand Master upon the stone, who then made the following invocation:

> "May the All-bounteous Author of nature bless the inhabitants of this place, with all the necessaries, conveniences and comforts of life; assist in the erection and completion of this building; protect the workmen against every accident; long preserve this structure from decay; and grant to all of us a supply of the corn of nourishment, the wine of refreshment and the oil of joy."

After striking the stone three times with the gavel, the Grand Master ascended the platform and the brethren gave the public grand honors of Masonry.

In a short address, the Grand Master handed back the working tools to the Architect, and the choir sang with wonderful effect—

"Let there be light, the Almighty spoke."

Past Grand Master Picket then made the address to the people and brethren, and the choir sang—

"Hail! hail! Masonry divine,"

The Grand Chaplain pronounced the benediction the procession re-formed, returned to a grove in the town, where food was provided in ample quantity for the entire assembly, on a field of tables. The people of the town—men, women and children—were effective in their efforts to keep order and administer to the appetites of all.

After the dinner, several thousands gathered under the trees, and were called to order by Gov. Dougherty, who made an excellent, well-timed opening address. He was followed by President Edwards, of Normal, who was instructive and amusing, distinctly heard, and loudly applauded. The closing address was by President Allen, of Lebanon, who made an eloquent appeal to the people in behalf of universal education. It was a good day, a good cause, a good concourse, and not a single case of disorder occurred to mar the harmony of the occasion.

Carbondale is the residence of Gen. Logan, and of many gentlemen of wealth and distinction; the air of business, of refinement and taste, are happily blended in all that appears. Stately dwellings, amid the original forest trees, mark every part of the city, and a hotel is being erected, with all the modern conveniences. The population is about 3,000; it will be doubled in less than two years. We cannot say more now, but we shall say more hereafter.

Tuscola--Dedication.

At the session of the Legislature in 1859, an act was passed forming the county of Douglas from the county of Coles. It lies on the Central Railroad, with Champaign on the north, Piatt and Moultrie on the west, Coles on the south, and Edgar on the east. It is well watered by branches of the Kaskaskia and Embarras rivers, and is as fine a body of land as can be found in Illinois. As soon as the act was approved by the people, the contest for the county seat commenced. Tuscola won. A dispensation for a lodge was granted in 1860 to James Davis and others for a lodge, which was chartered in October as Tuscola Lodge No. 332.

In January, 1862, we visited them as Grand Lecturer at large for the State. The town was small, streets in bad condition, and the war fever absorbed everything else.

But whatever else was in the way, Tuscola Lodge prospered until at length a Chapter and Council were formed.

Pursuant to invitation, we visited them on Tuesday evening, May 2d, for the purpose of dedicating their new hall. We found a town of full 2,500 people, with good hotels, several churches, a number of large business blocks, fine residences, and good public buildings. The streets are well made, sidewalks shaded, and in good condition, and everything wore an air of business, thrift and comfort. Bro. Davis served as Master until 1862; his successors are, E. Hudson 1862; himself 1863; C. Bye 1864; himself 1865; C. Bye 1866, 1867-8; W. H. Lamb 1869 and 1870.

The dispensation for Tuscola Chapter was granted in 1863, and chartered in 1864; Comp. E. Hudson, H. P., who continued to serve until December, 1865. Comp. Cornelius Bye then served until December, 1868, and was succeeded by Comp. D. Lamb, the present incumbent.

In January, 1866, a dispensation was granted for a Council of R. and S. Masters. Comp. E. Hudson, Master. It was chartered as number 21. Comp. D. Lamb succeeded Comp. Hudson in 1867, and is the present Master. The connections were such, that we were obliged to be there in advance of time. This enabled us to have a good view of the hall, and to observe the preparations. We found Bro. Epstein, of Champaign, with Mrs. Cannon, and several other ladies preparing for the musical exercises, while Breth. W. H. Lamb, D. Lamb, Bye, Dryer, Cannon, and several others, were devoting themselves entirely to preparation. A new block has recently been erected by one of the brethren,—Cannon,—about eighty feet front, by sixty deep, giving three stores, and a wide passage way to the second floor; on the second floor, in the rear, is a spacious hall; in front, offices. The Fraternity take the third floor, eighty by thirty-eight, which is divided up as follows: in the east is the hall 38 by 48; a tyler's room leading from the landing to the hall; an ante-room at the southeast corner of the hall for ordinary entrance; a small committee room between the two, and in the rear of these a large room communicating with the ante-rooms, and with the entrance-way, intended for reception, consultation, or ordinary festivals. The whole is convenient, well lighted and thoroughly ventilated.

The hall is handsomely finished, carpeted and frescoed. The walls are fifteen feet high, and the ceiling slightly arched. In the east is a fresco design of the beautiful virgin, with Old Time, the broken column, three steps, hour glass, Mosaic pavement and square, in panel; level in the west, plumb in the south, and the four cardinal virtues in the north.

The ceiling is divided into six panels—three east and three west, with a handsome center design in each. The northeast panel has the square, compasses, all-seeing eye, shovel, pick and crow. The northwest panel has the tie, gavel and rule, slipper and charcoal; the center panel west, has the beehive, charter, sun, book of constitutions and sword.

The southwest panel has the scythe, sword pointing to a naked heart, pot of incense and trowel. The southeast panel has the chisel and mallet, hour glass, Bible and moon. The center panel east has the setting maul, spade, ark, tetragrammaton, compasses, arc and sun in center.

At the hour set, the brethren of the lodge assembled at their hall, while the brethren from abroad, with a portion of the members at Tuscola, assembled at a neighboring hall. R. W. Bro. W. H. House, of Mattoon, D. D. G. M., officiated as Deputy, W. Bro. C. Bye as S. G. Warden, Bro. D. Lamb as J. G. Warden, R. W. Bro. A. T. Darrah, of Tolono, as G. Marshal. The other names of grand officers we have mislaid. Brethren Hess, Faulkner, McClain, and about thirty other brethren, were present from Champaign and Urbana, with as many more ladies. A large number of brethren were also present from Tolono, Arcola, Newman and Camargo. About one hundred brethren were in the procession, and upon arriving at the hall, we found the space literally crammed with ladies of the place and from abroad, leaving barely room for the procession and the services. When the Grand Master arrived at the east, the Grand Marshal proclaimed a halt, and the W. M. caused the public grand honors to be given; and they were given with fine scenic effect. The hall was then dedicated agreeably to form and usage. Bro. Epstein handled the organ admirably, and the singing was excellent. The whole affair went off without a mistake, or even a repetition. We never saw a handsomer dedication. It was hoped that either Bro. Bromwell or Gen. Black would have been present to address the assembly. There certainly never was a better opportunity, or one with more inspiration.

After the services, came a magnificent supper, served in the hall below. Masons and Masons' wives do know how to get up a supper. Full three hundred did it complete and joyous honor. The whole affair would have been a credit to veterans and veteran lodges. After supper, Bro. House, assisted by the experts of Tuscola Lodge, conferred, and Bro. Darrah gave the history of the third degree. It was good work.

Tuscola Lodge, No. 332, numbers more than one hundred members, and its make-up is from men in the strength of manhood, and of more youthful years. It has talent, energy, enterprise, and character. While there, we were the guest of Bro. D. Lamb and his beautiful companion, captured in Georgia, and happily domesticated in the charming town of Tuscola. When at Champaign, we were entranced by real visions of loveliness and beauty. We will not say, that the fair ladies of Tuscola excel them, but if there be any who can take the palm for grace and beauty from the ladies of Tuscola, we have not seen them. May their charms endure, their lives be lovely, and free from sorrow.

Murphysboro--Corner-Stone.

In June 1837, we found ourselves at Rock Island. The whole country was paralyzed by the suspension of specie payments. An extensive system of internal improvements had been devised and the wildest schemes of speculation brought the credit of the State and of its citizens to the verge of ruin. On the tenth of July, the legislature met upon the call of the governor to save the wreck and provide means to preserve the character of the State. Among the members were John Dougherty, now Lieut. Governor, W. P. Dunbar, whom we met a few days ago in fine health at Charleston; Jesse K. Dubois, who has since been auditor two terms, and now resides in this city; James Shields, who was auditor in 1841, afterwards Judge of the Supreme Court, Commissioner of the General Land Office, Brig. Gen., in the Mexican War, Senator from this State, and Senator from Minnesota,; Wm. J. Hankins, of Fayette, afterwards in the State Senate, and a member of the Constitutional Convention which has just adjourned; Newton Cloud, a noted Methodist Minister, Speaker of the House in 1846–7 and President of the Convention of 1847; Wm. W. Happy, a Baptist Minister at Jacksonville; Wm. A. Richardson, since in the State Senate, both Houses of Congress and Governor of Nebraska; Wm. McMurtry, since in the Senate and Lieut. Governor, for twenty years Grand Treasurer, and now in fine health at Henderson.

And of those now deceased who had or have since served in Congress are the names of Jas. Semple, Robert Smith, E. D. Baker, W. L. D. Ewing, and Abraham Lincoln, since twice elected President. Also Milton Carpenter, a Baptist preacher who died in the office of State Treasurer; Edwin B. Webb, a noted lawyer of Carmi; Dr. Daniel Turney, of Fairfield; (we are not quite sure that he is dead,) John J. Hardin, a colonel in the Mexican War; Wm. A. Minshall, of Schuyler, afterwards Circuit Judge. Messrs Dougherty, Dubois, Dunbar, Shields, Cloud, Happy, Richardson, and Mc Murtry are Masons; so were Messrs Smith, Ewing, Turney, and Hardin.

The county of Jackson was then the same in boundaries as now. Union on the south; Franklin, now Williamson, on the east; Perry and Randolph on the north, and the river on the west. The Big Muddy ran through it from east to west; its county seat was Brownsville, which soon gave place to Murphysboro, now a large town upon the banks of the Muddy river. It is now, as history runs, an ancient county seat. The same name which sheds so much luster upon Jackson county, was noted then among the people and in the legislature. Dr. John Logan, now deceased, was then representative, and so continued until the session of 1840–41, when we became acquainted with him; he was also a representative in 1847. We suppose that it was by his efforts that Murphysboro was made the county seat. An affable, pleasant gentleman, able to express himself clearly, who exerted great influence. His hotel building is still standing, kept by his widow, and one son, Gen. John A., who represents the whole State in Congress, resides in Carbondale. Another son resides near Murphysboro.

The Baptist Church are about to erect a creditable house in that town, and learning that we were to visit Carbondale, sent us an invitation to lay their corner-stone.

Accordingly, in company with Breth. Prickett, Spiller, North, Ennison, Chapman, and several others at Carbondale, Mahan of Centralia, Ashley of Kankakee, Chase of Makanda, Hundley of Marion, and many we do not call to mind, we went over on the railroad from Carbondale to Grand Tower, and after dining with Dr. Robinson, and his amiable companion, we repaired to the lodge-room, and the procession was officered as follows:

J. R. Sharp, Grand Tyler; Thos. Murray, Walter Alexander, Grand Stewards; E. B. Pellit, Architect; John Ford, Grand Secretary; M. L. Chase, Grand Treasurer; Rev. G. H. Butler, Grand Chaplain; Rev. I. S. Mahan, Grand Orator; J. B. Robinson, Bible Bearer; Frank J. Chapman, J. G. Warden; Thos. J. Prickett, S. G. Warden; Rodney Ashley, D. G. Master; Fern Wilson, J. G. Deacon; C. W. Schirmer, S. G. Deacon; H. G. Reynolds, Grand Master.

After passing around the public square, the procession repaired to the grounds, where the usual ceremonies were had; an eloquent prayer was offered by the Grand Chaplain; every officer did his duty well, and the choir gave us good music. The day was pleasant, and not far from one thousand orderly and attentive people were present

The lodge at Murphysboro is well officered, has a good hall, and is in a harmonious and prosperous condition.

After the services were over at the building, the procession repaired to the Methodist Church, where an able oration was delivered by Bro. Mahan, Grand Orator. The whole affair was pleasent, and Breth. Ashley and Prickett remained over night to participate in the work of conferring the degrees. This is the seat of the great Carbon Coal Company, which works about six hundred hands, and supports about three thousand people. It has large investments in iron works, boats, barges, and manufactures.

Back to Carbondale, a hurried meal and farewell at Bro. Chapman's, aboard the cars, a chat with Bro. Morgan, conductor, and Master of the council at Centralia—another with Col. Sprague of Duquoin, greetings at Centralia, a short ride with Bro. Hubbard, a captive of morpheus from Odin to Tolono, aboard the cars on the T. W. & W. R. W. and conveyed swiftly home.

Corner-Stone at Charleston.

Coles county is named for the second Governor of Illinois, who, we believe, is still living in honorable old age in Philadelphia. The name and the county are familiar and renowned. The county has always been ably represented in the legislature and in constitutional conventions, and has sent a representative to congress twelve years. In the days when U. F. Linder was in his intellectual prime, he and O. B. Ficklin measured swords in legal argument and eloquence with the ablest men in the State. In the later times, our own Bro. Bromwell has made his name historic and classic, while our still younger friend Parker is fast climbing his way to distinction. In 1860, Coles was shorn of a large part of her territory, to create the county of Douglas. Yet, for all this, it has over five hundred square miles, and had a population in 1865 of nearly 23,000. This is remarkable, when it is considered that the population in 1860 was a little over 14,000, and the combined population of Coles and Douglas was less than 10,000 in 1850. The Central Railroad runs through the eastern part of the county; and the Indianapolis & St. Louis runs through the county from east to west. We are informed that the machine shops of the latter road will be located at Mattoon, already a large place, and the crossing of both roads. Of this place we shall speak in a future number.

Charleston, the county seat, is handsomely located on the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railroad, and is claimed to have 4,500 people. It has one of the best hotels in Eastern Illinois, kept by Bro. French, formerly a resident here. Its wealth is solid, and its business large and lucrative. This town was long the seat of power, and the residence of the ablest and most eloquent men in Eastern Illinois. The shadows of other powers have grown up around her, but her glory is still undimmed.

Charleston Lodge No. 35, was granted a dispensation in 1844 by M. W. Bro. Lusk, but was not chartered until October, 1846. Its early Masters were Brethren Mills and Mitchell. Not having the records at hand, we commence with 1849. A. H. Chapman was then W. M.; Wm. B. Mills presided in 1850; Byrd Monroe in 1851; J. P. Waterhouse in 1852; Samuel Huffman in 1853; Geo. W. Teel in 1854, 1855, 1856, and 1857; H. P. H. Bromwell in 1858–9; Geo. W. Teel in 1860; H. P. H. Bromwell in 1861, 1862–3; Samuel Levinson in 1864–5; Geo. W. Teel in 1866; J. B. Gage in 1867; J. W. Tucker in 1868; Wm. E. Ginther in 1869; H. S. Parcels, the present incumbent. The lodge has had such names as Linder and Teel. The former is still living in Chicago; the latter, noted as a ritualist and workman, has departed this life.

Upon the invitation of the lodge, we left Springfield May 3d, with Bro. Bromwell, and after a pleasant ride over the new road to Pana, we were escorted by several brethren to the hotel, where we found comfort and rest.

The following day, large delegations came in from Kansas, Oakland, Westfield, Ashmore, Prairie City, Mattoon, Muddy Point, and Etna. The morning hours were spent at the lodge room, hearing statements and giving counsel and advice.

At two o'clock the procession was formed: First, music; second, the schools; third, benevolent societies; fourth, county and city authorities; fifth, school boards; sixth, the Masonic fraternity, numbering about two hundred.

R. W. Bro. Wm. H. House, D. D. G. M., Deputy; W. Bro. H. S. Parcels, S. G. W.; Bro. W. H. Fisher, J. G. W.; Col. Ricketts, G. Marshal; M. W. Bro. H. P. H. Bromwell, Grand Orator. The other offices were well filled, but we have not the names. The procession was very long, and upon reaching the ground, the grand officers took position upon the building, and the people gathered around to the number of 1,500 or 2,000. Charleston has two large school-houses, but room for more being needed, the city commenced the erection of a commodious structure to supply the further need, and to be used likewise for a high school. The services were of the usual character; after which, an oration was delivered by Past Grand Master Bromwell, which, in the face of high wind, was clear, distinct, eloquent, and strongly in support of education for all, without distinction, as the surest conservator of individual freedom, safety and morals. At the close, the brethren returned in order to the hall, where congratulations were exchanged, and all, well pleased, went their respective ways.

In this connection, it is proper to remark, that W. M. Bro. Parcels is about to cast his lot in some favorite place nearer the setting sun. Being apprised of this, Bro. Levinson, who is always ready for any good work, at the last communication—it being the last, probably, that Bro. Parcels would attend—gathered in a large attendance, and when the business was done, Bro. Levinson asked leave to address the S. W. Leave being granted, the brother said he had learned, with deep regret, in which all the brethren shared, that their W. M. was about to leave them, and take up his abode in the farther West. Much as they loved, and greatly as they were grieved to part with him, yet, he was sure that all wished him great success and happiness; and as a testimonial of abiding affection and parting regard, he proposed that they gather around the altar and sing Burns' farewell. The brethren gathered, one and all, and the old song was sung as it was never sang in Charleston before. When they came to the stanza—

> "And you, farewell, whose merits claim,"

Bro. Levinson broke the circle, and advancing to the East, gave the Master his right hand, and every brother did the same. We are told that they did make out to sing the verse through, but with some difficulty, for the Master was greatly moved, and the brethren sympathized in his feelings. How dear will the recollection of that scene be to Bro. Parcels! It will add to his joys and alleviate his sorrows.

Verily, Charleston Lodge "doeth all things well."

Carrollton Corner-Stone.

The best apparent testimony in favor of any people, are their church buildings and school houses. We have just laid a corner-stone for a common and high school building at Charleston. Less than two weeks after we laid the corner-stone of the Teachers' University, at Carbondale, and on the 24th of May last, we repeated a like service at Carrollton.

Greene county was formed in 1821, and on the first day of May, in the same year, the county seat was located at Carrollton. The town and the county are, therefore, nearly fifty years old. Although there are residents there now who lived near there then, yet children born in Carrollton, have grand children about them. Morgan, Scott, Cass, and Jersey, have been formed from the original contents of Greene county.

At the meeting of the Grand Lodge in 1847, Bro. Happy, of No. 3, presented the petition of Henry Dusenbury and others, and a charter was granted by the name and number of Fletcher No. 50.

In 1848, the lodge was represented by J. B. Samuel, M. D., W. M. The name was changed to Carrollton. From the organization of the lodge until the present time, Dr. Samuel has presided over the lodge fifteen years at various times. We gave a pretty full notice of this lodge last December, so that further remarks are not necessary now.

Having received an invitation to lay the corner-stone of the splendid new school house, E. E. Myers, of this city, architect, we repaired to Carrollton on the 24th of May. At Jacksonville, about thirty-five Templars came on the cars, and brethren came aboard at every station. Early in the day, a large number arrived by the southern train, and the brethren came in by their own conveyances from every direction.

At noon, the Templars assembled at Masonic Hall, and the Master Masons and Royal Arch Companions assembled at a large hall near by.

While arranging for the main procession, the Templars escorted the several schools to the ground, and upon returning to the public square, the procession proper was formed as follows:

Col. J. B. Nulton, Grand Marshal.
N. J. Andrews, Assistant.
Frank Boehnis' Silver Band, St. Louis.
Hugh de Payens' Commandery, K. T., Carrollton, Em. Sir H. C. Withers, Commander, Escort.
Hospitaller Commandery, K. T., Jacksonville, Em. Sir P. G. Gillette, Commander, Guard of Honor.
J. C. White (50), Tyler with drawn sword.
W. L. Kinkead (129), J. W. Waller (129), Deacons with staves.
John Bowman (50), J. T. Camren (50), Bearers of Standards of Faith and Hope.
W. Cocke (50), Tyler with drawn sword.
Master Masons—two and two.
From Fayette (107), Tyler with drawn sword.
Loyd S. Hansel (394), Jos. M. Page (394), Deacons with staves.
Pleasant Driver (50), H. C. Seiverling (50), Bearers of Standards Charity and Wisdom.
Secretaries of Lodges—two and two.
Treasurers of Lodges—two and two.
Junior Wardens of Lodges with pillars—two and two.
Senior Wardens of Lodges with pillars—two and two.
Masters of Lodges with gavels—two and two.
Past Masters of Lodges—two and two.
Royal Arch Masons—by threes.
Officers of Chapters—by threes.
S. A. Vedder (50), Silas Carrico (50), Bearers of Standards Strength and Beauty.
F. M. Fishback (50), Grand Tyler.
T. W. Vigus (50), John Hardtner (50), Grand Stewards with rods.
C. E. Miner (394), Grand Architect.
Dr. C. Armstrong (50), Grand Secretary.
S. M. Titus (394), Grand Treasurer.
Herman Godrich (50), bearing Bible, square and compass.
C. T. Bannister (197), Peter Fenity (197), Deacons with staves.
Rev. E. L. Craig (50), Rev. M. Short (3), Grand Chaplains.
D. D. Clark (80), N. H. Rose (80), Deacons with staves.
Hon. D. M. Woodson, J. G. Warden.
Hon. J. W. English, S. G. Warden.
James B. Samuel, M. D., Dep. G. M.
J. S. Daniels (894), J. G. Marston (394), Tylers with drawn swords.
Edwin Woolley (129), S. G. Deacon.
S. G. Gardner (197), J. G. Deacon.
Grand Master.

The Templars numbered abount sixty; the brethren in procession numbered from 300 to 350. Representations were present from Whitehall, Fayette, Greenfield, Kane, Jerseyville, Manchester, Murrayville and Alton. The procession marched through several streets which were thronged by both sexes of all ages from town and country. Full six hundred children, with their teachers, were in front of the building. More than three thousand people surrounded it. The day was bright, and a previous rain had cooled the air, so that none were oppressed with heat or dust. Upon arriving on the grounds, the Fraternity formed a square, the Templars took a prominent position, and the Grand Lodge assembled upon the platform. The services were of the usual character; prayer by Rev. Bro. Short, of Jacksonville; music by the children and teachers; also by the band; with the Lord's Prayer by Rev. Bro. E. L. Craig, and the benediction by Rev. Bro. Perry. The oration, for its ability and interest, stands out broadly from efforts of the kind generally. It was delivered by Judge Woodson, and we shall lay it by to draw from when our columns are not so crowded. The most ample provision was made for all the visitors and guests, for breakfast, dinner, and supper. It seemed as if Carrollton could not do enough. We were the guest of Judge Woodson and his hospitable lady; their children are all married, and now home is made charming by the presence of a fine grandson. How beautiful is the home where love is queen, intelligence is king, and where such fairies as amity, courtesy, plenty and hospitality dwell! Farewell greetings, hand-shakings, congratulations, and in every direction went brothers, companions, Templars and friends.

W. Bro. Joseph Soper

Is now in his seventh year of service as Master of Galva Lodge No. 243. In December last, his brethren presented him a heavy, highly polished, gold-headed cane. The engravings are beautiful, and the recipient is worthy.

Brethren

Dr. Wm. G. Sterling and Notley Scott, subscribers for The Trowel, were put down to Ipava by mistake. Will some brother inform us where they belong?

Representative Grand Lodge of England.

Hon. and R. W. Bro. Orlin H. Miner, Grand Secretary, some time since received a parchment commission from the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of England, with the seal upon the upper left hand corner, and the signature of the Earl of Zetland, Grand Master. The same was attested by the Dep. G. M., the Earl de Grey and Ripon, Grand Master elect, and by the Grand Secretary. This commission constitutes his Excellency, John M. Palmer, Governor of the State of Illinois, representative of the Grand Lodge of England, near the Grand Lodge of Illinois. In company with the Grand Master, Gen. Lippencott, Auditor; Hon. H. P. H. Bromwell, P. G. M.; Hon. N. Bateman, P. G. Orator; Gen. Bates, State Treasurer; J. C. Reynolds, D. G. Secretary, and Col. Harlan, the Private Secretary of the Governor, Bro. Miner presented the commission to his Excellency in well chosen words of congratulation and compliment, and requested acceptance of the same. To this the Governor replied, as is his wont with sentiments worthy the brethren of both jurisdictions, and said that he would cheerfully accept the commission and endeavor to discharge the important trust committed to his keeping, and to extend the amicable relations now existing between the two grand bodies. He mentioned the long and able service of the Earl of Zetland, as a service, in all its results, unexampled in modern Masonic history, and expressed his sincere gratification that the mantle of the present M. W. Grand Master was to fall upon the shoulders of so zealous a Mason and so distinguished a statesman as the R. W. Bro. the Earl de Grey and Ripon.

Maj. D. D. Shumway.

At the session of the Legislature in 1846–7, we first became acquainted with Bro. Shumway, who was a member of the House from Christian county. By his address and skill, he secured a representative in the apportionment. At the Constitutional Convention of 1847, he appeared from Christian county with his father-in-law, Hon. Hiram Rountree from Montgomery. He was an efficient and studious member, and an accomplished gentleman. At that convention we were Assistant Secretary. At the first session under the present Constitution, Hon. Mr. Rountree was returned to the Senate, Bro. Shumway was elected Asst. Sec., and we were elected Asst. Clerk of the House. This brought us into intimate relations—relations of friendship which lasted undimmed until his death. In 1857, he was elected county judge, and he exerted himself in every possible way to advance the material interests of his county.

Mound Lodge received its dispensation in 1851, and was chartered in October, 1852, P. G. Master Gorin, Master, and Bro. Shumway, Secretary. The lodge elected him S. W. in December, 1853–4; Sen. Deacon in 1855–6; Master in 1858, 1859, and 1860; 1862, 1863, 1864–5; perhaps a year or two more. Upon the formation of the chapter, he was H. P., and so continued until his death. At about the age of fifty, on May 8, he suddenly departed this life, leaving an amiable widow and family in easy circumstances. One son is already a Mason. Past Grand Master Lavely conducted the Masonic ceremonies, and Rev. Bro. W. S. Prentice, P. E., preached the sermon.

Infringement of the Ballot.

The constitution of Illinois declares "that a frequent recurrence to the fundamental principles of civil government is absolutely necessary to preserve the blessings of liberty."

So too, "a frequent recurrence" to the principles of our Ancient Constitutions, and to the unchangeable landmarks, very frequently, we have found to be "necessary to preserve" a decent respect for binding laws—laws right in themselves, and which every brother is under the most solemn obligation not only to obey, but to support and maintain. We have learned, by painful experience, to be patient; to give "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little."

As we have done before so now we do again, recur to fundamental principles.

Article VI. Old Regulations 1721. "But no man can be entered a brother in any particular lodge, or admitted a member thereof, without the unanimous consent of all the members of the lodge then present, when the candidate is proposed, and when their consent is formally asked by the Master. * * * Nor is this inherent privilege subject to a dispensation; because the members of a particular lodge are the best judges of it; and because, if a turbulent member should be imposed on them, it might spoil their harmony, or hinder the freedom of their communication, or even break and disperse the lodge, which ought to be avoided by all true and faithful."

Section 48, By-Laws of the Grand Lodge of Illinois provides that in balloting for candidates "all members of the lodge present shall vote," and then quotes a portion of the regulation given above, and adds:—"nor shall a member be excused from the performance of this important duty, except by the unanimous consent of all the members present. No Mason shall be required by the Master or lodge to give his reasons for the vote which he has deposited, for the very secrecy of the ballot is intended to secure the independence and irresponsibility of the voter." This language is plain. And in order that every reader may fully comprehend the matter, instead of amplifying, we will reduce our thoughts to a few points.

1. Each member of a lodge present must vote.

2. The duty to vote implies an honest, conscientious ballot.

3. Each brother stands alone, independent, irresponsible.

4. When the vote is unanimous, then there is no difference; when not unanimous, then silence is as necessary as secrecy, for irresponsibility implies freedom from censure, question or remark.

5. Every brother who casts a ballot, by that act, agrees to abide the result of the ballot. If censures were to follow the ballot, ten times more men deserve censure for casting white balls than for casting black ones.

6. If it be true, that applicants are rejected wrongfully, so is it equally true, that candidates are elected wrongfully, and ten to one. It is not true that candidates elected wrongfully are voted for improperly by most of those who vote for them, but some who vote for them know them to be unworthy.

7. The brother knowing a candidate to be unworthy, concealing that unworthiness, and then voting for the candidate, inflicts a ten-fold greater injury upon his lodge than he who rejects a worthy man. In the latter case the lodge is no worse off; in the other, the injury is irreparable.

The Constitutional Convention--New Constitution.

We have designedly avoided mention of the body lately assembled in this city for the purpose of amending our present State Constitution. We did not wish in any sense to influence its action in or out of the body; or, in speaking of the Masons therein, to seem to draw invidious distinctions against others. The first Constitutional Convention held in this State, convened at Kaskaskia, in the summer of 1818, and adjourned on the 26th day of August. Jesse B. Thomas, afterwards United States Senator, was President. The only counties in the Territory were—Bond, Crawford, Edwards, Franklin, Gallatin, Jackson, Johnson, Madison, Monroe, Pope, Randolph, St. Clair, Washington, and White. The entire population did not exceed 32,000. St. Clair, Gallatin and Madison had three members each; Washington county had one; all the others, two each. William C. Greenup, so long Secretary of the first lodge in the State, was Secretary. James Lemen, Jr., a Baptist preacher, was a member from St. Clair, as was also the President. Elias Kent Kane, afterwards a distinguished Senator in Congress, was from Randolph. Adolphus F. Hubbard, elected Lieut. Governor in 1822, represented Gallatin. At that early day, a majority of its members were Freemasons. Under the Constitution then formed, the State progressed in spite of Indian wars, bank panics, internal improvement failures, and a heavy State debt, until June, 1847, when the population was about 700,000. The Territory was then divided into one hundred counties, including Highland, which is now merged into Adams.

The second Convention, which met on the first Monday in June, 1847, consisted of one hundred and sixty-two members. Newton Cloud, of Morgan county, a distinguished Methodist preacher, was President. He had for a long time been a member of the Legislature, and was then Speaker of the House. Zadok Casey had been Lieut. Governor, and member of Congress ten years; A. M. Jenkins had been Lieut. Governor; John Dement and John D. Whiteside had been State Treasurers; N. W. Edwards had been Attorney General; Justin Harlan, Stephen T. Logan, and William Thomas had been Circuit Judges; Samuel D. Lockwood and Walter B. Scates were Justices of the Supreme Court. Willis Allen, Thompson Campbell, A. C. Harding, James Knox, Jesse O. Norton and Anthony Thornton, have since been in Congress; Willis Allen, O. H. Constable, David Davis, J. Harlan, Hugh Henderson, Alfred Kitchell, W. A. Minshall, Onslow Peters, O. C. Pratt, H. M. Wead and David M. Woodson, have been Circuit Judges. The latter gentleman was also a short time Judge of the Supreme Court, to fill a balance of the term of Judge Lockwood, resigned. Judge Davis was transferred from the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court of the United States. David L. Gregg was afterwards Secretary of State, and Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands. William R. Archer, John Dement, S. Snowden Hayes, and Robert J. Cross, were members of the recent Convention. All of the members had before, or have since, held stations of responsibility, or were noted members of the professions or industrial avocations, and two are members of the present Legislature. Henry W. Moore, of Gallatin, was Secretary, and we, then of Rock Island, Assistant. The only recess was for two days to attend the funeral of the gallant John J. Hardin.

Of the other members, Archibald Williams was afterwards United States District Attorney, and District Judge, of Kansas. Stephen A. Hurlburt was Major General in the late war, and is now minister to Bogata. John M. Palmer has also been Corps Commander, and is now Governor, and in the prime of life. Cyrus Edwards, one of the oldest members, now lives at Upper Alton, and must be ninety years old. Thirty-five, we know are dead, and we presume the number can be doubled. Sixty-eight were then, or have since become, Freemasons; most of them Masters of lodges, two Grand Orators and one Deputy Grand Master. The Convention of 1847, was a body of earnest, able, talented men. They closed their labors on the thirty-first of August, and the adoption of the Constitution by the people, together with the two-mill clause, threw Illinois into the line of foremost States. Twenty-two years have passed away, and now it has a capital of nearly $175,000,000 invested in nearly 4,000 miles of railway. Its common, high, normal and collegiate schools, are the wonder of other States, and the pride of our own. Not less than 2,700,000 people inhabit our teritory; valuable mines are constantly unearthed; our church structures are creditable, and our farmers are vieing with the cities in the elegance and comfort of their habitations. But our judicial system is sadly at fault; corruption needs the knife; corporate power demands restraint, and the austerity and presumption of wealth require stern rules to compel subordination to the public good.

Resolved on a new Convention, the people elected delegates last October, and parties, infused with a strong, conservative element, were nearly equally balanced, and utterly unable to create a Constitution in the interest of any party. Lawrence S. Church, of McHenry, was the recognized leader of the republican party, and James C. Allen of the democratic. An abler body of men, in proportion to its numbers, never met in any State body. The members who were of or over the age of sixty, are the following: John Abbott, of Scott, 67; Robert J. Cross, of Winnebago, 66; John Dement, of Lee, 65; O. H. Browning, of Adams, 63; James N. Sharpe, of Wabash, 60. Mr. Browning, in addition to a long and leading practice at the bar at home, and in all the higher courts, has served in Congress and as a cabinet officer. Always a handsome man, and none less so now, he was emphatically the father, critic, and scholar of the Convention; equal to any in talent, and the courtliest man in the body. James C. Allen is a very able man and courteous gentleman, and has served four terms in Congress. Of Mr. Dement we have spoken.

Twenty-one members were between fifty and sixty years of age. Thirty-two were between forty and fifty; twenty-four between thirty and forty; and George R. Wendling, twenty-five, and James P. Robinson, twenty-three, were the only members less than thirty years old. The Convention was a happy blending of maturity and strength—talent and judgment. There were not less than forty Freemasons in the body. We have sat in lodge with the following: William J. Allen, H. P. H. Bromwell, Harvey P. Buxton, Daniel Cameron, Lawrence S. Church, Hiram Cody, Alfred M. Craig, Samuel P. Cummings, James W. English, E. M. Haines, Robert P. Hanna, Robert A. King, Jas. McCoy, C. E. McDowell, Lewis W. Ross, John Scholfield, O. C. Skinner, Thomas J. Turner, H. W. Wells, Charles Wheaton and O. H. Wright. There were quite as many Odd-Fellows as Masons. Of the foregoing names, William J. Allen, has served in the Legislature, as United State District Attorney, Circuit Judge and member of Congress. He is the architect of the bill of rights. H. P. H. Bromwell has served two terms in Congress, and is a Past Grand Master. As a Masonic Orator, he has no superior living. Harvey P. Buxton is a self-made man, a keen, far-seeing, able lawyer, and a Past Master of 79. Gen. Daniel Cameron, a talented Christian gentleman, was the first publisher of the Chicago Times and a Colonel in the late war. His address, delivered in one of the churches in this city, upon immortality, stamps him at once a man of study, logic, and power. Col. Lawrence S. Church, the republican leader, has had large legislative and legal experience, and in acumen, discernment and statement, was never excelled in any deliberative body in Illinois; unyielding and firm, yet always in good temper, fair, courteous and friendly. Hiram H. Cody has filled several local offices acceptably. He is an able lawyer, and an upright, honorable man. He filled the difficult position of chairman of the Committee of Revision and Adjustment, and discharged his duty well.

Alfred M. Craig has been State's Attorney and County Judge. He has the largest practice of any man in his county, and is also a large farmer. He was chairman of the Committee on Counties. Samuel P. Cummings was in the Legislature of 1861, and was subsequently major in the army. He is a practical, clear-headed man, and the very soul of honor. James W. English is unambitious, except to do what he has to do well and ably. He has gained a name as a lawyer and as a citizen. He is a Past Master of No. 50, and a Past High Priest. E. M. Haines is famous as a lawyer, and in particular in the matter of forms and precedents. He has served several terms in the Legislature, and never rode behind. He is the best legislative strategist we ever knew, and the antics and objurgations of the men he has unhorsed, were amusing to see and hear. He also is a P. M. of two lodges, and P. G. J. Warden. Robert P. Hanna and Robert A. King, we believe, have both served in the Legislature. We should like to be able to speak more fully from knowledge of both. James McCoy we knew as an attorney as long since as 1842. We were in the same circuit. He has stuck to Fulton City, and is rich, respected, and influential. We have moved some, and are poor. C. E. McDowell is one of the able young lawyers of southeast Illinois. He will be heard from in the future. Lewis W. Ross is one of the richest and one of the ablest men in the State. He has never been estimated for what he really is. His reserved intellectual power requires able competition to draw it out. When drawn out, and he is thoroughly roused, common men had better get out of the way. In addition to his legislative experience, he has served three terms in Congress. His real abilities lie hidden beneath a vein of bubbling wit. When engaged in serious argument, that entirely disappears.

John Scholfield was in the Legislature of 1861. He is a favorite with everybody, and is the most successful lawyer in the Wabash country. Onias C. Skinner has been State's Attorney, member of the Legislature, and Justice of the Supreme Court. He ranks high among the lawyers in the State. He was chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Col. Thos. J. Turner started in life a poor, unfriended boy. He made his way by manual labor; has won distinction as a lawyer; served his county in various capacities; been State's Attorney, Speaker in the Legislature, and member of Congress; was colonel in the late war, and was distinguished as a Grand Master. H. W. Wells is one of the younger, but one of the ablest men in the Convention. He was remarkable for his out-spoken independence, his rare gifts, great discriminating power, and dogged determination to have a good Constitution. Charles Wheaton brought to the Convention a character for high tone, superior talents, inflexible integrity, and indomitable perseverance, and he carried them home again. He made his mark in the Convention, and the people ought to mark such men as Charles Wheaton for stations demanding able and incorruptible men. Lastly O. H. Wright represented Mason, and was always at his post, watchful, able, and earnest in defending his views, and he represented his people well.

And here, where is the evidence of collusion among these able Masons? The strongest contests in argument, and the fiercest conflicts in opinion, as is everywhere else the case, were between and among these very Masons. The man who would seriously assert that Masonry affected a single word or act, except to repress bitterness and enforce courtesy, would be deemed fit only for the insane asylum!

The separate clauses submitted for separate votes require no remark from us. But as a citizen of Illinois, for ourself alone, we cannot avoid expressing our opinion, that the proposed new Constitution, with some defects, inseparable from all human efforts, is incomparably superior to our present one, and is imperiously demanded to give us a better judiciary, to stifle corruption, destroy class legislation, give a higher, broader, and healther tone to education, ensure more responsibility in stations of public trust, reduce oppressive taxation, enforce a due economy in all public business, compel corporations to respect the rights of the State and of individuals, and to guard the people against the selfish and unfeeling power of an aristocracy of wealth.

Barlow--Dundee.

Rev. J. L. Barlow late pastor of the Baptist church at Dundee, in the anti-Masonic Cynosure of May 3d, avows that he will never baptize a Mason, and that he declined to do so at Dundee, where the church had accepted a candidate upon his profession of faith. In Baptist and Congregational churches, the voice of one is as good as another. In this matter, Mr. Barlow violated a fundamental doctrine of his denomination, which is that the church is the judge, and set up his own judgment in the face of the church.

As a man he has a right to be an anti-Mason; as a citizen it is his privilege to use his influence against Freemasonry; as a Christian minister he has the right in every proper way to bear testimony against it, observing the line of truth, but as a Baptist minister, it was his duty to accept the judgment of the church, especially under the circumstances; the church having resolved that the young Freemason was a suitable subject for baptism, Mr. Barlow resigns. If he was conscientious, he did right even then; but when he makes use of this young man, who knows what Masonry is and what it teaches; who was impelled by his feelings and views to apply for admission to Mr. Barlow's church—when, we say, he makes use of him and the judgment of the church to show himself a persecuted man, nobody will see it, but those who want to.

He makes no pretence that any Masonic influence was used to secure the admission of the applicant; that there were any Masons in the church; or, that any Masonic influence was used in his favor.

He says nothing against him, and nothing against Masons or Masonic influence in Dundee. It simply amounts to this: the candidate refused to withdraw from Masonry at his request; he made application for admission to the church as he had a right to do; the church accepted him; Mr. Barlow treated the matter as a decision against himself, or as against his views, and resigned. So far, everything was voluntary. The church was an independent body, and in no spirit of hostility to the pastor, accepted the candidate. For this independent action, Mr. Barlow now sets up the role of the Martyr! The wrong in Mr. Barlow was in not avowing his sentiments when he became pastor of the church. The judgment of the church in accepting the candidate after his refusal to renounce, is, that they have no evidence against the Institution.

Thus far, nothing appears to affect the character of Mr. Barlow. A man may have wrong views of duty and principle, and still be an honest, upright, well-meaning man. But if he deliberately states what is untrue, it requires a great stretch of charity to look upon him in a favorable light. In his communication Mr. Barlow says:

"I have found from Masonic books, as well as from the vocal utterances of Masons, that Masonry claims to be a religion! They claim for it a divine origin—that its principles are divine, and that he who lives those principles is sure of salvation."

What Mr. Barlow may have heard Masons say, we cannot tell; but he will not deny that every good principle is of divine origin; if Masonic principles are good, they are from a divine source. There are vast multitudes who believe that salvation is sure to all, while more still believe that the good deeds and the pure lives of men are their passports to eternal life. Such men, like Mr. Barlow, speak their minds, and if they happen to be Masons, they speak as they think. But the idea that Masons have a religion which they propagate as such, is contradicted by the acts snd lives of Masons themselves. The very fact that this young man applied for admission to a Baptist church contradicts Mr. Barlow's theory. We very much doubt, however, whether Mr. Barlow can name a single Mason who ever made such a statement. Be that as it may, the contrary is the rule.

We challenge Mr. Barlow to produce a single Masonic book, approved by any Masonic authority, which has any such statement as that above quoted from him. When Mr. Barlow asserts that Masons have a religion, we hope that he does not intend say to that they should have no religion; in that Masons are required to believe in God, and in the performance of duties they owe to God and man, they have a religion; and so far they do, or should, agree. If these views were sufficient to salvation, why did the young man profess conversion and apply for membership in a Baptist church? This very fact refutes Mr. Barlow's statement, for if the candidate believed of Masonry what the pastor alleges, he had no need to trouble him, and cause his resignation. The facts and the statement don't agree. The fact is indisputable upon Mr. Barlow's own statement; his argument is in the face of it.

We trust that Mr. Barlow will pardon the following statement: personally, or by reputation, we know the religious sentiments of eleven Masonic editors in the United States; two are Methodist ministers, two are Episcopalian ministers, two others are Episcopalians, two others are Methodists, one is a Presbyterian, one is a Universalist minister, and another is a Hebrew. Others we know to be believers in the Christian religion.

If any institution should be judged by the errors, mistakes, misguided zeal, or isolated statements of its members, none would stand. Every religious persuasion expects to be judged by its published standards, or by its doctrines taught by authority, by the general result of its labors, the triumph of its principles, and the worthiness of its members. Masonry asks no other test. Every man has a right to speak the truth with good intent; no man has a right to state anything else. Every man is supposed to intend the consequences of his own acts. Mr. Barlow has stated what is untrue, and proves it by the facts given by himself. It is not usual for men who write to furnish evidence of their bad intent.

Craftsmen's Life Assurance Company.

This company is for the benefit of mechanics toilers, and producers. It organised and issued its first policy in October, 1868. Its annual statement, January 1st, 1870, showed an income of $150,062.54 on premiums, and $15,904.32 interest. It is a good company. William T. Palmer, Milwaukee, is agent for Illinois and Wisconsin.

Re-union of the 14th Illinois Infantry.

On the 25th of May, in company with the "Springfield Zouaves," we visited our neighboring city of Jacksonville, to participate in the re-organization of this veteran regiment. About 200 of the members were present, and several thousands of people from the city and country. The exercises commenced with a parade through the principal streets. The attention of the people was at first directed to the old soldiers, but the Zouaves, by their showy uniforms and excellent discipline, soon became the centre of of attraction. This company is composed of quite young men, but few of them have reached the age of 25 years, and several are as yet but boys. Among them, however, were quite a number who had served their country faithfully during its time of trial. The principal officers and several members when but from 16 to 18 years of age, entered the army during an early period of our late war, and in many desperate battles and by years of active service, proved their personal courage and patriotism. The company is composed almost exclusively of native Americans, and from the best class of our young men. From the very first organization, it adopted and has rigidly enforced certain rules prohibiting its members from entering liquor saloons and places of still worse character. Our citizens take great pride in the association, and have contributed liberally towards its support financially. Captain Johnson deserves credit for the fine discipline displayed by his company.

After the parade, we were marched to a beautiful grove in the central part of the city, when the old "vets" proceeded to renew their acquaintanceships—and they were cheery renewals, for many of them had not seen each other since the close of the war in 1865. After the usual hand-shaking, the "war yarns" begun to fly thick and fast. We heard many expressions of sympathy, and still more of admiration for the soldiers of the south, and we did not hear a harsh sentiment from one of the private soldiers against our former foemen.

The war is gone and its enmities are passing away, and it is only the joyous companionship that it made that now draws our ex-soldiers together again.

A bountiful repast was spread for us under the trees, to which the guests did full justice. In the afternoon, we were entertained by speeches by Governor Palmer, the first Colonel of the 14th, and from other prominent members of the regiment. The scene was enlivened by the presence of hundreds of beautiful ladies, music by the bands, and singing by the Fourteenth Glee Club.

While I was watching those men who had gathered from all parts of our Prairie State, and who were sitting peacefully beneath the trees singing the time-honored war songs of the republic, I could hardly realize that they had sung the same songs in the battle front, and shouted the "Battle Cry of Freedom" over a fallen nation, and yet there was no animosity towards the Confederate soldiers, for one of the 14th said to me, "I wish we could all have a good square talk with the genuine old hard-fighting rebs, and we would settle all the troubles in very short time;" two of his comrades who heard his remarks answered, "that's so."

The exercises for the day were closed with an exhibition drill and review of the Zouaves, after which we marched to the Dunlap House, and got our supper, by invitation of the proprietors. For this generous and unexpected act of courtesy, we return them our sincere thanks. The Dunlap House is a large and well-conducted hotel, with all the modern improvements, situated on one of the most beautiful streets of the "Western Athens," surrounded by the picturesque residences of wealthy people without the usual surrounding of beer saloons, smell groceries, and blacksmith shops, which generally accompany hotels; and under the control of the present gentlemanly proprietors, it has acquired an enviable reputation. At night, by special invitation, we attended the theatre, at Strawn's Opera House, an elegant and beautiful hall, fully in keeping with the pretty city in which it is located, where we witnessed the play of "The Child of the Regiment," by Miss Katie Putnam, and her troupe. It was well played, and we are happy to state that there was a crowded house to witness the performance.

To the people of Jacksonville, on behalf of the Zouaves, I return our sincere thanks for the generous manner in which we were entertained. Five times have we visited other cities, and never before did we receive such pleasant courtesies as those that were showered upon the veteran soldiers of our State and the young military of the capital, by the citizens of the "College City." We hope that the time will come when we can reciprocate the compliment.

PUBLISHER.

Trade and Commerce of Chicago.

Through the politeness of Capt W. M. Egan, we are in receipt of the twelfth annual report of the Board of Trade of Chicago for the year ending December 31, 1869.

The population of Chicago in 1830 was 70; in 1840, 4,853; in 1850, 29,963; in 1860, 110,973; in 1865, 178,900; in 1868, 252,054. This latter increase is nearly at the rate of 25,000 yearly. In 1860, Illinois produced 115,174,777 bushels corn, and an excess over the next highest, (Ohio) of 41,631,587 bushels. This State also produced 23,837,023 bushels of wheat, and an excess of 6,988,756 over Indiana, the next highest. The total valuation of real and personal estate for the purposes of taxation, in Chicago, for 1859, was $266,024,880, being in excess of 1868, $35,777,880; tax levied for 1869, $3,990,373; excess over 1868, $766,815.

The bonded debt of the city is $10,174,500.

Flour manufactured in Chicago in 1868, 732-479 barrels; in 1869, 543,285 barrels; falling off, 189,184 barrels. Flour received in barrels in 1868, 2,192,413; in 1869, 2,218,822; excesss, 26,409.

Bushels of wheat received, 1868, 14,772,094; in 1869, 16,876,760; excess, 2,104,666. Bushels of corn received in 1868, 25,570,494; in 1869, 23,475,800; falling off, 2,094,694. The receipts of meats, butter, lard, seeds, wool, hides, salt, coal, lumber, shingles, liquors and highwines and lead for 1869 average with 1868; while the shipments are somewhat less, showing a larger home consumption. In 1868 Chicago received 323,514 cattle, and shipped 217,897; in 1869 she received 403,102 and shipped 294,717. The hog trade fell off materially.

The year 1869 was a bad one in Northern Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin for corn; hence the deficiency in corn and pork, while the season was excellent for grass; hence the increase in beef and butter.

The increase in the lumber trade was decided, but not large. The Chicago & N. W. Railway was much the largest carrier of wheat, flour, rye and barley, and the Illinois Central of corn and oats.

The earnings of the latter road from May 1 to October 31, 1869, was was $3,642,708.06; paid into the State Treasury, $254,989.56.

Mormon Lodges.

In a letter by Bro. Luse, of Iowa City, to the Evergreen, it is alleged that a charter was granted by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, to a lodge at Nauvoo. This is a mistake. The following statement contains the facts: In 1842, G. Master Jonas granted a dispensation to Nauvoo Lodge. Complaints were made against the lodge, but upon explanations, its dispensation was continued by the Grand Lodge.

Rev. Jonathan Nye was sent to Hancock county, and got up lodges in Warsaw, Carthage, Keokuk, and Montrose, Iowa, and by his influence, dispensations were granted for Nye and Helm Lodges, at Nauvoo. Soon after they were granted, he found that Masonry was prostituted to base purposes, and recommended the revocation of all three dispensations. Soon after he died at Ft. Madison. In October, 1843, the dispensations were revoked, and all the Masons made in Nauvoo, were declared clandestine, and could never after resume Masonic privileges except by being healed. The dispensations were never recovered, and it is presumed that they were carried to Salt Lake.

A Glorious Vision.

There are visions, rhapsodies and spiritual creations of the soul, intellect and imagination, far surpassing any reality.

There are landscapes which extort our admiration, and scenes in nature which produce rapture, awe, reverence, sublimity and terror. Beauty, grace, docility, and strength in the animal kingdom, gratify our tastes, while the vegetable world is ever administering to our sense of beauty and variety. But of all the visible forms of loveliness, none so lift a man above the world, out of himself, and nearer to the Divinity from whence he sprang, as the presence of a beautiful, cultivated and pure woman. Goodness of heart and modest purity add largely to personal charms, while those same charms give power and efficacy to the graces of education and the culture of the heart and affections.

Normal University.

Thanks to somebody for a copy of the New Era, printed at Carbondale, of May 24. It copies largely from the Centralia Sentinel, St. Louis Democrat, Du Quoin Tribune, Cairo Bulletin, and the Journal of this city, and has a column and a half of its own in relation to the ceremony of laying the corner-stone in its beautiful city. We thank the editor for his kindly mention of us—all but the "awe" part. What there is about us that should create awe, we do not see! Ah! we have it now; it must have been our mohawk tomahawk!

Gone to Iowa.

M. E. Comp. C. H. Jackson, late H. P. of Horeb Chapter No. 4, Henderson, Knox county, Illinois, and major in the late "unpleasantness," has removed to Jefferson, Iowa, and commenced the practice of law in company with Harvey Potter, Esq., formerly of Henry county. Bro. Jackson has the good wishes of all his old acquaintances and brethren, and we trust that his "change of base" may bring him large social, fraternal, and financial returns.

Let young people remember that their good temper will gain them more esteem and happiness than the genius and talents of all men that ever existed.

Cherokee and Oostanaula Lodges, at Rome, Georgia, are to celebrate the 24th. The Cherokee Masonic Aid Association will meet the same day.

Our friend, G. W. Albin, M. D. of Neoga, presided over the State Medical Convention, recently held at Dixon, and was elected President for the ensuing year.

Valuable Reading Matter.

If our readers will look out our article headed "Masonic Exchanges," they will find much valuable matter, with our comments. We intend to gather from every publication that we recognize as Masonic all important facts, doings, and discussions. Under the head of "Transactions Examined," they will find matters of great interest from grand bodies abroad. We invite especial attention to these departments.

Subscribe Now.

With July commences the second half of the year. It is just as good a time for anybody to commence as January, and rather better for us, because we are not so pressed with other business. There are a great many whose subscriptions expire with June, and we hope they will at once renew, and send an additional subscriber.

Festivals, Celebrations, Pic-nics.

The lodge and chapter at La Harpe are going to have a good time on the 24th. We are to be there.

Tyrian Lodge, of this city, is to have a railroad excursion over the Pana road to Edinburg, and a pic-nic party at that place.

We hope that every lodge will, in some way, observe the natal day of St. John.

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Grover and Baker Sewing Machine Co., on our first page. We have used one of their machines in our family for several years, and it gives complete satisfaction.

Spirit of our Masonic Exchanges.

Michigan Freemason, April.—Two Supreme Councils Scottish Rite existed in Mexico, in April, 1868; one, organized in 1860, at Vera Cruz; the other in 1865, at the City of Mexico. They are now consolidated.

John Montgomery signs his name with 123 annexed. He says he is a M. M., and that the figures mean 1, 2, 3.

Home Advocate, Indianapolis, May.—The Grand Commandery met at Indianapolis, April 5. Thomas Newby, Grand Commander, made suitable mention of Sirs F. M. Blair and others, deceased. Sirs D. P. Wheden, of Ft. Wayne, was elected Grand Commander; and John M. Bramwell, Indianapolis, Grand Recorder.

Masonic Record, Nashville, for May.—March 3, 1828, Alexander Carns, a revolutionary soldier, was buried by Cumberland Lodge.

Bro. Rounseville's article upon the Antiquity of Masonry is in this number.

In March last, Sir Williamson H. Horn, Grand Treasurer of the grand bodies in Tennessee, departed this life. Sir John McClelland, of Nashville, Past Grand Commander, and otherwise eminent as a Mason, fills the vacancy.

Freemason, St. Louis, May.—R. W. Bro. Henry G. Johnson was initiated at the age of 22, in Warren Lodge No. 33, Virginia, August 4, 1804, and in December 27, 1804, was elected S. W.; was elected Master in 1806, and as such represented the Grand Lodge in 1810. That year he removed to Mississippi, and in June, 1817, with six others, obtained a charter for Washington Lodge No. 3, and in 1827 he assisted in organizing Clinton Lodge No. 16, in Hinds county, and in which he filled the offices of Deacon, Secretary, Treasurer and Warden. He is still living at the advanced age of eighty-eight years.

Masonic Review, March.—We join with the Review in soliciting Ill. Bro. E. T. Carson to publish a history of the Masonic life of Frederick the Great.

At the funeral of Howard Matthews, P. G. M. of Ohio, the services were held in the Consistorial Chamber. We take the following from the Review:

"Grand Master Newcomb, of Toledo, presided, and the solemnly beautiful and impressive words of the burial service of the Episcopal Church were read by Rev. Mr. Gray.

"The following dirge, written by a lady, was then sung to music arranged by Dr. J. K. Moore, of the Masonic Review: Dr. Moore singing the first tenor, Mr. Lemon, the bass, and little Willie Lemon, the alto; the organ accompaniment by Prof. Nembach. The music was a simple melody, with sad and touching strains, and was sung with fine effect—the voices blending most sweetly, and, with the subdued tones of the organ, together with the solemn surroundings, drew tears from many an eye:

Lay him to rest; Labor is done;
Life's race is ended, the goal has been won.
Lay him to rest—Brother and Friend,
Angels to guard him, from Heaven descend.

Never again, in temple or hall,
Will he respond to the loved mystic call;
From that Grand Lodge—Upward, away,
Came the stern summons we all must obey.

Vacant his seat henceforth shall be,
Brother and friend we are weeping for thee.
Light rest the turf over thy head,
Softly the sunlight around thee be shed.

When life is o'er may we all meet,
Forming a brotherhood, perfect—complete:
In the Grand Lodge glorious and bright,
Founded in wisdom, strength, beauty and light.

"Amid the deep stillness that followed the music, Bro. E. T. Carson, Grand Commander of the Grand Consistory of Ohio, stepped forward in front of the procenium and taking his station at the head of the coffin, addressed himself to the son of the deceased, as follows:

"'Charles Matthews, twelve years ago your father took a most solemn degree in Masonry within these walls, kneeling at that sacred altar, on which was resting the open Holy Bible, the foundation upon which the whole superstructure of Freemasonry is reared. The ceremonies were of the most solemn and impressive character, and as a memorial of that particular occasion, and as a continual reminder to him of the ceremony, and the lessons taught by it, he was presented with this gold ring, which he was instructed he should ever after wear upon the third finger of his left hand, and with which he should never part until death, and then only to his oldest son, or his dearest friend.

"You are his only son, and to you now I give this ring.

"Then turning to the brethren of the Scottish Rite: 'Brethren, Grand Elect and Sublime Masons, let the present occasion awaken in your memories the legend of this ring. Remember that sooner or later, we know not how soon, our bodies, like our brother's which now lies before us, will be cold and inanimate in the embrace of death, and the ring you now wear will have to be transferred to your oldest son or dearest friend. May we remember the legend inscribed in this ring, which is an emblem of eternity: 'Mors non disjungit quid virtus conjungat.''

"The young man accepted the ring, and, putting his hands to his face, burst into an irrepressible flood of tears; while Bro. Carson resumed his seat amid the profoundest emotions of the assembly. The scene was one of the most solemn and impressive we ever beheld.

"The Masonic funeral service was then admirably read by Bro. Newcomb, the Grand Master, with responses by the brethren. At the close the dirge—

'Solemn strikes the funeral chime,' was sung by the choir, accompanied by the organ—the audience joining."

W. Bro. Hartwell, the efficient W. M. of Forrest City Lodge, 388, at Cleveland, was the recipient of a valuable Past Master's jewel, from his brethren, in March last.

On the fiftieth anniversary of the initiation of Bro. John Clarke, of St. Clair, Mich., he delivered an able address before the lodge and chapter at Richmond, Macomb county, in that State.

The H. P. of the chapter, and Master of the council at Monticello, Ark., is eighty one years old.

Bro. Daniel Leadbetter, a member of the M. E. Church, and four years in Congress, died Feb. 26. He was made a Mason in 1822, and presided over the lodge at Millersburg twenty years.

Freemasons' Magazine, (London) April 16, 23 and 30.—Capt. Warren, who is in charge of the exploration party at Jerusalem, says that many of the marks in Palestine are evidently of very recent date.

Fortitude and Old Cumberland Lodges voted five guineas to the girls' school, five guineas to a brother in distress, and presented a silver cup to R. W. Stewart, P. M.

Lodge of Prosperity voted five pounds to the charities and two to a brother in distress. Stability Lodge voted five guineas to the girls' school. Villiers Lodge voted five guineas to the boys' school. Knights of Malta Lodge at Hinckley, England, is 104 years old.

Bro. Rounseville's article, "Clannishness of Masonry," appears in the issue of the 23d.

Bro. Boubee died in France last year at the age of 97. He had been a Mason for seventy-five years.

The Provincial Grand Lodge of Yorkshire, April 6, gave ten pounds to an aged brother, and thirty pounds to the orphan children of a deceased brother, after which Sulcoates Hall was dedicated. The Grand Stewards' Lodge voted five guineas to the boys' school.

The Freemason, London, April 16, 23 and 30.—The Lodge of Faith, March 29, contributed eleven pounds five shillings to the Life-Boat Fund, and five pounds five shillings to the Annuity for aged Freemasons.

The Grand Lodge of England has 1240 lodges actually working, and a membership of 120,000, two-thirds of which are in England.

Landmark, N. Y., April 27 and May 1.—Chapters of the Eastern Star are rapidly increasing in New York, California, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Oregon, Missouri, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Vermont, Iowa, New Jersey, Indiana, Connecticut, Minnesota, Washington Territory, District of Columbia. Georgia has 268 Lodges and 16,469 members. Indiana has twenty commanderies, with a membership of 694.

Voice of Masonry, May.—The Voice has an elegant engraving of Hon. and M. P. Josiah H. Drummond, of Portland, Maine, now Sov. G. Com. of the Northern Jurisdiction, of Scottish Rite.

W. Bro. John Green, W. M., of Thomson Lodge No. 559, at Thomson, Carroll county, died a short time ago, and was buried by the brethren of Fulton, Savana, Mt. Carroll and Thomson Lodges.

Cœur de Leon Chapter of Rose Croix, D. H. R. M., A. and A. Rite, H. F. Holcomb, Master; H. H. Pond, S. W.; D. J. Avery, J. W.; H. S. Austin, Orator; A. C. Gleason, Master of Cer.; A. B. Slichter, Secretary; T. H. Seymour, Treasurer; H. H. Tebbett, G. of T.; J. P. Ferns, Tyler.

Masonic Mirror, May.—A lodge of sorrow was held April 15, at Sacramento, Illinois, Bro. E. H. Shaw presiding, in honor of Ill. brethren Thomas Ross, Henry Hare Hartley, Isaac Davis, and Anson F. Mitchell. Touching and appropriate eulogies were pronounced.

Grand Council of California.—F. F. Barss, Placerville, Grand Master; Stephen Wing, Deputy; Leonard Goss, G. I. Master; Thomas Kyle, G. P. C. W.; L. C. Owen, Grand Recorder.

G. R. A. Chapter of California.—George T. Grimes, San Francisco, G. H. P.; Jas. L. English, Deputy; J. H. Neff, G. K.; Stephen Wing, G. S.; L. C. Owen, G. Secretary; Samuel Graves, President Grand Council of High Priests.

Masonic Tidings, Warsaw, New York, published by John Ransom, at $1 per year, and edited by him and John W. Simons, is very welcome to our exchange list. We take one of Bro. Simons' useful and funny mixed, which we commend to all who use the gavel.

Masonic Review, April.—Bro. Moore is strenuously against the ballot for each degree. Let us ask Bro. Moore if a lodge of Entered Apprentices, a lodge of Fellow Crafts, and a lodge of Master Masons, is simply one lodge; or are they three lodges, working under one charter?

Bro. Moore says that our Jewish brethren can take the order of the Red Cross. True; but is it advisable in any sense to do so?

He also approves the New York Temple of granite. So do we. "Let it endure."

The good Craftsmen of the several Masonic bodies in Akron, Ohio, recently presented a good watch to their aged Tyler, Bro. William Ward. He could not say a word, but his eyes did, "like the dew of Hermon."

Pomeroy's Democrat, May 18.—The editor was at the meeting of the Supreme Council Scottish Rite, S. J., held May 2d, at Washington. Albert Pike presided.

Our most estimable friend, B. B. French, was elected Lieut. Grand Commander.

A banquet was held, and several toasts were given and responded to.

Bro. Pike strongly advocates the union of the bodies North and South, with the Grand Secretariat at the seat of the general government. His advice is sensible. We are for it.

A lodge of sorrow was held in honor of Ill. Breth. Howell Cobb, Wm. S. Rockwell, E. H. Gill, E. R. Ives, W. P. Coleman, J. F. La Mar and Thomas Ross.

Cynosure, Anti-Masonic, May 17.—The editor is cudgelling prominent men who participated in the late Memorial Pilgrim Convention at Chicago.

The paper contains a call for a National anti-Masonic Convention, to be held in Cincinnati, on the 9th of June. Fifty-one names are attached to the call, thirty-five of whom use the title of "Reverend;" eight are willing to proclaim that they are professors or presidents of colleges, and one prefixes "general." These "sheep" don't see the beam when it comes round to them! They are the "saints," they are! We are glad to give the editors credit for a little waggery. We find the article "Freemasonury Exposed by a Victim," which has been the entire round of the Masonic press. It is a musical affair, and doubtless will provoke some side-splitting mirth among our anti-Masonic friends, as it certainly did among our Masonic ones.

The Gavel, Toronto, May.—Although in the Ontario district the Gavel maintains the orthodoxy and legitimacy of the Quebec party; to our mind the organization is grossly irregular and illegal. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia never were a part of the Grand Lodge of Canada. The Grand Lodge of West Virginia when formed, was in a State of the union—Virginia acknowledged another government—and yet she was not fairly recognized, until matters in difference between the two Grand Lodges were harmonized. The Grand Lodge of Canada was formed for old Canada, and occupied the same territory, under the names of Ontario and Quebec. The Grand Master now resides in the jurisdiction of the latter; the Grand Secretary in the former. A division is conceded to be inevitable. It should not be delayed by any sense of pride, or indisposition to back down. All that has been done should be undone, and quickly, and a mutual division should follow. If Ontario does not do this, recognition will surely follow, a bad precedent will be upon record, and bad feeling will continue to exist.

Mystic Star, May.—The elegant oration delivered by Dr. Robbins, in Grand Lodge, last October, appears at length. We have no purpose to notice anything said by anybody about our Findel article. It has met the approbation of most of our contemporaries. We have some respect for history, especially for the old Quaker's almanac of 1820. He was then old enough to know what he verified in regard to Grand Master Price. But let that pass. We wish to ask the editors of the Mystic Star if they really approve the doctrine, that any three lodges in Illinois may throw off their allegiance, ignore their obligations, and form an independent Grand Lodge?

Will the editors of the Star be pleased to state when and where we asked their pardon? By admitting such a statement, they concede its truth.

We beg leave to assure our respected co-laborers of the Mystic Star, that we read with great pleasure the writings of many able men in the Freemason and in the Magazine also both of London, at first hand.

Courier, New York, May 15.—The Courier sets a good example in refusing to name any persons who are candidates for grand lodge officers. To our mind, such conduct is offensive impertinence.

The Grand Lodge of New York was organized in 1787, and the Grand Chapter in 1798.

The grand bodies in Maine met in Portland the second week in May. Grand Lodge—John H. Lynde, G. M.; Ira Berry, G. S. Grand Chapter.—Stephen J. Young, G. H. P.; Ira Berry, G. S.

Mason's Home Book, May.—A page facing title page has "the Arms of the Most Ancient and Honorable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons," and "The Arms of the Operative Stone Masons." This number commences the publication of the "Ahiman Rezon," by Lawrence Dermott. We have only seen extracts; never the work itself. The Home Book is published by Bro. Leon Hyneman, 814 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, at three dollars per annum. This issue is the first number of volume 2. We will receive and forward subscriptions.

The Evergreen, May.—We have read every article, and been profited thereby—yet none furnish matter for these notes save the fact that a new council has been formed at Mt. Pleasant. The editor quotes an article from the Kentucky Freemason, and adds remarks of its own, in which The Trowel is mixed up.

Freemason, London, May 7.—Pythagorean Lodge No. 76, April 25, contributed ten pounds ten shillings to the Girl's School, five pounds to the institution for old men, and five pounds to the institution for old women.

Glasgow Lodge of St. Mark, Scotland, April 25, presente a valuable jewel to Past Master Barbor, Rowley Chapter 1051, Province of Lancaster, presented a costly jewel set with diamonds to their H. P., Comp. Dr. Moore, at a banquet held April 25.

The Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland held its quarterly Convocation in London, May 3.

Magazine, London, May 7, Royal Oak Lodge London, April 29, contributed ten pounds to the boys school, and ten pounds to other charities.

Stamford lodge in the province of Cheshire, last year gave forty two pounds to the boy's school, besides ten guineas to make the W. M. a Vice President, ten guineas to the Aged Freemason's Institution, and a liberal donation to the Life Boat fund.

Dispatch, N. Y., May 1, the editor says that to become or remain a Royal Arch Mason, lodge membership is necessary. It ought to be so everywhere. May 22. Rights in a lodge belong to members, not visitors.

Pomeroy's Democrat, May 25, has a notice of Wm. Tracy Gould, P. G. H. P., P. G. Com., P. D. G. M. Grand Encampment U. S. and S. G. I. Gen. Scottish Rite, S. J. He is the eldest son of James Gould, formerly Judge of the Supreme Court of Conn., emigrated to Georgia in 1821, established the first law school South of Virginia and is now the second senior lawyer in the State at 71 years of age.

M. W. Bro. W. A. Patterson, M. D., P. G. M., of Virginia, died on the 11th of May.

Freemason, London, May 14. One hundred and fifty brethren sat down on May 11, at the annual banquet in aid of the Royal Masonic Institution for girls. The ladies outnumbered the brethren. The chairman stated that 918 girls had already been educated. The subscriptions amounted to four thousand and fifty pounds.

The editor advocates a council of rites, for Mark, Chapter, Templar, and Scottish Masonry. We sincerely wish, that good brethren in this country in possession of all the degrees in the several orders would devise some means to consolidateand arrange the whole in one proper line.

A list of Grand Masters from 597 to 1717 is given, fifty in number. We give a few of the names:—Austin, the Monk, 597; Rennett, Abbott of Worral, 680; St. Snithin, 856; Athered, Prince of Mercia, 900; Edward the Confessor, 1041; Henry I., 1100; Walter Giffan, Archbishop of York, 1272; Edward III., 1327; Thomas Fitz Allen, Earl of Surrey, 1400; Henry VII., 1502; Irigo Jones, 1603; Anthony Sayer, 1717.

Magazine, London, May 14. The Earl de Grey and Ripon was installed Grand Master, the above date. He was born in 1827, and is consequently, forty three years old.

The Science of Freemasonry, by Leon Hyneman, in The Trowel, is copied into the Magazine.

Cardinal Cullen, Ireland, is as vindictive as ever against Freemasons.

Albert H. Royds, P. G. M. Worcester, laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Falinge, May 7. He is to defray the expense estimated at $40.000.

A ten guinea jewel was presented May 9, to Bro. Edusheim, W. M. of Leigh Lodge, London. The Provincial Grand Lodge of Lancashire East, was held May 5. Seventy lodges were represented and 350 brethren were present.

Masonic Record of Western India, No. 1, Vol. 7, April, is at hand. We regret to learn that Bro. Hoff, the former editor of the India Freemason's Friend, has been obliged to leave India on account of ill health.

Mrs. Tucker's article in The Trowel entitled "An Incident of the War," is copied in the Record.

The Freemason's Journal, Montreal, May. It is largely taken up with G. L. of Quebec matters. If our good brethren there, are determined to force themselves nolens volens, with all their violence and irregularity upon the Craft, they may, perhaps, succeed; but notwithstanding the powerful influence of Maine, we hope that our American Grand Lodges will pause and wait for our Canadian brethren to settle the matter amicably.

Kentucky Freemason, June. This is an excellent number. Our article in regard to the "Lost Soul" is copied.

Jottings by the Wayside.

Bodley Lodge is inclined to put on Ayers. Springfield Lodge is well provided with Coats for cold weather, and has a Carpenter to keep matters in repairs. Friendship Lodge will keep shady, by reason of its Crabtree. We know Warren Lodge to be alive because it has a Hart in it. Clinton Lodge will always be able to make a good show at the table because of its Carver. Cass Lodge ought to know the law, while it constantly Reads it. Piasa is a Hardy Lodge, and is not always the Hyndman. We fear Charleston Lodge will never be bound together, so long as it runs to Parcels; yet it ought not to starve, if Fisher does not belie his name, and even if he fails, they can take to Curd(s). Monmouth Lodge, we are inclined to believe, is of a bibulous nature, as it can't do without Porter. Olive Branch will never get rich, because of its Win-slow. We are glad to hear that No. 43 is Stil-well. Hardin, not content with Burns must needs Fry. It is a good thing for Temple, that it always has its Meals. No. 49 floats down the stream of time in a Barge, with a Sleight to keep the log on. Jackson Lodge is provided with a Seaman, a regular Noah. Dove superintends the Craft in No. 58, consequently all is peace. The craft in No. 63 are paid from Wheat. Social Lodge certainly has a Fairfield in which to exercise itself, while Central is well provided with Flower. Scott Lodge is able to furnish a Cook for the rest, who will have plenty to do, for Metropolis is continually calling for Moore. Taylor is inclined to Crow over No. 96, because it's Little. Winchester Lodge is exceedingly Humble. Bureau will never leak, unless Bacon gets in a Trimble and turns on the Fawcett. Marcelline Lodge is inclined to Wait, and No. 115 is afflicted with Storms. Mound is not a truly formed lodge, because its Squier. Cedar is always in Irons. Raleigh always wants to Burnett. Sycamore is a clean lodge, because its Master is perpetually Dustin. Ames is constantly Owen some body, while Richmond is prepared to come down with the necessary Ransom. Clayton always has its Hatt-on. Bunker Hill boasts of a Cross, and Fidelity is a Teitsort of a body. Alpha does things according to Hoyle. Waubansia goes to Church. Milford is so forlorn and Loveless, that Moultrie has to employ a Waggoner, to convey her to Germania, in order to Feder. Mystic Tie is a Lucky lodge in having so good a Barber. Farmington, a Gentle lodge, has but Littlewood. Homer Lodge Cust-er, whereat Wabash grew Cross, and a general war ensued. Algonquin went Early into the fight. M. R. Thompson did its Best to allay the excitement, and would have succeeded had it not been for the determination of Oregon to Mix in the affair. At this juncture, Mitchell went Rushing in. The affair now became general, and was only quelled by Olney bringing its Gun to bear on the parties, being assisted by Bath, who was determined to blow a Hole through the entire crowd. With the help of Lima's Marshal the combatants were finally arrested, and confined, Mattoon furnishing the House, while Bigelow placed a good reliable Lock on the door, and Peoria turned the Keyon. Among the parties arrested was Wm. B. Warren's bloodthirsty Kilmore. During the entire fight, Tryian, standing on Bunker Hill, kept yelling Saye! Saye! Avon Harmony has a museum, in which it has placed a Mummy. Preparations are being made by Dunlap, to enhance the attractions of the museum by the addition of a Cougar. Mechanicsburg feeds its Jack on Hay(s), which is a Christian way of keeping the animal in good condition. Palatine will Dodge, if thrown at. Wenona has a Fowler, who captured a Parrott, and preserved the game in Potts. The "yarn" so industriously circulated by a Wheaton Divine, that the Masons killed Morgan, is manifestly untrue, as he may be seen at any meeting of Russellville Lodge. Pacific is a Sample lodge. The Porter used by No. 90, is carried in a Pitcher owned by No. 447. No. 461 proposes to send a Bear to the Avon museum, and 466 a Buck. Belle City is given to taking a Todd occasionally. Luce Lodge has been prohibited from attending the festival gotten up by the Cooks of Nos. 491 and 492, on account of its persistent efforts to Eat-on to the end of time. St. Paul is a hard lodge, by reason of its Marble. Cold Spring wears its hair in a Frizzell. Andalusia is a Boney, and Delia a Savage lodge. Madison Lodge is inclined to Gamble. Dongola has placed Sampson in the East; but, in order to counterbalance, has a Little Secretary. There is one Goodfellow, at least, in Milan.

New Books.

MYSTERIES OF MASONRY, BY L. E. REYNOLDS, P. H. P.

The author is unknown to us, neither is there anything in the book to indicate who he is, or where he lives. J. B. Lippencott & Co., of Philadelphia, have the copyright, and from them we receive the work; for review we presume. It is a handsome book, of 573 pages, on good paper, large type, and faultlessly printed. The title-page describes the book as "being the outline of a universal philosophy, founded upon the ritual and degrees of Ancient Freemasonry." It is an application of the principles of science, theology, morals, social order and moral power to the symbolism and practical workings of Freemasonry. The author is quite a reasoner, void of ostentation, candid in statement, and earnest in the application of principles. His book is worthy the study of every Mason who desires to take a comprehensive and philosophical view of great principles, and all students and reasoners will be delighted with its unfoldings and processes. We especially commend it to our anti-Masonic readers and friends who would like to read a book at once readable, thoughtful and candid.

We noticed it recently upon the shelves of Bro. John S. Bradford, in this city, who will be pleased to furnish it to any who may desire it.

Griffith's Live Stock Annual for 1869, received from the publisher of the Live Stock Reporter.

The number of beef cattle received at the stock yards in Chicago in 1869 was 403,102; receipts of live and dressed hogs, 1,852,382; fat sheep, 340,072; wool, 8,923,663 pounds.

The stock yards are situated near the southern limits of Chicago, and have capacity for 27,900 cattle, 100,000 hogs, 50,000 sheep, and 350 horses. The yards have a good hotel and a bank with ample capital. The Chicago & Northwestern; Illinois Central; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago; Chicago & Alton; Michigan Southern; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; and Michigan Central Railways, have convenient connections for discharging and shipping stock.

Seen Somewhere.

Twenty-five years ago we thought John Buford, Jr., of Rock Island, the handsomest boy we ever saw. But a few years ago, we looked upon a boy about sixteen years old, the very impersonation of a perfect youth—perfect in physical proportion, masculine features, a fine, expressive face, bespeaking all over, gentleness, grace, strength, intellect, and power.

Some time since, we dined with a friend. The lady of the house, past meridian, but still beautiful and elegant, pointed to a portrait of her deceased son. It was the same boy we had seen and marked years before, we know not where. Upon the canvas he looked alive, and to us a glorious vision of reality.

Miscellaneous Fraternal Matters.

Some Frater has sent us the proceedings of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. of Colorado. We shall credit them to Bro. J. W. Ratliff, of Nevada, who is the G. Secretary, and withal, noted as a Mason. There are eleven lodges in the Territory, with 458 members in good standing.

St. Andrew's Centennial.—The centennial celebration of St. Andrew's Royal Arch Chapter, Sept. 29, 1869, comes to us from the Chapter in a beautiful book of 77 pages, and embraces the preliminary proceedings; letters of invitation, beautifully illustrated; the afternoon ceremonies, including the oration by W. S. Gardner, Grand Master; the evening reception with present officers, committees, choir, festivities, banquet and promenade, closing with the list of members, 405 in number, and including such Masons as Richard Briggs, present G. H. P.; Chas. C. Dame, P. G. M.; John McClellan, P. G. H. P.; C. W. Moore, editor of Magazine; N. B. Shurtleff, Mayor; Solon Thornton, G. Secretary Grand Lodge, and Thomas Waterman, Grand Secretary Grand Chapter.

The Heptasoph, the organ of The Seven Wise Men, is now published on the 15th of every month by the Grand Conclave of Louisiana. Address box 1,360, New Orleans. It is a match for the Phunny Phellow.

The Lacon Home Journal gives a handsome notice of the Mystic Star and Masonic Trowel conjointly, and compliments Bro. Robbins' oration very highly.

Grand Chapter of Georgia.—M. P. Kellogg, G. H. P.; R. L. Roddy, Deputy; L. J. Glenn, G. K.; W. J. Johnson, G. S.; W. J. Pollard, G. Treas.; J. Emmett Blackshear, Grand Secretary.

Montana--Frary.

In the April number of the St. Louis Freemason, the editor, in noticing the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Montana, stated that Grand Master Frary decided "that incapacity to read and write was not a Masonic disqualification." The decision as stated on page 96, proceedings of 1868, was "that a person who can neither read or write is thereby disqualified for the degrees of Masonry." In relation to the report of the committee the editor says that it "doubted the correctness of the decision." This would represent the Grand Master and committee as taking the ground that neither of them did take. It is due to Grand Master Frary and the intelligent Grand Lodge of Montana that they should be represented for what they are.

In regard to the matter of reading and writing, Bro. Frary takes high ground—a ground we never could persuade ourself to take, though some Grand Lodges are strict in the enforcement of such a rule.

Oaths.

President Blanchard assumes that Masons take divers kinds of oaths, and that none of them are binding. Taking them just as he says they are, we ask him, if having taken them, he would reveal them? If President Blanchard does not answer the above question in the Cynosure, we shall take it for granted that his answer is in the negative.

Lodge Officers.

During this month many elections will be held, and we request returns to be made to us, so that they may appear in the July Trowel. At that time we will also publish other lists already received.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—Isa. 8, 20.

21 Query.—Has a lodge any right to give Masonic burial to a brother who commits suicide?

No: unless he was laboring under mental derangement, nor even then, if the derangement was caused by his excesses or follies.

Terrible Fire.

What is a small fire in a large city, is destruction in a small, though thriving town.

One of the pleasantest towns it has been our privilege to visit, was Wenona, Marshall county, on the I. C. R. Road. It has recently been visited by a terrible devastation, by which property valued at $135,000 was destroyed, a large number of dealers and owners injured or ruined, among whom we notice several of our Masonic brethren. The whole amount of insurance, so far as ascertained, is less than $25,000.

Something Coming.

Our good Bro. Rounsville has for nine months been furnishing our brethren with matter for instruction, prosecution, and defence, and not a few nuts for our anti-Masonic friends to crack. For the warm months, he proposes to give us "The Masonic Pastor; or, The Church against the Lodge."

Railroads.

We intended to prepare a careful railroad article for this number, but defer doing so, because railroad interests are involved in the vote to be taken upon the new Constitution, and for the additional reason that pressing engagements and unforeseen demands upon our time, have prevented the accumulation of such railroad information as is desirable.

Mississippi.

We are much pained to learn that our esteemed companion, Oscar T. Keeler, Grand Secretary of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Mississippi, has been summoned from earth by the Supreme I AM. Bowing reverently to the inscrutable, we inform all interested, that E. Comp. J. L. Power, of Jackson, fills the vacancy.

Sound.

The prerogative of the Master to rule and govern his lodge includes the right to terminate idle and needless discussion. When, therefore, he deems any question to have been sufficiently ventilated, he rises in his place and takes the question. There is little danger of an arbitrary exercise of power in this respect, the tendency being always in the contrary direction. Rules of order in a Masonic lodge are merely for convenience, and the Master may or may not observe them, as he thinks best. It would, therefore, be a waste of space to print your argument which you will doubtless thank us for suppressing.—Simons.

The Cynosure, anti-Masonic, repeats the story about our compensation; will it make the article on pape 82, headed "Masonic Charity," a test of the truthfulness of its articles generally?

Ten pages of matter already set up are left out, and very much that we would like to lay before our readers is also unavoidably carried over to July.

Married.

By the Rev. Bro. John E. Lindley. Bro. A. B LEEPER, W. M., of Locust Lodge No. 623, A. F. and A. M., to Mrs. MARY McCUNE, May 22d, 1870, all of Owaneco, Illinois.

In Williamsburg, Ohio, by Rev. C. H. Calpus, Rev. Bro. HERMAN, to Miss SINTVILLA MCMLILAN.

Impostor Unearthed.

The Masonic Relief Board of Toledo has of late rendered most valuable service to the Masonic Order and to the public by its success in discovering and exposing the cowardly villains who attempt to gain a living by swindling the Masonic Fraternity. Last evening brought a fresh arrival in the person of a seedy looking chap, who gave his name as Samuel Buchanan. Like his predecessors he was quickly detected, and he will leave this city branded as an impostor.

The stranger, on presenting himself to the Relief Board as an applicant for charity, gave in substance the following account of himself:

He was a member of Lodge No. 935, at Wexford, Ireland; had been in this country about three months and a half; soon after he landed in New York city he came to Miamisburg, Ohio, when sickness overtook and confined him for six weeks. Recovering finally he proceeded to Dayton, and from thence came to this city, via Lima. His destination was Chicago, where he represented that he had two cousins. In consequence of his sickness and other misfortunes he had spent his money and become entirely destitute. He only desired sufficient means to carry him to Chicago. After hearing his story the Board demanded 'satisfactory evidence of the truth of his statements, whereupon Buchanan at once produced his certificate of membership in the lodge mentioned. The certificate is duly signed by the Grand Secretary and the Deputy Grand Secretary, under the date of December 6th, 1860. It has the appearance of being a genuire certificate, and those not familiar with the style of the diplomas of Ireland, could not detect any irregularity. The certificate being examined the Board were strongly suspicious that the stranger was an impostor, and at once commenced a thorough inspection of all the papers, etc., about the applicant's person. The fellow was decidedly opposed to this investigation, and while his diary, letters, and documents, were being taken from his pockets and examined one after another his nerves gave way, and a conviction that his game was "up" could be plainly read in his countenance. The documents convicted the fellow. They showed that he had left London a year ago, and that he had been swindling the Masonic lodges in Canada, New York, and Ohio for several months. One of his documents is a letter from the Mayor of Montreal, bearing date of August 1st, 1869, recommending him to a city officer for employment. A Masonic blank visiting card was among the papers. His diary shows that he attempted to keep a daily record of the important events in his wanderings Among the items are the following:

March 2d, 1870.—Worked half day. Sent a letter home with some tobacco and cotton seed and a paper to Emmy. Stopping at 702 Central Avenue. My birthday—born at Wexford, 1837. Cincinnati, Ohio, April 18, 1870. Left Ohio candle factory.

May 2d, 1870.—Stopped at Burnett House. Expect to get away at 7:59. Did not get away. Slept out for first time in my life. Had money, but could not get a bed.

May 3d.—Saw G. C. Anderson. Got a pass to Wapaukoneta.

In appearance Buchanan has more of the air of stupidity than shrewdness. He is 5 feet 11 inches in height, and when walking stoops a little. His weight is about 160. He has brown hair slightly grey around the temples; a full face, prominent nose; a dark hazel eye, a small moustache, short cruly whiskers scattered over his chin. In appearance he is about forty years of age.

Expulsions.

By Virginia City R. A. Chapter, at Virginia, Montana Ter., April 25, William Lyman, P. M., for gross unmasonic conduct.

Postponement of the Grand Festival.

By a sad calamity, the families of our Most Worshipful Grand Master elect, the Earl de Grey and Ripon, and our Deputy Grand Masternominate, the Earl of Carnarvon, have been plunged into the deepest sorrow. Gentlemen connected with them by the dearest ties of kindred have been ruthlessly murdered by brigands in a country which owes much to the British nation, and in which the lives of Englishmen at least, it had been fondly imagined, were secure from danger.

There is no land in the world—not even, perhaps, excepting the classic spots of Italy—which has been so much the resort of the antiquarian, the poet, or the lover of romance, as the territory comprising the the modern kingdom of Greece. Every plain, every mount, every rill or river has its history, and this is especially observable in the neighborhood of Athens, the renowned. Ruins on all sides attest the grandeur of the past, and breathe a reproach for the degeneracy of the present. The Greeks have, even now, as Byron sings, the Pyrrhic dance, but the Pyrrhic phalanx has, we fear, forever departed.

They have the glorious skies, the hero-haunted hills, the inspiration of a thousand spirit-stirring memories, and yet the nation is a disgrace to civilization, a blot upon the map of Europe a den of thieves and brigands. We cannot restrain the indignation which thrills through our veins when we reflect upon the many sacrifices which Western Europe has made to aid the cause of the Greeks, and how base has been the return by the latter. It is time, therefore, that sentimentalism should cease to bear sway on the subject, and we must learn to contemplate and understand the ugly fact, that the modern Greeks are about as comparable with their noble ancestors as a monkey is with the highest type of intelligent man. From the lofty conceptions of a Homer or a Sophocles, from the divine reasonings of a Socrates or a Plato, from the patriotic heroism of a Leonidas or a Miltiades, to the plundering propensities of their wretched descendants is, indeed, a fearful leap. It was after a journey to the immortal plains of Marathon that our unfortunate countrymen met their fate; and who can now tell how their hearts may have glowed, and their souls burned within them, fired by the thoughts of its ancient renown? The associations of such a sacred spot, hallowed forever as the scene of Freedom's triumph, must naturally have been awakened in the breasts of those cultivated men whose lives have paid the penalty of their pilgrimage.

Within a few miles of Athens—within sight almost of a military patrol—the unfortunate gentlemen, with the ladies who accompanied them, were waylaid, two of their escort shot at once, and the rest of the party made prisoners by a ferocious party of brigands, who, after demanding an enormous ransom, deliberately murdered the four persons they finally detained, in cold blood. Mr. Vyner, one of the victims, was brother-in-law to our Grand Master elect, and Mr. Herbert a cousin of the Earl of Carnarvon, the other murdered gentlemen being the Count de Boyl, Secretary to the Italian Legation at Athens, and Mr. Lloyd. In consequence of the assassination of such a near relative, the installations of the Earl de Grey and Ripon and of his nominated deputy have been necessarily postponed, and we can assure both our noble brethren, that the members of the English Craft deeply sympathize with them in the heavy affliction with which it has pleased the Great Architect of the Universe to visit their family circles. In a national point of view, the subject will be well and amply discussed. We write these lines before seeing the opinions of our colleagues of the secular press, but in a Masonic sense, we feel it but right to place upon record an expression of the grief with which we have heard of the dreadful catastrophe. Begun in mourning, may the reign of our Grand Master elect be yet brightened with the rays of happiness. We can at least assure him and his distinguished Deputy—than whom a better or more popular selection could not have been made--that the heart of English Masonry is stirred to its centre in sympathy and sorrow for the loss which each has sustained. And let us hope that the slaughter of those inoffensive tourists may show the necessity of effectually stamping out the "rinderpest" of brigandage. If the Greek government cannot accomplish the first duty of every civilized power, by making law and order supreme within its borders, it is quite time that the English traveling public realized the fact, and abstained from visiting a country whose historical reminiscences can only be enjoyed at the risk of robbery and assassination. Neither as commercial men, nor as administrators have the Greeks been a success, and it is more than problematical whether their emancipation from the Turkish yoke, has been a real service to humanity at large. The great powers have a right, however, to insist upon proper protection being provided for travelers in the country, if the farce of self-government in Greece is to be longer continued, and probably the atrocity recently committed will lead to the adoption of efficient measures for the suppression of the robber brood.

Until such measures are set on foot, our counsel to all admirers of ancient Greece will be plainly this—confine your investigations to the works of the Greek writers, and visit Greece only in imagination.—Freemason, London.

Washing Machine.

Mr. L. B. Hartt, inventor of the Hail Columbia Washing Machine makes thorough trial of it in families, and clear comparison by showing how his machine remedies the defects in others. It is not necessary to rub any portion of the clothing, nor to boil them. Hot water and soap are all that are necessary, and the machine can be used anywhere without slop, is still in its work, and perfect in its operations, making just as good work on a wristband, collar or seam as on a plain surface. We most heartily commend this valuable invention to all our wearied and economical house-wives, who have so long stood over steaming suds, to the detriment of health, temper and purse. We think it a good investment.

THE MASONIC PASTOR,

OR

The Church vs. The Lodge.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

CHAPTER VIII.

In which the Conspirators consult.

Bill Pomeroy had been a wealthy and respected citizen, but in consequence of a love for strong drink he had fallen very low in the scale of respectability, and was generally believed to be ready for any service which promised to give him means to assuage for the time his unconquerable thirst. It was to him that the pious conspirators turned in their hour of need, hoping that such testimony as would convict the pastor of some misdemeanor or offense against good morals, could be elicited. ister Smith was the agent or emissary in getting up the testimony against him, and she lost no time in consulting with Pomeroy as to what he could testify to in the ecclesiastical court. In her interview with him for that purpose she ascertained that he would state that he was present at the meeting in the wagon shop, that the ceremonies were of a light and trivial character, that the words she had heard were pronounced not only by the presiding officer, but by the entire body of brethren assembled, and that they related to the sealing of a solemn contract. To her inquiry if the pastor was in the chair, he gave such indirect replies that she was satisfied that he could not deny it. On the whole, the female agent was well satisfied with the result of her mission. It is true, Pomeroy had not told her much, but his language had suggested a great deal, and had led her to hope that all that was suggested would be testified in court on the morrow. She returned to her home with high anticipations of success against the vile man who dared to be a Mason against the wishes of the ladies of his church—who dared to be a free man in a land of freedom. As there was not time to report to the principal, Rev. Mr. Smoothface, Sister Smith had to content herself with a hurried interview with Mrs. Deacon Brady. So in the evening she hied away to see her. She found the good old lady alone. The results of the interview with the prominent witness were delineated. The hope which that testimony had inspired was strengthened by the attrition of congenial souls.

"Bill said he was there in Styles' wagon shop, did he, Sister Sarah?" asked the deacon's wife.

"I guess he did! Right out square. He did not pretend to deny it," was the answer.

"And he owned up that they all said 'let it be recorded,' arter takin' that awful oath?"

"Yes, he said every one of them repeated it."

"And then he said Jones was there, didn't he, Sister Sarah?"

"Well, he said as much as that, but he was pretty shy of what he said, but there is no doubt he will swear to it to-morrow."

"And did he say right out that it was a contract with the devil that they wanted to record?"

"No, not exactly, but he said it was awful solemn."

"Sarah Smith, I don't b'lieve you've mor'n half done your arrant. You haint got him to say nothin' positive."

"Oh, yes he did, say positively he was there, that they took terrible oaths, and that what I heard was true."

"Yes, he did, but he didn't say Minister Jones was there—he didn't say he was aidin' and abettin' the contract."

"No, not quite that, but he intimated as much."

"O, fiddle-stick for his intimations! We want a man that will go like Elijah into the lion's den, or was it Jeremiah, and just stretch the jaws of the animal so far apart that they will never get together again, and then he can't never bite no more."

"Caution is the parent of safety, sister Brady."

"Not in this! We must whip him or he will whip us. But there is no use in whining. That won't help it none. We hain't got no time to dally now, but must do the best we can with what we've got."

CHAPTER IX.

The Battle.

The morning of the trial came. The church in which the pious court was seated, was filled to overflowing, nearly all the members of the church being present, and many of the world's people. The court consisted of four of the "peers" of the accused; that is, of four clergymen of the same religious grade as himself. It was rather an imposing scene. Within the altar and in front of the desk, was paraded the court. On each side and partially in front, were the counsel, most of whom had volunteered to give their services on the one side or the other. The church members occupied the front, while the outsiders had to content themselves with more remote positions.

Most prominent of all was sister Sarah Smith, supported by Mrs. Deacon Brady and Rev. Mr. Smoothface, who had been excused from sitting as a member of the court on account of his personal friendship, and intimate social relations with the accused. There was an air of subdued restless anxiety upon their countenances, as if they had engaged in a course of which they were not well assured of the end. Deacon Brady sat by Mr. Smoothface, the very picture of sorrow, of indetermination, of fear.

The charges were read, reciting that Rev. Mr. Jones, pastor of the said church, in defiance of his people, and to the great scandal and deep disgrace of the cause of Christ, and especially of the church aforesaid, did persist in consorting with a secret, dangerous and powerful anti-Christian society known as Freemasons; and that the said Jones utterly and wickedly did refuse to acknowledge his error, but rather clave to the same the more because of reproof. The charges that he had profaned the holy day of God, by sporting on the Sabbath, and that he was known to rejoice at the calamity of a member of his church, and had expressed himself as glad when he heard of his departure from the rules of the church, were also rehearsed. After which the President of the court asked the accused if he was prepared to plead to the charges.

As the minister deliberately arose to reply the audience, with bated breath, listened. Not a sound broke upon the ears of the assembly. The house was the house of silence. On his right sat the wife with her babe at her bosom, with a scared countenance indicating the fearful trial it was to her retiring spirit, and yet it was lighted up with a kind of heavenly radiance that seemed to receive brilliancy from and convey strength to the accused one by her side.

The accused arose and said: "May it please the court, brethren: However I may be astonished at the singular nature of the charges preferred against me, I feel bound to answer all allegations that may be preferred by the church with which I have connected myself, and for which, I hope, I have not labored wholly in vain. I am a member of the organization known as Freemasons; I have belonged to them for years; am acquainted with the laws, practices and requirements of the Institution. I have been honored with promotion by the brethren, and have presided over their deliberations in nearly all the subordinate bodies of the Order. These being facts, I ought to know, and pardon me if I say I do know, the tendency of the rites and ceremonies.

"In a long experience in Masonry, I have never known a single person made worse by becoming a member, but I have known many—yes, brethren, sisters and friends—I have known very many saved from ruin by its blessed influence. And for its good and purifying influence, I love Masonry. If it is a crime to love and cherish a good and humanizing institution, then I am criminal, for with my heart and soul, I love the Institution of Masonry.

"It has been intimated that I have pertinaciously refused to renounce the Order and retire from its communications. Can I do so after what I have here averred, without becoming a base ingrate? It has ministered to my necessities when my brethren in Christ seemed to have forgotten me. It has provided needed food for those I love, when famine stood at the door and there were none to drive his haggard form away. It has cheered me in the performance of duty, when, but for its words of cheer, I should have fallen by the wayside, and when this dear one by my side shall be weeping above my coffin, I know there will be fraternal hearts that beat in sympathy, and kind hands to lift the burden from her life. The Lord forget me, when I forsake Masonry, or say aught against its holy principles. I belong to the Order—I shall continue to belong to it until the day of my death, unless found unworthy, but by doing so I bring no disgrace upon the cause of Christianity; therefore I say here, before Heaven and men, that I am not guilty as charged.

"Additional charges represent me as a Sabbath breaker, and as having no sympathy with the calamities of my people. To these charges I interpose an unequivocal, and an indignant negative. I defy my most bitter enemies, if enemies I have, to point to a single act of my life to prove the charges true. These charges are an afterthought, to blacken my character provided that the original specifications were not proved. They are as false as falsehood itself, and could have only been conceived in a mind overflowing with bitterness."

As the reverend gentleman took his seat, there was a murmur ran through the crowd, but whether one of approval or condemnation it was impossible to say. The president explained that the accused having admitted his connection with the Masonic society, it appeared that there was no inquiry necessary on the first charges, except as to the character of the Institution. If it was a pure and good institution, then to be a member of it could not disgrace Christianity or the Christian profession. The accused had given his opinion on the merits of Masonry, and it was now the business of the court to see if he was correct.

Sarah Smith was called to the witness stand. She deposed much as she had related before, her adventure at the wagon shop, and was sure that the words she had overheard had reference to a terrible contract, or compact made with "the Prince of the Power of the air," though she confessed she heard no part of any such compact rehearsed. She was certain that it was a Masonic lodge that was in session, because she had understood that they held their conclaves there, but she had heard nothing further than had been related. The figures that she had seen wore masks, and she did not identify any of them, though she thought the man in the chair was about such a man as Mr. Jones.

Bill Pomeroy was the next witness. He said he was at the wagon shop on the night referred to by the first witness. He had not been expelled from the lodge at that time. He had seen the accused preside in a lodge. He had seen it many times. He was not in the chair on that night. The words overheard by Miss Smith were spoken as she testified. They were spoken in reference to a contract ratified by a solemn promise. It was this that was to be "recorded."

All this was brought out by the counsel for the prosecution. On the cross-examination the witness was asked:

"Did the Masonic lodge meet in the wagon shop on the night referred to?"

"It did not!" was the prompt answer.

"What body was in session there at that time?"

"The Sons of Malta."

"Was Mr. Jones, the accused, there?"

"He was not!"

"Was he a member of the Sons of Malta?"

"Not to my knowledge!"

"Would you have known it if he had been?"

"Certainly."

"Who presided that night?"

"Rev. Smoothface."

"One question further, Mr. Pomeroy, were you a Mason?"

"I was."

"Are you a Mason?"

"I am an expelled Mason."

"Thank you for your honest testimony. Will you tell me what is the character of Freemasonry as a moral institution?"

"With pleasure! It is the best school of morality to which I was ever admitted."

"You belonged to the church once, I believe?"

"I did."

"You were expelled from the church, for what?"

"Telling tales out of school, or in other words, I revealed church secrets."

The counsel for the prosecution objected to this method of examination, and the court decided that the testimony was inadmissable.

"May it please the court, I have a single question to put to the witness," said the cross-examining counsel. Then turning the witness he said:

"You say you were expelled from the lodge, for what cause?"

"Drunkenness!" was promptly answered.

The prosecutors, or the persecutors, as they would more properly be called, saw that the case as concerning the original charges was lost. Their only hope was to prove the additional charges, which had been preferred to meet such an exigency as had presented itself.

Russell, the keeper of the City Hotel, was called. He testified that the accused came to his house on his way to church on Sabbath morning, and took a glass of wine. The witness remarked that one of the parishioners of the accused, Geo. Calcraft, had the night before been intoxicated, and had fallen from his buggy, hurting himself severely, but he fell into good hands, and was taken care of. The accused said, "I am glad of it; that is, I am glad that he fell into good hands."

On the cross-examination the witness said it had never struck him that the words could be tortured into a meaning that had been attached to them by the prosecution. The words were said in presence of several other persons; he did not remember who they were.

Tabitha Haines was called to the stand. She testified that on a certain Sabbath day, she saw Rev. Mr. Jones in a buggy, with a dog sitting in it, and what she was sure was the muzzle of a gun protruding over the hinder end of the box. She was sitting on the piazza of her father's house, about a hundred feet from the road, and could not have been mistaken in what she saw, either of the man, dog or gun. They were all in the buggy. What else could he be doing than hunting, with such a rig as that, she should like to know. There was no cross-examination, and the prosecution rested.

Wm. Hill, a well-to-do farmer, was called on behalf of the defense. He testified that on the Sabbath mentioned, the accused had conducted public services at a school-house near his dwelling; that he had stopped with him over night; that he drove from home after the usual services there; that when he drove up to his gate a small dog, which he said belonged to his son, and which persisted in following him, was sitting in the buggy, and that projecting out of the end of the buggy-box was the small end of a cane, the box being too short for it to be laid down in the bottom, and the head too heavy to allow the cane to have the end reversed without endangering its falling out. There was no gun in the buggy, and the dog was a "black and tan," and no sporting dog at all. This closed the testimony. The court, after a few mements consultation, brought in a verdict of acquittal, which was received with tremendous cheering.

CHAPTER X.

In which all parties are disposed of, "and they lived in peace ever after."

The trial was the end of anti-Masonry in the church where it took place. The revelations concerning the Rev. Smoothface, and the popular belief that he was trying to undermine the influence of Pastor Jones, that he might slip into his place, prevented his opinions having any weight with the members. He could not even retain his former position, and some rumors of intimacy with the lambs of his flock, probably hastened his departure. His exit was unheralded, and with him went "sister Sarah," the "old harridan," whom he took for better or for worse, simply because it was the only chance to cover up a scandal. Let us hope the punishment that was inflicted was a sufficient penalty for his crimes against honesty. The writer saw his name not two months ago as an officer in an anti-Masonic gathering.

Deacon Brady and his "pardner" still remain members of the church, the former having had the discernment to see the conspiracy against his pastor, and the latter accepting the situation because "she had learned a lesson from that are Sal. Smith that'll last her durin' her nat'ral life." More sinned against than sinning, it is to be supposed. The deacon hardly regrets the necessity of learning that truthful lesson from the Psalm of Life.

Bill Pomeroy has repented him of the evil which he had done, become a sober and industrious citizen, and is now a member of the lodge in good standing. Mrs. Deacon Brady says she "knew all the time there was some good in the critter." Through his influence the deacon has been "initiated, passed and raised," which caused the good woman to express the opinion that he had "better bought another cow than spent the money for such blamed nonsense."

Parson Jones and his excellent wife and family, now reside where we found them when first settled, and to all appearance, they have a life lease of the church and parsonage, "to have and to hold" them until the Grand Warder of Heaven shall summon them to everlasting refreshment in the Paradise of God.

Masonry flourishes. It has been proved a good institution, legally, socially and practically, and the proof is accepted by all classes; no second attempt has been made to destroy it. No one has any desire to do so. And that rural city presents a demonstration that there is no need of arraying the CHURCH vs. THE LODGE.

We have only to say that the main features of the above narration are true; the additional charges having actually been made in substance with the result above stated. We doubt not some who read it will recollect when and where the incidents occurred.

Communications.

CLINTON, Miss., July 26, 1870.

To the Editor of the Trowel:

While I read with great pleasure the valuable contributions to your interesting periodical, I occasionally find some ideas expressed with which I cannot agree, and some statements made which are no doubt regarded as facts, that conflict with portions of Masonic history, which must have been overlooked by the writer. These statements, given as the result of an investigation of the subject, may be regarded as historical facts by those who have not the means of investigation at hand. As I conceive it to be the duty of every Mason to endeavor to correct errors when discovered, that can be established to be such by reliable authority, I have presumed to enter a protest to the conclusions to be deduced from the remarks of Bro. Lanphere in the July number of THE TROWEL, on the subject of District Grand Lodges. In the argument, he uses the following language:

> "The principle of representation came into use only a century and a half ago. Before 1717, the idea of representation in Masonry was unknown. Up to that time the Grand Lodge was a pure democracy, each Mason from E. A. to W. M. attended it, did so in his own right and behalf and for no one else. Then occurred a revolution, not in Masonry, but in the Constitution of the G. L. The right of Masons as individuals, to attend and take part in the proceedings of G. L. was taken away or given up, and the principle of representation of lodges as now exists, substituted. Then was adopted this much talked-of 'ancient landmark' or 'prerogative' of the Master, in company with the S. and J. Wardens, to represent his lodge at all communications of the Grand Lodge."

With the opinions therein expressed, I beg to take issue.

1st. That the principle of representation by Masters and Wardens did not originate in 1817, but was in practice perhaps centuries before that time, and was then considered to be "ancient usage."

2d. That previous to that time the Grand Lodge was no more a pure democracy than it is at present, perhaps not as much.

3d. That there was no change in the constitution or members composing the Grand Lodge.

4. That the X. and XII. articles of regulations under which the elements of a G. L. are established, did not originate in 1717.

In order to sustain my views, it is necessary that we should go back to the first authentic account of the formation of a Grand Lodge in England, and trace it down through the "Genesis" of grand lodges, at least to the revival in 1717. Taking Entick's edition of Anderson's Constitutions as a guide, which is corroborated by Preston's Illustrations, we find that the first congregation or general assemblage of Masons was under Albanus or St. Alban, in A. D. 303, "who obtained from the King a charter for the Freemasons to hold a General Council, and gave it the name of Assembly, and was thereat himself as Grand Master, and helped to make Masons and gave them good charges and regulations." Then in 926, viz.: "That accordingly Prince Edwin summoned all the Free and Accepted Masons in the realm to meet him in a congregation at York, who came and formed the Grand Lodge under him as their Grand Master, A. D. 926." "That they brought with them many old writings and records of the Craft, some in Greek, some in Latin, some in French, and other languages, and from the contents thereof they framed the constitutions of the English lodges, and made a law for themselves to preserve and observe the same in all time coming."

Here the Constitutions were framed, and all Masons enjoined by law to preserve and observe them. Now, what Constitutions were those? The next mention made of a Grand Lodge or the Constitutions was in 1375, as follows: "The Constitutions were now meliorated, for an old record says: 'That, in the glorious reign of King Edward III., when lodges were many and frequent, the Grand Master with his Wardens, at the head of the Grand Lodge, with the consent of the lords of the realm, then generally Freemasons, ordained, That at a making or admission of a brother, the Constitution and Charges shall be read, &c.'" What constitution and charges are here alluded to?

The next allusion made to the Grand Lodge was in 1607, Inigo Jones being Grand Master, viz.: "He also held the quarterly communications of the Grand Lodge of Masters and Wardens, and the annual General Assembly and Feast on St. John's day, &c." Here the Grand Lodge is described as being then composed of the Masters and Wardens. By what authority, if not under Arts. X. and XII. Old Regulations?

There is no further appropriate allusion to the Grand Lodge or Constitutions until the revival in 1716, when "the four old lodges and some old brethren met at the said Appletree (Tavern), having put into the chair the oldest Master Mason (being Master of a lodge), they constituted themselves a Grand Lodge pro tempore in due form, and forthwith revived the quarterly communications of officers of lodges called the Grand Lodge, resolved to hold the annual assembly and feast, and then choose a Grand Master from among themselves till they should have the honor of a noble brother at their head."

I beg to add here one more proof, in the opinion of Bro. Preston, as expressed in a note on p. 163 Ill., viz.: "This privilege was certainly a peculiar favor; for the Grand Lodge, by the Old Constitutions, could consist only of the Masters and Wardens of regular lodges with the Grand Master and his Wardens at their head; and it had been customary even for these officers to withdraw and leave the Masters and Wardens of lodges to consult together, that no undue influence might warp their opinion."

Here we have evidence that the practice of Masters and Wardens attending the Grand Lodge, did not originate with the Grand Lodge of England in 1717, for the record distinctly states that that G. L. revived the communications of officers of lodges, which communication, they asserted, was called the Grand Lodge. They also held the annual general assembly and feast. Here the distinction is drawn between the G. L. of Masters and Wardens, and the General Assembly of all Masons. If it was then alluded to as a custom already in use, when and where did it originate? Records prove that it was in use in 1607. But to proceed.

"Accordingly, on St. John Baptist's Day, 1717, the assembly and feast of the Free and Accepted Masons was held at the aforesaid Goose and Gridiron. Before dinner, the oldest M. M. (being Master of a lodge) in the chair, proposed a list of proper candidates, and the brethren, by a majority of hands, elected Mr. Anthony Sayer, Gent., Grand Master of Masons, who being forthwith invested with the badges of offices and power by the said oldest M. M., and installed, was congratulated by the assembly, who paid him homage. Mr. Jacob Lambell, Carpenter, and Capt. Jos. Elliott, Warden."

The Grand Lodge, being thus formed, the Grand Master, in order to carry out the resolution of the preceding convention for reviving the quarterly communications of officers of lodges, called the G. L., then "commanded the Masters and Wardens of lodges to meet the grand officers every quarter in communication at the place he should appoint in his summons sent by the Tyler."

Thus was the ancient custom revived and the Grand Lodge duly organized.

I fear many intelligent Masons, without making a thorough investigation of the subject, have been led to consider the above command of the Grand Master Sayer to be the origin of representation of lodges; whereas, in completing the organization of the Grand Lodge, he was only reviving an old custom, which had been so long in use as to entitle it to be classed among the ancient usages, if not among the landmarks, extending back, in my belief, to 926.

The old regulations were not altered or modified by either Bro. Anderson or the Grand Lodge. He had no authority for altering them, but was merely directed to digest, to arrange in convenient order, to dispose in due method "the old Gothic Constitutions which were brought to the Grand Lodge for the purpose of showing the usages of ancient times," which duty he performed, and produced to the Grand Lodge the thirty-nine regulations in their present order of arrangement, which arrangement was approved by the Grand Lodge. And when he deemed an addition necessary he appended it to the article in a different clause, and did not embody it in the old article, but left that untouched, all of which additions may, by reference to the Book of Constitutions, be recognized by their having no numerical letters attached to them, whereas the old regulations are regularly numbered. The caption of the old regulations has the following, viz.:

> "The author of this book has compared them with and reduced them to the Ancient Records and Immemorial Usages of the Fraternity, and digested them into this new method, with several proper explications, for the use of the lodges in and about London and Westminster."

Here is the evidence of Bro. Anderson himself, to show that he did not alter them, but merely reduced them to a better form. Now, having established the antiquity of the Old Regulations, and that they do point out to us the immemorial usages of the Fraternity, I will endeavor to show from them what were the constituents in the formation of a Grand Lodge as a distinct body from the general assembly of the Craft.

Permit me, for the sake of more ready reference, here to insert the X. and XII. articles of the Old Regulations:

> Art. X. "The majority of every particular lodge when congregated, shall have the privilege of giving instructions to their Masters and Wardens before the assembling of the Grand Chapter or Lodge, at the three quarterly communications hereafter mentioned, and of the annual Grand Lodge, too, because the Masters and Wardens are their representatives and are supposed to speak their mind."

This article was framed prior to Art. XII., as we find that the quarterly communications had not then been fixed, but were alluded to as to be hereafter mentioned, and it was also necessary first, to designate who and how many of each lodge should attend the Grand Lodge, and why they should attend. Then, the constituents of the Grand Lodge are designated in > Art. XII. "The Grand Lodge consists of and is formed by the Masters and Wardens of all the regular particular lodges upon record, with the Grand Master at their head, and his Deputy on his left hand, and the Grand Wardens in their proper places; and must have a quarterly communication about Michaelmas, Christmas, and Lady-Day, in some convenient place as the Grand Master shall appoint, where no brother shall be present who is not at that time a member thereof, without a dispensation; and while he stays he shall not be allowed to vote or even give his opinion without leave of the Grand Lodge asked and given, or unless it be duly asked by the said G. L." (The above italics are mine).

When we find that these articles are produced among the old Gothic Constitutions to point out the immemorial usages of ancient times, and also find a Grand Master as far back as 1607, continuing a practice which conforms essentially with these regulations, and there being no other authority on record for such a practice, is not the conclusion irresistible, that these articles must have been in existence at the time of the formation of the first Grand Lodge, and that it was formed under them?

I think that erroneous ideas are entertained in regard to Grand Lodges in ancient times, by failing to distinguish the difference between the Grand Lodge proper and the Annual General Assembly and Feast, which are considered by some to have been one and the same body. But that was not the case. I have shown that from the earliest record of the formation of a Grand Lodge as an organized body, it was composed of the grand officers and the Masters and Wardens of lodges alone, and I challenge a refutation of this statement, based on reliable authority, that their meetings were held quarterly and on the day of the General Assembly and Feast also; that on those days the Grand Lodge convened in a separate apartment, for the transaction of their peculiar business, into which none were admitted except the members of the Grand Lodge; that there were four stated meetings of the Grand Lodge, whereas the General Assembly met but once—on the day of the feast, at which time all Masons of whatsoever degree, were privileged to attend and partake of the cheer, and also to participate in the transaction of such business as might properly be presented to the General Assembly, as we find by Art. 37, Old Regulations, viz.: "Then the Grand Master shall allow any brother, Fellow Craft or Entered Apprentice to speak, directing his discourse to his worship; or to make any mention for the good of the Fraternity, which shall be either immediately considered and finished, or else referred to the consideration of the Grand Lodge at their next communication, stated or occasional." But they were not admitted into the Grand Lodge proper.

This was the custom both before and after 1717, and I presume constitutes the pure democratic principle which pervaded the Grand Lodge system, and which Bro. Lanphere says was radically changed by the G. L. in 1717, but in which, I think, he is mistaken, as the privilege of attending the annual general Assembly and Feast was not abridged, as will be seen by a clause in Art. 39 of the regulations, providing for new regulations or alterations in the old, which was adopted on St. John Baptist's Day, 1721. That no new regulation could be made or old one altered, unless it was submitted to the perusal and received the approbation of all the brethren present at the general assembly and feast before dinner, even the youngest E. A. This does not bear out the remark of Bro. Lanphere that the right of all Masons to attend the general assembly was taken away in 1717, as we see here that four years after that time they are required by a special regulation to vote on all new regulations and proposed alterations to the old on all future occasions, and while they then, as formerly, attended the general assembly, and thus voted in their own right, the Masters and Wardens attended the Grand Lodge as the representatives of their lodges.

I have not sought to burden your columns with elaborate argument to sustain my views, believing that the above statement of historical facts, which may be tested by proper investigation, will be amply sufficient.

Very respectfully and fraternally,
Yours, &c.,
GEO. H. GRAY, SR.

Reminiscences of Travels in the South.

BY A BROTHER IN 1860.

It was just twelve days after the election which placed Abraham Lincoln in the presidential chair that I sat out on a journey from the pleasant villiage of D——s, to visit some relatives and friends in North Carolina. Taking boat to St. Louis, thence to Memphis, and thence by rail to Chattanooga and Columbia, and north by Greensborough, I arrived at my destination. The passage from St. Louis was slow, owing to the low stage of water, and the heavy load on the steamer.

Politics was the great topic of discussion among the passengers, who were about equally divided north and south, as well as in political views. Arguments and invectives were plenty; extreme measures were predicted, and more hopeful were many that all would be right.

Before reaching Memphis many dropped off and others came on, and the farther south we went, the more intense was the feeling. Many were averse to rash measures, but the tendency was the other way. One of the moderate ones is the hero of this story. At Columbia, South Carolina we missed connection, and a delay of several hours was the consequence.

This delay gave me an opportunity to get around and see what was going on. I found the people in a state of frenzied excitement against the government at Washington, and friendship for the north was not safely expressed.

Pretty soon my attention was directed to a crowd of men and boys some distance off on the public square, who were making a loud noise, and threatening violence to some one they had in their midst.

I hurried to the spot, and found the unfortunate man to be a stalwart fellow, in the garb of a railroad engineer. All kinds of threats were made and murderous weapons and missiles were plenty.

My first impulse was to step forward to his assistance, but a moment's reflection was enough to satisfy me that I might endanger myself and more seriously endanger the engineer.

His life was in jeopardy, of which he seemed fully aware, and while waiting to see the result, I discovered that he manfully stood his ground, facing his accusers and emphatically averring his innocence; that he was simply a railroad engineer, and in proof showed his passes, and said if they would let him go he would return north. The whistle sounded, and I had to make double quick time to reach the depot before the train started; in a few moments the train was thundering northward; upon getting aboard I had forgotten about the engineer, but after my excitement had subsided, I found upon inquiry that he was aboard. I lost no time in searching him out, and he frankly told me, that he had started south in search of employment on some of the railroads in Florida.

He had expressed his opinions freely, and had got into trouble.

My desire was to know how he released himself from the fury of the populace.

He gave me to understand that he understood an universal language, still as the snowflakes, but as expressive as lightning, that he used it, and it had saved him. I pondered over the matter and determined to investigate it further.

When the train reached Chester, another delay occurred from 3 to 10 P. M.

Here as elsewhere, politics was the theme. Our hero made no secret of his union sympathies. While at the hotel waiting for the train the house was surrounded by fifty or sixty men, and a middle-aged man was selected for leader. They demanded of the engineer his business and papers. He avowed his principles and produced his passes. This seemed to appease the crowd, but I could see that they were not satisfied. As the time approached for getting to the depot, a half mile distant, I discovered that there was gathering around the house a lot of men and boys, whose looks betokened no good to the engineer. Upon leaving the hotel, he was furiously assailed, and ran for his life towards the depot, but an unfortunate step gave him into the power of his pursuers. "Shoot him," "hang him," "bring a rope" &c., came from every quarter. As before he disavowed any intention of meddling with their affairs, and told them if they would let him go, he would go north. But the crowd increased, and became more unreasonable and furious as it grew larger, and I felt certain that no earthly power could save him.

All at once he straightened up, faced the crowd, made a peculiar sign, when a dozen passsive spectators rushed in, and while I was in breathless waiting to see the end, they demanded in a tone of authority that the engineer be let alone, that they would be answerable, &c.,

Almost in an instant, the clamor was hushed, and by the aid of these men, who seemed to be "Angels of deliverance," the engineer was put upon the cars, rescued from the very jaws of death. Again I sought him. Then I learned that he was a Freemason, which mattered little to me, as I was uninitiated. Both times, the same sign had saved him.

The scenes there enacted made a deep and lasting impression on my mind; I pondered over, asked for light, was duly elected, knocked and was admitted. I have found light, example and doctrine consonant with purity and truth, which will aid in guiding my pilgrim steps through life.

Dallas City, Ill., April 10, 1870.

Joliet, Ill., July 13, 1870.

To the Editor of the Trowel:

I make bold to ask for a small space in your paper, that I may give a short notice of a pleasant evening spent within the hall of Matteson Lodge No. 175. We have had many happy meetings there, but none, I think, more pleasant or profitable than the one which occurred last evening, it being the occasion of the installation of officers and the annual festival. The spacious lodge-rooms were well crowded, many visiting brethren favoring us with their company.

The officers elect were installed with due ceremony, after which all present were treated to a very happy surprise. The retiring Master, W. Bro. Stearns, who has for four years been the much respected Master of Matteson Lodge, in closing his official relations with the brethren, took occasion to express his kindest regards by presenting them with a magnificent case of jewels, accompanying the same with a few remarks that could not have been more appropriate or well-timed, and which breathed the sentiments of true brotherly love and good feeling.

But he in turn was somewhat taken aback by being made the happy recipient of a superb Past Master's jewel, in presenting which the members expressed the high esteem and respect in which he was held by them, and thus in a feeble manner expressed their just appreciation of the untiring energy and faithfulness with which he had discharged the important duties of the office which, by his own urgent request, he had been allowed to vacate. The presentation speech was made by Bro. Chas. B. Garnsey, whose remarks were very appropriate and had a pleasing effect, indeed.

After the above proceedings, all were invited to the banquet-room, where feasting and speech-making were the order of the evening. Toasts and responses were given with that good will and pleasure which is wont to prevail on such occasions; and thus passed one of the happiest Masonic gatherings your correspondent has had the pleasure of attending for many a day, and one which will long be remembered by the brethren present.

Fraternally yours,

B.

Derivation of the Names of Illinois Lodges of A. F. & A. M.

Collected from Various Authentic Sources.

Warren Lodge No. 14, Shawneetown, Gallatin county, organized U. D. August 6, 1842; chartered October 5, 1842; and William B. Warren Lodge No. 209, Chicago, Cook county, organized U. D. December 1, 1855; chartered October 7, 1856.

These two lodges were both named for William B. Warren, who was Grand Secretary at the time No. 14 was organized, and had retired from the Oriental Chair of the Grand Lodge a little over one year previous to the organization of No. 209.

"Col. Warren was a native of Kentucky, where he resided until some years after he attained to man's estate and entered upon married life. We suppose that he resided at or near Frankfort. Before leaving Kentucky he took all the degrees in Masonry, from Entered Apprentice to Knight Templar, and all the degrees of the Scotch Rite to the 32d.

"Early in 1840, Past Grand Master Dunlap and the subject of this sketch conferred together, which resulted in a correspondence with the lodges in Illinois, and, soon after, in the formation and permanent organization of the present Grand Lodge of this State. Bro. Warren was elected Grand Secretary, and contributed largely, by his ability, correspondence, and assiduity, to build up the Institution of Freemasonry in Illinois. He held the office until the breaking out of the Mormon war, in 1845, and was succeeded by Past Grand Master Lusk.

After the disastrous explosion at Peoria, which resulted in the loss of life and property and the destruction of the archives of the Grand Lodge, a Grand Lodge of Recovery was held at Springfield, and he was again elected Grand Secretary, which position he held until the fall of 1851, when he declined a re-election.

At the time the said Grand Lodge of Recovery was held, a meeting of delegates from several chapters was held and the Grand Chapter organized, of which Col. Warren was elected the first Grand High Priest.

At the meeting of the Grand Lodge in the Senate Chamber in 1853, our brother held no position in the Grand Lodge but that of a Past Master. There were several candidates for Grand Master, but on the first ballot he received a vote equal to all the others, and on the second ballot was elected by more than two to one. Sickness and ill-health marked his entire year. Just as the Grand Lodge was about to assemble in 1854 he was taken very sick, and his address was written by his son, dictated from his sick-bed. After the Grand Lodge was organized it was learned that Grand Master Warren lay at the point of death.

A profound sorrow pervaded the Grand Lodge, and sincere prayers were offered for his recovery. On the second day the address was received and read amid profound silence, for many felt it to be the advice and testament of a dying man. It was a remarkable document, reciting important historical events and breathing the genuine spirit of Masonry, as may be seen by reference to the proceedings of 1854.

Bro. Warren has served as Secretary, Warden, and Master of Harmony Lodge, High Priest of Jacksonville Chapter, and in many important positions not herein named in Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter. His reports on Masonic correspondence were received with marked favor in the older Grand Lodges.

After the Mormon war ceased the Mexican war commenced, and he was elected Major of the regiment commanded by Col. John J. Hardin, and was with him until he was slain at Buena Vista. At that time Col. (then Major) WARREN was military Governor of Saltillo, and it was his belief, as it was the belief of others, that if he had been on the ground with Hardin the latter officer would not have been killed. The Lieutenant Colonel was advanced to the grade of Colonel, and Maj. WARREN to that of Lieutenant Colonel.

The new Constitution of this State adopted in 1848 created three Supreme Grand Divisions, and Col. WARREN was elected Clerk of the Middle Division, and was succeeded by his son in-law, Wm. A. Turney, Esq.

After retiring from public life, he engaged in various branches of business, but his health had been failing for years, although his high courage and indomitable will stood him in good stead and in great help to his physician."

He left a most estimable widow, two married sons, two married daughters, and two unmarried. The eldest son, Wm. M., has been some years a Mason, has served the lodge at New Berlin, in this county, several years as Master, and is the Secretary now. He has been twice Surveyor of this county, and is engaged in farming and stock raising on a large scale.

"He died April 12, 1865, and immediate preparations were made for his burial. Several went from this city, and a large concourse of Masons, from the neighboring lodges and the lodge at Jacksonville, assembled on Friday, April 14, to give the mortal remains the last sad rites of sepulture. Harmony Lodge was opened by Hon. O. H. Miner, Master of Tyrian Lodge, and under the direction of Bro. Scott, Marshal, the lodge proceeded to the dwelling of our venerated brother, and with the friends and citizens, participated in the funeral ceremonies, where an appropriate sermon was delivered by Rev. Bro. Buck. The funeral cortege then proceeded to the grave, near that of the lamented Hardin, and the Fraternity deposited the body, dropped upon it the white apron, the green sprig, and a handful of dust, amid the mournful ceremonies of the Order, and left our brother resting in peace, with the hope of his joyful resurrection.

So passed away a courteous gentleman, a brave soldier, a high-spirited citizen, a noted Mason, and a friend of the poor."

Peoria Lodge No. 15, Peoria, Peoria county, organized U. D. January 8, 1842; chartered December 24, 1812.

The reason why the charter of Peoria Lodge appears of date December, instead of October, is because of the failure of the delegate to the Grand Lodge to produce the records and returns of the lodge. The matter was referred to the M. W. G. M., hence the discrepancy as to date, compared with the charters of other lodges. This lodge derives its name from the city in which it is situated. The name Peoria is the name of a tribe of Indians who once occupied the place where this populous city now stands. The name "Peoria" is itself a corruption from the term Praouria, which is the true origin of the term Prairie, and expresses the same meaning as does the latter word.

These Peoria Indians were, strictly speaking, the Prairie Indians, and were one of five tribes composing the Illini nation. This Illinois Confederacy was composed of the Kaskaskias, termed by General Harrison the Kaskians, Cahokias, Peorias, Michiganians and Temorias. These tribes, or more properly speaking, clans, all spoke the Miami language, and were probably a branch of that nation. The Indians of those days might have been classed in three great families—the Algonquin, Iroquois, and Mobilian. The tribe of which we are speaking was a part of the Illinois Confederacy, belonging to the Miami Nation, of the Algonquin family.

The first white men ever beheld by the Illinois, were Marquette and Joliet, who passed through their country in the month of July, 1673. On the 1st day of January, 1680, La Salle, accompanied by Father Hennepin and the Sieur de Tonti, landed with nine canoes and about thirty men, at or near where now is the wagon-bridge over the Illinois river. In 1679 La Salle having obtained the permission of the King of France, set on foot a trading expedition to this unknown country. He, having built at Black Rock, on the Niagara river, a vessel which he termed the Griffin, set sail in 1769. In due time he landed at the present site of Chicago, where after dispatching his vessel along the coast of the lake in search of trade, he landed. La Salle having built a fort at Chicago, set out on December 1st, for the Mississippi River, by ascending the St. Joseph across the portage into the Kankakee and thence into the Illinois, down which he proceeded until he reached the foot of Lake Peoria. Here La Salle remained some time, and at last hearing that his vessel had been seized by the Indians, its crew slaughtered, and the vessel itself burned, and being harrassed by the constant dread of the Indians, with whose bloody-mindedness he seems to have been well acquainted, determined to build a fort.

A fort was accordingly built about three miles above Peoria, which he termed Creve-Cœur, signifying Broken Heart.

Hennepin thus describes this fort:

"On the south-east bank of this river (Illinois), and it forms two or three lakes, but one mightily extolled, called Pimitœuii, (that is, in their tongue, a place where there is abundance of fat beasts), which is 20 miles long, and 3 miles broad, M. de La Salle erected a fort in the year 1680, which he named Creve-Cœur, from the grief which seized him on the loss of one of his chief trading barks, and the mutiny and villainous treatment of some of his own company who first attempted to poison, and then desert him."

In consequence of the wars with which the whole Algonquin family were embroiled with the Iroquois, and their allies, together with intestine difficulties, and the whole added to a fierce war with the Sacs and Kickapoos, the Peorias rapidly dwindled away, so that from 4,000 warriors, in the time of La Salle, representing a population of 24,000, there was in 1814 but four left. In the old maps of the Indian Territory, such as we used to study in our school-boy days, was laid down a reservation appropriated to the "Peoria Indians." We did not know any better then, but we do now. The name was a misnomer. When the Kickapoos were collected together, to be placed on their reservation some few (and there were but few altogether), were collected from near Peoria. When asked by the agent questions as to where they came from, many replied, "Peoria," or "Praouria." He termed them the Peorias, when in reality they were Kickapoos. The last of the Peoria Indians died in 1821.

The settlement of Peoria dates but little later than Kaskaskia, but its erection into a village was in 1778. The place when the settlement was started was termed Mailletville, after Hypolite Maillet, its founder. It was afterwards called Fort Clark, and, finally, and we think happily, the name of the dispossessed inhabitants was given it, and it has remained so.

In 1812, Capt. Craig, who had been sent by Gov. Edwards to chastise the disorderly Indians, complained that while lying before "La Ville de Maillet," his boats had been fired upon by the inhabitants, and as it appears, he landed and burned the town, utterly destroying it.

The town was then abandoned, the inhabitants going to St. Louis. In 1820 the survivors of those who had been driven from Peoria, petitioned Congress for the restoration of their lands. This "French claim," as it is called, has given rise to much vexation, and many lawsuits. During the Indian troubles of 1813 and forward, a fort was erected at Peoria and called Clark, after the veteran, Col. George Rogers Clark who took Kaskaskia, and with it the Illinois country from the French, thus making it a part and parcel of Virginia.

Temperance Lodge No. 16, Vandalia.—Organized January 10, 1839.

Previous to the organization of the present lodge at Vandalia, a lodge bearing the name of Vandalia and being numbered 8, had been organized at this place on the 22d April, 1822. It assisted in the formation of the old Grand Lodge, and in fact was the prime mover in regard thereto. When the Grand Lodge went down, No. 8 wentdown with it.

June 30, 1838, sundry brethren petitioned for and received a dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Missouri, to open and hold a lodge at Vandalia, to be known as Temperance Lodge. The lodge was not organized under this dispensation, whereupon it was renewed and the lodge organized as above stated. It came under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, December 21, 1842, being numbered 16.

The derivation of the name is plain, and needs no comment. The origin of the name Vandalia is thus accounted for by Gov. Ford:

"The legislature also provided for the removal of the seat of government from the town of Kaskaskia, the ancient seat of empire for more than one hundred and fifty years, both for the French and American inhabitants. Commissioners were appointed to select a new site, who made choice of a place, then in the midst of the wilderness, on the Kaskaskia river, northeast of the settlements, which they called "Vandalia." After the place had been selected, it became a matter of great interest to give it a good sounding name, one which would please the ear, and at the same time have the classic merit of perpetuating the memory of the ancient race of Indians by whom the country had first been inhabited. Tradition says that a wag who was present, suggested to the commissioners that the "Vandals" were a powerful nation of Indians, who once inhabited the banks of the Kaskaskia river, and that "Vandalia," formed from their name would perpetuate the memory of that extinct but renowned people. The suggestion pleased the commissioners, the name was adopted, and they thus proved that the name of their new city (if they were fit representatives of their constituents) would better illustrate the character of the modern than the ancient inhabitants of the country."

Macomb Lodge No. 17, Macomb.—Organized U. D. February 24, 1843; chartered October 3, 1843.

This lodge derives its name from the city in which it is located. The city of Macomb was named after General Alexander Macomb, a hero of the war of 1812. General Macomb was born in Detroit, April 3d, 1782, the place then being occupied by a British garrison. The hostilities between Great Britain and her colonies had just ceased, and upon its authoritative declaration, Macomb's father removed to and settled in New York. At eight years of age, Alexander was placed in a school in Newark, New Jersey, under the charge of Dr. Ogden; while attending this school his taste for military habits became apparent. He formed his playmates into a company and commanded them with a juvenile assumption of dignity amusing in the extreme. At the age of sixteen, a war with France seeming imminent, he joined a company of rangers, whose services had been offered to the government, but, it seems, were not accepted. In the year following he was appointed to a cornetcy in the regular army, but the cloud of war passing away, his services were not required. He had however, resolved on a military life, and was among the few officers retained in the regular service, after the disbanding of the army.

In February, 1801, he was commissioned as a 2d Lieutenant, being promoted to 1st Lieutenant in October 1802, when he was stationed at Philadelphia, on recruiting service. After remaining in that city one year, he was ordered to join Gen. Wilkinson, then operating against the Cherokees. Remaining there nearly a year he was ordered to West Point, to join the Engineer Corps. There he became Adjutant and Judge Advocate. His services in the latter office were so highly esteemed that he was employed by the government in completing a code of regulations for courts-martial.

He was made Captain of an Engineer Corps in 1805, and was promoted in 1808 to the rank Major. In the early part of 1810, he was commissioned as Lieutenant Colonel, and appointed acting Adjutant General upon the organization of the army in 1812. After the declaration of war, a few weeks later, he was appointed Colonel of artillery, and joined Wilkinson on the Canada frontier.

He shared in the mortifications of the campaign of 1813, but at Plattsburg he nobly cooperated with McDonough on the lake in a victory so decided and important as to almost blot out the shame of former failures, and for his gallant services on that occasion he received the thanks of Congress, a gold medal, and a Major General's commission. At the close of the war he was retained in the service, being ordered to the command of Detroit, his birthplace. In 1821 he was called to the head of the Engineer department at Washington, and on the death of Major General Brown in 1828, was appointed General-in Chief of the Army of the United States. He died in Washington, on June 25, 1841, and was succeeded by Winfield Scott.

The names of Macomb and McDonough are inseparably connected, as regards the battle of Plattsburg, and in Illinois this connection has not been ignored, Macomb being the county seat of McDonough county.

Exchanges.

The Manufacturer and Builder, for August has an engraving of the Swedish calculating machine at Albany, one showing the processes of making soap, and another showing the low pressure steam heating apparatus for heating dwellings. It is full of engravings and plates, with valuable articles on important topics to farmers, builders and manufacturers.

The Northwestern Advance, published weekly by Starr & Son, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and edited by C. D. Pillsbury. It is an eight page sheet, and is the organ of the Temperance people of Wisconsin. It is conducted with great ability.

The Bright Side, August 11, has a fine picture of a cat and bird drinking together.

The Schoolmaster, for August is a dollar monthly edited by Messrs Stetson & Baker, Normal, and published by John Hull, Chicago. Is it possible that at last school writers have found out that all the hearts and souls do not belong to the teachers? the August schoolmaster has several good articles.

The Mother's Journal, for August, Mrs. Mary G. Clarke, editor, Chicago. Good pictures, good stories, and capital advice. Take it mothers, young and old. $2.00 a year.

Oliver Optic, August. The first is faced by the likenesses of Callot, Poussin, Murrillo, Rubens, and VanDyck. "Plane and Plank" is a growing story. We feel pretty certain that honesty. though green, is going to beat villainy, though sharp.

Politeness Towards Strangers.

One of the strongest ties which unites Masons is that of fraternity or brotherhood. "By the exercise of brotherly love, we are taught to regard the whole human species as one family; the high and the low, the rich and the poor, who, as created by one Almighty Parent, and inhabitants of the same planet, are bound to aid, support, and protect each other. On this broad platform, Masonry unites people of every country, sect, and opinion, and conciliates true friendship among those who might otherwise have remained at a perpetual distance." See Fenton's Webb's Monitor, pp. 40, 41. The legitimate effect of so broad a view of brotherhood is to make the true Mason charitable and courteous towards the "people of every country, sect, and opinion." Hence it is that Masons are a courteous, polite people, and especially should they be courteous and polite to strangers. Nor does this courtesy manifest itself toward Craftsmen only; it is far-reaching, going out toward all people, of all conditions, countries, languages, and opinions.

It is not affirmed that every individual member of the Fraternity is courteous and polite. In a community numbering a half million, it would hardly be expected by any one much acquainted with the frailty of human nature, and knowing the great diversity to be found in human character, that all would live up to so high a standard as the one presented by our Order. But we affirm that the influence of our principles is in favor of courtesy and politeness toward all mankind, even the stranger and sojourner.

Such being the characteristics of the Order, Masons have reason to expect more than a cool, formal civility from the members of the Craft. When one Mason meets another, even as a stranger, he expects to meet one who entertains and acts upon the principles of the Craft. He has reason to expect an affable politeness, and a courtesy which shall manifest itself in kind words and deeds. He has reason to expect this from principle—not a narrow selfishness.

If Masonry teaches us to regard the whole human species as one family, created by one Almighty Parent, it teaches us to regard every human being as a brother man, and of course we should be considerate of the welfare and happiness of our own brethren.

And what is there which stamps us with so much true manhood, as courtesy manifested toward strangers? What seems to shock us so much, as to see strangers treated uncivilly and uncourteously. We always feel that the churl, who cannot answer the stranger's question with civility, ought to be kicked out of good society as a person void of principle and good breeding.

But do Masons always act toward strangers with that politeness and consideration that they have reason to expect from Craftsmen? I fear not. Indeed, I know they do not. I have sometimes seen men who advertise their Masonry to the world by wearing a badge, act uncourteously towards brothers who approached them, desirous of acquiring some needed information, and supposing they were Masons because they wore the badge. They perhaps selected them out of the crowd on that account, but found out by sad experience that all are not what they appear to be!

Had they been interrogated as to why they were discourteous and impolite to a stranger, perhaps they would have excused themselves by saying, "business before pleasure or ceremony." But business should not be permitted to so far engross our time that we cannot practice the common courtesies of life. They who have too much business on hand to practice the principles of the Order, had best withdraw; or at least, they had best remove the badges they are wont to sport upon their persons.

One word more. Now that Masonry is very popular, there are more or less impostors traveling about the country, seeking aid which they do not merit, from members of the Craft. This may have a tendency to induce a want of confidence in all strangers and sojourners. I have heard Masons say, recently, after having been imposed upon, that they intended to look upon everybody as a "scamp," until he proved himself to be an honest man. This would certainly place such brothers in a very unmasonic attitude toward strangers. We should not too readily take strangers into our confidence: when they approach us with requests for aid we should put them to the strictest tests; but we should ever treat them with genuine politeness and courtesy, which are characteristic of the Masons.—Michigan Freemason.

Treatment of anti-Masons.

In considering the acts of men, their bitterness, hostility and opposition, it is always well to look to the motives and mainsprings that underlie the whole. We imagine that if the best of men were to explore the chambers of thought, desire and passion, and were to analyze the purpose to do right, and observe how many improper thoughts insensibly accompany such purpose, they would be much startled at the picture which their own consciences would present. Hence the necessity to let all our acts be "done with charity." Underneath the persecutions which have disgraced the religious world, the idea is prevalent like that of Paul, that it is "God's service." That idea, honestly entertained, sanctifies the deed in the mind of the actor.

The Roman soldier received the commands of his superior as the voice of God. While the disciples of Jesus proclaimed peace and toleration, they were beset by Jew and Gentile—the learned and the ignorant. Christians accepting the doctrine of the infallibility of the Roman church, have waged a war of extermination with frightful atrocities against all who opposed their dogmas. Their opponents as they gained control, have in turn inflicted death upon the Roman Catholics. Some of those driven from Europe to American soil, have shown the same spirit of persecution. What underlies all this? The belief that they were right; that all else was wrong. A great portion of this comes from ignorance and a blind adherence to certain dogmas. It is the instruction carried into practice. Therefore, while condemning these acts of cruelty and fanaticism, we are to consider how much of it arises from conviction of duty and right.

The anti-Masons of the present day, are mainly the descendants of the ascetics of a former generation. They advocate liberty of conscience, but persecute those who disagree with them. They profess to be Christians, but visit pains and penalties upon such as do not profess their creed. They embrace men of talents, genius and culture, who like Paul, when consenting to the death of Stephen, believe that the "end justifies the means." Most of them intend to do right. They have not considered how far wrong they may go in their intention to do right. Many of them are too ignorant, prejudiced or obtuse, to do so.

One of the missions of Freemasonry is to diffuse, propagate and enforce a genuine charity among all men; to bring into friendly relations men of opposite opinions; to promote the arts of peace and industry, and to make companionship and neighborhood tolerable and comfortable. Hence, Masons should avoid the acts they condemn. One of our cardinal principles requires us to render to "every man his just due, without distinction." If the habits, character and life of an anti-Mason be in the main correct, he should be adjudged honest, and the motives which govern his anti-Masonry should be left to Him who alone judgeth perfectly. We most earnestly exhort our brethren to avoid carefully the things which they condemn. President Blanchard is a notable anti-Mason. He never was a Mason. His anti-Masonry is inbred. It has been life-long. It has been bitter and persecuting. It has created enemies among non-Masons, more than it has among Masons themselves. It has fettered his genius, crippled his energies and dwarfed his manhood. It has marred his usefulness, made many uncomfortable, and has brought him down to old age, a cynical, querulous, disappointed man. His inconsistencies are hard to reconcile. His utterances are hard to bear. After all we believe him to be honest, earnest and well-meaning. He may do Masonry some hurt, and Masons much more. But, lamenting that so much talent and learning have been misdirected, we leave him and those like unto him in the hands of One who will judge us all.

President FINNEY professes to be a seceding Mason. That is enough. No Mason wants to know any more. It is the duty of all Masons to think as little about such men as possible. Throw over them the mantle of silence. Pass no judgment, because the motives which underlie all our acts, cannot escape Omniscience, and every man will be judged according to his deeds.

Rev. J. L. Barlow.

The gentleman whose name heads this article was pastor of the Baptist church at Dundee. In the Cynosure of May 3, he assumes the martyr's role, because his church admitted a Mason to baptism, upon which he resigned.

We alluded to this matter in the June number. Mr. Barlow now appears in the Cynosure of July 26, and intimates that we have been trying to prove him a liar. A liar is one who states what is untrue, with an intention to deceive. A man may be mistaken; may state what is partly true and partly untrue from misunderstanding, bias, prejudice and other causes, but with no bad intent.

We had no intention of attacking the moral character of Mr. Barlow in any sense whatever. On the contrary, we gave him the full benefit of adhering to his convictions, even against the judgment of his church and denominational usage, and that rather than violate his own convictions of duty, he resigned. Had he stated some things in his first article which he stated in the July article, we should have said less. In this last article, Mr. Barlow goes over the entire church matter again, and leaves the readers of his article to infer that we had been trying to prove him a liar in regard to the reception of the candidate and his resignation. Any sane man who will read our June article will see that the contrary is the fact, and that no such thing as falsehood in regard to reception or resignation could possibly be inferred. Thinking as he did, had we been in his place, we have no doubt that we should have acted as he did.

But, in his May article he says—"My people, many of them, knew my position, and in heart approved it." The italics are ours. The fair inference is, that all his church did not know his position, and that those who did, had come to that knowledge from time to time. In his July article he says his views were known from the start. If that be true, it proves two things; that the church would not refuse a good man because he was a Mason, and that it had had a plenty of Mr. Barlow's anti-Masonry. But where we did assert that Mr. Barlow had stated what he cannot prove, he is silent. In his May article he says that he has found from Masonic books, and vocal utterances, that Masonry claims to be a religion. While doubting the matter of vocal utterances, we took care not to contradict him, but said: "If any institution should be judged by the errors, mistakes, misguided zeal, or isolated statements of its members, none would stand. Every religious persuasion expects to be judged by its published standards, or by its doctrines taught by authority, by the general results of its labors, the triumph of its principles and the worthiness of its members; Masonry asks no other test."

Mr. Barlow very clearly intimated that Masons hold that Masonry is sufficient to salvation; we replied by asking why, if such was the case, the young man at Dundee applied for admission to the church? He did not consider Masonry sufficient for salvation, and the church acted upon his profession of faith. We also challenged Mr. Barlow "to produce a single Masonic book, approved by any Masonic authority" that Masonry claims to be a religion. He has not even alluded to the one nor the other.

A few words, and we are done with this subject. Before a man can become a Mason, he must profess a belief in God, the Creator and Governor of the Universe, to whom all intelligent beings are accountable. After that Masonry never meddles with a Mason's belief, religious views, duties or preferences, but leaves every one to remain where he is, or go where he chooses. And as Masonry forces none, but is tolerant even to all opinions, so it protects and encourages all Christian Masons, opens the way, enlarges the doors of utterance, and gives audience which could never be reached in any other way. Anti-Masons often say, that church members will stay in a lodge rather than in a church, if the alternative is presented. This is undoubtedly true. The very genius of Christianity and of American citizenship justify it. Americans deny the right to use force or violence in matters of religion. No true man will be forced to leave his lodge for his church, no more than any true man would be forced to leave his church to retain his place in his lodge.

ADDITIONAL.

When we closed the foregoing article we supposed that Mr. Barlow had, in his way, answered our article in the June TROWEL. But we find in the Cynosure of August 23, another article which would cover four or more columns of THE TROWEL. In this, he brings forward extracts from books, and addresses, most of which are well enough but none of them prove any such thing as he asserts.

In the outset, we assert that Masonry is no such a system of religion as is taught by the Orthodox denominations of Christians; by liberal Christians; by Roman Catholics, or by the Hebrews. It is not anti-Christian or anti-Hebrew. Masonry is religious in both a Hebrew and Christian sense to that extent in which all good men agree, by whatever name or denomination distinguished. We will now dispose of the matter of vocal utterances. He says that we know Masons do say that Masonry is sufficient to save them. He asserts what he cannot prove, and when a man makes such an assertion upon mere matters of fact, he discredits himself.

He alludes to an oration delivered by Dr. Robbins whom he designates Right Worthy. Masonry has no such title. The quotation from Dr. Robbins so far as statement goes is correct as the doctrine of Masons. His inference is his own. It is not indorsed anywhere.

If it proves Mr. Barlow's position, then does Dr. Caswell prove the whole Baptist denomination to be Free Communion.

The beautiful sentiments uttered by Dr. Oliver and quoted by Mr. Barlow, make no pretence that Masonry is a Christian system, and no man held to the doctrine of redemption more fully than he. In no utterance of Dr. Oliver can a line be found which makes Masonry sufficient to salvation.

The remark in Sickels' Monitor in regard to what the soul requires is distinctly stated to be a want of conception by the author. If that proves that Masonry is sufficient to salvation, then do the utterrances of Henry Ward Beecher prove Dr. Blanchard to be a Unitarian.

He comes now to our remarks about a work entitled "Mysteries of Masonry." There is not a word of indorsement by us. We said it was "candid in statement." Mr. Barlow is candid in saying that we know that Masons say that Masonry is adequate to salvation. And yet he cannot prove it. Several other arguments we answer, by saying that every thing good is from the Divine hand. The word divine has different meanings, as used among Masons; it is usually an adjective, indicating something good or excellent. Mr. Barlow quotes from the book the following:

"To teach the truth, and inculcate the precepts of charity for the sake of a divine life are the sole ends and objects of Masonry." Let our readers understand that we have indorsed nothing uttered in the book. No word written by us can be tortured into any such meaning. Our theological record is pretty well pronounced. The book quoted by Mr. Barlow is generally condemned. THE TROWEL readers always understand that what we do not indorse we do not approve. But they understand also, that we are willing that Masons and everybody else shall read and judge for themselves. Mr. Barlow treats the word Divine Life as referring to a future state. If that is his meaning, what use does he make of the word divine in Prov. XVI. 10.?

In regard to the status of the books and works quoted by Mr. Barlow, Oliver's works were very popular in England; they are not regarded as authority in this country. But the memory of a good man like him, whose life was embellished with good deeds, lives in the affectionate remembrance of his brethren.

Sickles' Monitor is authority to a certain extent. Mr. Barlow might be surprised to learn that the author in religious matters is like unto himself. The book entitled "Mysteries of Masonry" is not indorsed by any Masonic authority. The "Mystic Temple" was a short-lived paper, and was no more authority than any other Masonic paper. We thank Mr. Barlow for so kindly speaking of us as authority. We beg leave, however, to say, that as editor, what we say goes for what it is worth; that as Grand Master, our functions are administrative and judicial; that Masonry has laws either written or memorized, by which its initiates are governed; that it is our duty to explain and enforce them, and to administer the general matters of Masonry by its own rules. The Grand Master has no power or authority beyond what is conferred upon him by the representative body of the Craft, and to that body he is accountable and responsible.

When the Grand Lodge of Illinois says yes or no upon any matter; when it indorses any book, or ennunciates any creed, that is authority within its own jurisdiction.

Orations, addresses, essays and the like are fugitive, transient, and pass simply upon their merits. Books are to be regarded according to the soundness of their authors, and the indorsements of competent bodies. The Westminister catechism is authority in the Presbyterian church. The New Hampshire confession of Faith is fair authority among Baptists. The Book of Common Prayer, is Episcopalian authority. So is the Book of Discipline among the Methodists. No other works among these sects are authoritative, unless in agreement with their respective standards. The Ancient Charges, Old Constitutions as far as applicable, our local Constitutions and laws, are Masonic authority.

In religious matters, Mr. Barlow, like ourself, acknowledges but one infallible standard, the Bible; but one infallible judge; and what we do in Masonry, or in anything else, must pass before Him. Mr. Barlow intimates that he prays for us. It is the duty of every man to pray for all men. It is said that the prayer of a righteous man availeth much. According to Mr. Barlow's ethics, if an anti-Mason writes to a lady, that if her husband joins the Masons he is a lost soul, then that is an authoritative statement, and a part of Mr. Barlow's creed. If the Cynosure says that the term "Worshipful Master" is blasphemy, it is authoritative, and Mr. Barlow must subscribe to it, and as a matter of course, must admit that the prefix, Reverend, is blasphemous, and this admitted, that Doctor of Divinity sinks quite, if not fully, to the rank of an unpardonable sin. So much prayer for us, as duty may require from Mr. Barlow, we hope he will utter; it may be well for him however to examine into his faith, for whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

The Missouri Imbroglio.

We had resolved to say as little about the Grand Lodge Hall matter in St. Louis, as possible. But we have many subscribers in that State, and our cotemporaries are saying so much about it that we must say something. We therefore premise by saying, that grand lodge accommodations were much needed in St. Louis; that the Masonic bodies there needed them, and that the property, if not remunerative now, must become so at no very distant day. Now to the points in controversy.

The Masonic Hall Association bought ground and erected a valuable building in St. Louis; we believe the grand lodge owned some of the stock. We are not advised as to the actual cost, but believe that it was in the neighborhood of $300,000. It was proposed to the Grand Lodge to assume $200,000 indebtedness, and when paid up to be a two-third owner of the stock. The record shows that this proposition was accepted. Thirteen lodges met in convention at Palmyra, May 11, and squarely denounced the measure as unauthorized by law and dangerous, etc., and much stress is laid upon the late vote, and a diminshed representation. It is also alleged that the vote of one lodge is recorded both ways; that the vote of one lodge not represented was recorded, and that the measures did not receive majority of the votes lodges.

We have objected before to this convention, as we do now. But every lodge has a right to express its mind; to instruct its representatves and correspond with its sister subordinates. This has been done by Saint Joseph Lodge No. 78, which states that the majority for the proposition was but six; that five of said six votes were given by a second hand verbal proxy; that taxation belongs to the by-laws, and that resolutions are not by-laws; that no reflections are cast upon those voting, but the representatives are instructed to vote for the repeal of the resolutions adopting the proposition of the association.

A circular embodying the action of the lodge was sent to all the lodges; so also of the action of the Palmyra convention. The association states that the matter was referred to by the Grand Master in his address sent to a committee on the first day; that the committee labored hard the second day; that the election occupied the third day; that the report was made at two o'clock the fourth day, and that it is the fault of those who went away that the vote was no larger. A pretty good showing is made on behalf of the property, and a strong indorsement entered for the Grand Secratary.

The Grand Secretary steps in strong. It seems that Bro. Foss, representative of 28, says he did not vote; the grand Secretary says that when his lodge was called, some one voted aye; Bro. Foss says no one was authorized to vote for him, but the Grand Tyler says that he was authorized by Bro. Foss to vote aye, and that when he told Bro. Foss of the result, he was much gratified. Here is a grave question of veracity; the voting by verbal proxy could not be allowed over here. This remark does not apply to Grand Secretary Gouley. He heard the aye; no one objected or questioned, and he acted rightly in recording it. We cannot see where any of these matters affect Bro. Gouley, except the voting twice, and that is an error any grand secretary is liable to make. In a close vote, the yeas and nays should be read for correction.

Upon the supposition that the rule in regard to proxies is the same in Missouri as here, we are forced to say, that the vote for Bro. Foss is illegal, which leaves but one majority; that if 215 voted aye, and 245 voted no instead of 215, then the vote still remains at one majority; counting 215 both ways, and leaving 245 out, leaves one majority; and if 245 did not vote, the majority is four. The explanation of Bro. Gouley is satisfactory to us; but the proxy matter admits of no palliation or excuse. So much for the controversy. The legal part of the matter is for the Missouri brethren to settle among themselves. We hope there will be good faith, forbearance, patience, and a mutual, hearty adjustment of all differences in such a manner as will be creditable and honorable to the brethren of the mighty State of Missouri.

The Object of the Ballot.

We have written much about the ballot heretofore, but recent correspondence induces us to present the object of the ballot from a different stand-point.

We request our readers, to peruse a few prelimary remarks before we reach the main question. Every brother who proposes a candidate naturally desires his election. He would not propose him if he thought rejection would follow. The petition is referred, and the report is favorable. So far all is smooth. But one black ball is deposited. Without thought, in a spirit of irritation, nearly every brother is ready to say, "this is certainly a mistake, and the ballot ought to pass again." The Master is of the same opinion, and again a like result. The brethren are ready to exclaim, "I cast a white ball."

At some regular meeting a candidate is rejected. By and by, the brother who rejected the candidate, finds himself mistaken, and desires to correct his ballot. Here it is contended, that the Master should declare the candidate elected. On the contrary the ballot should be spread again. An objection is made that it subjects the candidate to the liability of another rejection. Precisely. This brings us to the object of the ballot. It is not to elect a candidate, for that could be determined by show of hands, or common consent. The object of the ballot is to ascertain, if, among all the members of the lodge, there is one who objects. And this is done in the only form admitting perfect secresy. And it is as much the intention of the ballot to screen the voter as it is to find an objection. This is clearly deducible from the law itself, which provides that if there be two negatives, the Master shall declare the result, but if there be but one, then the Master may pass the box again to guard against a mistake. The Worshipful Master is the sole judge of the propriety of the ballot a second time, and whatever the result may be, he must declare the ballot.

It is not the province of any brother to make any remark; this may seem hard; but, it is clear, that whoever speaks from the floor, in some way, in a greater or less degree, exposes his ballot, which he has no right to do; it is the duty of every brother to conceal his vote by every means in his power when a negative vote is cast.

But one says if a report is favorable, the candidate ought to be elected. We concede that most of the rejections are upon unfavorble reports, and that worthy men are occasionally rejected; but, examinations and favorable reports are often matters of form or slight inquiry, and sometimes after the most rigid scrutiny, some brother may know something which it is not prudent to reveal, and he should say no, in the way provided.

Again we say, the object of the ballot is to ascertain whether there be any objection to a candidate in the most secret and silent manner possible.

Proofs in Favor of Masonry.

FURNISHED BY ANTI-MASONS.

Anti-Masons of the Blanchard and Finney kind, while condemning all secret societies, make light of the most of them, give some prominence to Odd-Fellowship, but denounce Freemasonry as the sum of all abominations—as the progenitor of all secret societies, and immeasurably more potent, powerful and evil than all others combined.

This is a testimony in favor of the strength and solidity of the Masonic system.

These men make a stand against Masonry because its members as such, do not incorporate Christianity into their system, and allege among other things, that Masonry has a religion of its own. No one, we imagine, who is candid and well informed, would call the United States a heathen country, or the State of Illinois an idolatrous commowealth. Every body knows that a majority of the people of the United States, of which such men as Messrs. Finney and Blanchard form a part—that two-thirds of the people of the State of Illinois, are in profession or theory, Christians. Neither of the Constitutions of the United States or of the State of Illinois, recognize Christianity; while that of Illinois acknowledges Almighty God, and looks to Him for a blessing upon itself. It stands as Masonry stands in that respect. We do not hear them denouncing the country as a heathen land, but we suppose they are grateful for the toleration which permits them to worship as they choose, and to propagate their sentiments as they please. They make no objection to citizenship in this country; they exercise its rights; they contend for and defend them in our courts, and yet, if their doctrine be true in regard to Masonry, the United States is a heathen land, and Illinois an infidel state; for, Masonry distinctly says that all Masons should be of that religion in which all men agree; it does not stop with that general idea, but at once defines what that religion is by specifying that Masons are "to be good men and true, or men of honor and honesty." That is the religion which Masonry specifies, together with a belief in God, and a general observance of the moral law. All this is religion, but not a religious system, for the exception is made in the same charge, that the particular opinions of Masons by whatever denominations and persuasions they may be distinguished, are to be left to themselves. Here is the same acknowledgement of God that is made by the state, a definite belief as far as it goes, and the same tolerance allowed by our National and States Constitutions. If Masonry is an idolatrous or infidel system, then this country is a heathen country, and Illinois an infidel State, and these men are willing and applauding participators. To such a conclusion no sane man can come. These men are not aiders and abettors of idolatry or infidelity, neither is the country idolatrous or anti-Christian, but the reverse. Upon the same principle Masonry is not idolatrous or anti-Christian, but tolerant of all opinions. The same result is to be reached by tracing the acts of these very men in other matters. They prove therefore by their lives, acts and teachings outside of their anti-Masonry, that Masonry teaches religion as the State teaches it, and is tolerant of all opinions.

These men teach and proclaim, that Masons will shield, and aid their brethren upon the bench and in the jury box; that they will give false testimony, and do all sorts of unlawful things to help a brother gain a point in law. We will show the falsity of that by sepcifications. The faculty of Wheaton College had a rule by which no Mason could attend it as a student. This was resisted. How the matter went in the circuit court we do not remember, but our impression is that Judge Wilson presided, and that the college under his ruling was sustained. Judge Wilson is a Mason, and we are informed that President Blanchard voted for his re-election. At all events, the college was sustained in the Supreme Court, two of the judges having been Masters of lodges, and one of whom must have concurred in the decision, as probably both did. We were State's Attorney in the tenth circuit. An old and very dear friend, Judge Lanphere of Galesburg, had been elected county judge. He was of the same political party with us. He was a Mason of high rank. He was a most worthy, estimable gentleman. It became our duty to show that he lacked a few days of being eligible; we did our duty, and he was ousted, but again elected.

Now we challenge every anti-Mason in Illinois to show a single instance where a Mason ever received any favor from our hands, of an improper character in any judicial or administrative position we ever held. Nor do we believe that any such thing can be charged against Masons, truthfully, in Illinois or elsewhere.

Thousands upon thousands of Masons, selected for learning, ability and judgment are holding judicial and administrative offices all over this land. Now let anti-Masons specify. Let them point out these cases of injustice. Let them take the four Supreme Judges who are Masons, to commence on. They are men whose judicial characters are without a stain. All four of them have long years been trial judges. Unless these men who charge so foul things upon Masons in judicial position, can specify the cases in our courts where Masons preside or prosecute, their charges fall to the ground and with them all other charges whatever. We assume in the start that not the shadow of any such thing can be proven against our judiciary, and until specified and proven, the men who utter and publish such slanders, prove the judgment of the people correct in choosing for their public servants such men as are competent and worthy. We could pursue the subject further, but we wait for a response to what we have already written.

Visitations.

On Friday evening, August 25, being the time of the regular meeting of Schiller Lodge No. 335, Peoria, we dropped into the old familiar hall, where we were made very welcome by Past Masters Dr. Niglas and Bro. Ullman; Bro. Singer, the W. M., and other brethren of the lodge. Many visitors were present from other lodges. The most attractive feature of the evening was the presence of R. W. Bro. JOHN R. CRANDALL, of Sacramento, California, one of the early Masters, (if not the first) of Temple Lodge No. 46, and Deputy Grand Master in 1847–8. About that time he went to California, where he has since resided and for twenty years has presided over a lodge, and has served his Grand Lodge as Deputy. His remarks were interesting and eloquent. Short addresses were made by Dr. Niglas, Bro. Rounsville and Bro. Ullman. We made calls upon Breth. Wells, Niglas, Keyon, Rounsville Tart and others.

The Peoria House is systematically and well kept by Col. Dean, who distinguished himself in the service, and was formerly known as a dealer in regalia.

On Saturday, we dropped in upon our old home at Knoxville, called upon Breth. Eiker, Sample, Stevens and many old friends. Among others we met Father J. F. Mason, who says that he is eighty-seven years old, and has been 66 years a Mason. He is quite feeble. Saturday evening, we were taken in charge by Bro. Johnson, W. M. of Trinity Lodge at Monmouth, and entertained by him and his amiable wife and daughter until the time of lodge meeting. The notice was short, but we found a goodly company assembled in an elegant, arched and spacious lodge-room, with the "modern attachments." Bro. Johnson presided.

Judge Porter, W. M. of 37, Bro. Stansbury, High Priest, Dr. Brewer, Commander of Consistory, and several notable brethren were in attendance.

After some remarks from us, Judge Porter made a speech worthy of the man, and of the Fraternity he represents. Then a song from a Bro. Scotsman, that made the welkin ring, and the pulses throb. Then the usual questioning. With an old friend, Dr. Brewer, and dear Knoxville faces, his wife, daughter and sisters, we spent fast fleeting hours, during which much of our lives passed in review, and on Monday morning, homeward bound.

Falsehood Met.

It is asserted by anti-Masons that the higher degrees, the more secret and inaccessible arcana of Masonry, binds its members to matters and things which tend to and do govern the whole world of Masonry, and that thousands of Masons go on unsuspectingly of any wrong, while in fact they are tied hand and foot, and in some singular and unseen way are made to do wrong, sanction wrong, and uphold it. The editor of this paper has taken twelve degrees in what is known among Masons as the York Rite of Free and Accepted Masons, and, not including the first three degrees, he has taken thirty degrees of the Scottish, or Ancient and Accepted Rite. In no part of any of these forty-two degrees is there any license for any wrong, disobedience, evasion, or disregard of divine law, legislative enactments, common law, judicial decisions, or any other rule, usage, custom or constitution established or concurred in for the government of men; on the contrary, throughout the whole obedience to divine and human laws is constantly taught, urged, and enforced, and Masons are held to a more strict accountability among themselves than others, because the whole Fraternity regards the "good of Masonry," which is only another term for the good of mankind. Masonry being "a system of morality," and not a system of religion, does not hold its members to the rigid rules prescribed by churches, and yet holds them to more rigid rules than are prescribed by the laws of the land. For all this, anti-Masons professing Christianity, while denouncing Masonry as evil, corrupt and devilish, and Masons as traitors, liars and perjured scoundrels, with marked inconsistency, prescribe a measure of discipline for Masonic lodges never enforced in the churches themselves; while anti-Masons who do not profess Christianity denounce Masonry as a system interfering with personal liberty, and prescribing a code of morals to which they will not submit. Unwittingly both sides unintentionally admit the value and worth of the Masonic system.

Special Prizes.

Being desirous of increasing the circulation of The Trowel, I offer the following prizes for small lists of subscribers.

Many lodges and other Masonic organizations, are in need of some of the below mentioned articles, but have not the money to buy them. Any member who is interested, can, at a lodge meeting, get enough brethren to subscribe for the paper, to secure the particular thing that is needed, and thereby save drawing money from the treasury.

Brethren sending lists on these terms, will confer a favor by always mentioning that the club was raised to draw a prize, and also state what one they want; this will prevent neglect in sending what is wanted, which is liable to happen at times when I am very busy.

For one subscription and $1.25, fifty blanks, any kind that I deal in.

For every additional subscription and $1.25 fifty blanks.

Two subscriptions and $2.50 either one of the following articles: Special Help for W. M. Sec. or S. D. one set of Gavels, one Lodge Diploma.

Three subscriptions and $3.75, one copy of either of the following books, Cross' Masonic Chart, Simons' Jurisprudence, Mackey's Mystic Tie, Pierson's Traditions of Masonry, Signet of King Solomon, Revelations of a Square, Theocratic Freemasonry, Spirit of Masonry, Masonic Persecutions, Symbol of Glory, Secretary's Memorandum book.

Four subscriptions and $5.00, one Regulation book, one Lodge or Chapter Biographical Register.

Five subscriptions and $6.25, one Mackey's Lexicon, or Masonic Dictionary, one Visitor's Register, for Lodge or Chapter, one Black Book.

Six subscriptions and $7.50 one No. 1 size Record book.

Eight subscriptions and $10.00 one Secretary's or Treasurer's Ledger, new style, for Lodge or Chapter,

Ten subscriptions and $12.50 one No. 3 size Record.

Twelve subscriptons and $15.00, one Seal, valued at $8.00. When a seal is wanted please write plainly what you want engraved upon it.

Thirteen subscriptions and $16.25, one seal value $9.00.

Fifteen subscriptions and $18.75, one seal value $10.00, or one No. 2 size Record.

The Gavels, Record books, Ballot boxes, and Seals, will be sent by Express, the charges to be paid by the persons to whom they are sent.

All the other articles will be sent by mail at my expense.

Benjamin Brown French.

This good man, exemplary Christian, and zealous Mason, departed this life at Washington, Aug. 13, aged nearly seventy years. In the July number we stated the main incidents of his Masonic life. The whole Masonic Fraternity with the citizens in general did honor to his memory, and his funeral is said to have been the largest that ever occurred in Washington. On the 23d of August a Lodge of Sorrow was held under the auspices of the Supreme Council Scottish Rite, S. J. of which the deceased was the second officer.

Albert Pike presided, the Assistant Episcopal Bishop of Maryland officiated as Chaplain, and Gen. Pike and Dr. A. G. Mackey, Grand Sec. Gen., delivered orations. The services were of the most solemn and appropiate character.

The deceased was an active Episcopalian, his heart was full of benevolence, and his hands were at work in every matter of charity and beneficence.

Unmasonic.

There are very few men however fortunate who do not sometimes find webs and complications entangling them, from which it is difficult to extricate themselves, and when unusual, but honest and honorable measures are necessary to preserve credit, insure solvency, and maintain personal honor. Even more than this; one may be in a position where such measures, though honorable and honest, may be distasteful to him and his friends, but when the alternative is presented of honor or dishonor, credit or bankruptcy, there should be no hesitation. Such has happened to us, and a few good friends have helped us in sore need, and we have preserved honor and credit, and hope our house is reasonably solvent. Good brethren, if you had struggled, worked, and sacrificed to reach such an end, would you regard it as friendly, honorable, humane or Masonic to arraign you as wrong-doers? It is not pleasant to dwell upon this, especially in view of the intent of such accusations, and with the above bare allusion, we dismiss the matter.

Please Notice.

The Grand Lodge will meet at Farwell Hall, Chicago, on the first Tuesday in October next, at ten o'clock A. M. It is important that every lodge be represented by its Master, if practicable, and if not, then by one of the Wardens. Proxies will probably be admitted as contemplated by the By-Laws, yet it is a matter of question, whether proxies are permissible under the Constitution. The question will be brought forward by the Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence for consideration. Every one will see the necessity of being represented by the Master or a Warden.

The matter of District Grand Lodges, Masonic Temple, location of the Grand Lodge, various amendments to the By-Laws, and matters which will be verbally communicated, will come up for consideration.

It is estimated that the session will occupy four days at least. It is important that every lodge be represented when the Grand Lodge is opened, and remain represented until its close.

Corner-stone at Freeport.

The corner-stone of the new court-house of Stephenson county, was laid by the Masonic Fraternity, Aug. 16, R. W. Bro. L. L. Munn, P. G. H. P. acting Grand Master. Neven's Chicago band discoursed the music. The Freeport Zouaves lent interest to the occasion. The Masonic bodies in the county were out in force. The Odd Fellows, Turners and Fire Department did their share. Rev. F. A. Read acted as Chaplain.

Past Grand Master Turner was the orator of the day, and in well chosen words, the old citizens were made to live their early times over again. The whole affair was pleasant, everybody was gratified, and the recollections will long be fresh with the young folks of good Stephenson county.

Nice Pears.

Our good brother, W. Jeptha Dudley, W. M. of Bodley Lodge No. 1, at Quincy, has been pleased to send us a box of large, unblemished, excellent pears, for which he has the thanks of editor, publisher, wife and family; no fruit could be more acceptable, for who can resist a luscious pear?

Grand Meetings.

The Grand Chapter of R. A. Masons will meet in Chicago, on the first Friday in October—John M. Pearson, Godfrey, G. H. P., James H. Miles, B. 5984, Chicago, G. Secretary.

The Grand Council Royal and Select Masters will meet in Chicago, on the first Thursday in October.

The Grand Lodge of Missouri meets on the second Monday in October, the Grand Lodge of Kansas on the third Monday in October.

Spirit of Masonic Exchanges.

Kentucky Freemason, July.—Bro. Hodges, senior editor, Republican, indorses Bro. Henderson, junior editor, Democrat, for Superintendent of Public Instruction. Then Bro. Henderson returns thanks for the Templar Orders conferred on him by Louisville Commandery.

The Widows' and Orphans' Home is rapidly progressing. The statement of value is, for grounds, $20,000; buildings, $27,000; ladies' fund, $7,200. Total, $54,200. One wing is being rapidly completed, and will cost when completed and furnished, $40,000.

M. W. Bro. I. T. Martin, P. G. M., died in Cynthiana, June 29. He was a native of Pennsylvania, was elected Grand Master in 1864, and State Senator in 1866.

Courier, July 31, Aug. 7.—Gen. Grand High Priest Austin has lately revived a chapter at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, and has granted a dispensation for a Royal Arch Chapter at Shanghae, China.

The editor pitches into the anti-Memphisians. Grand Master Anthon approves warmly, of the movement to hold a pic-nic for the benefit of the Hall and Asylum Fund.

Review, June and July.—Sir Knight Davis, E. C., Reed Commandery, Dayton, Ohio, has been presented with an elegant sword. Adrian, Mich., has three lodges, one chapter, one council, and one commandery. In speaking of the anti-Masonic convention recently held at Cincinnati, the editor says: "Bro. Reynolds, don't send any more such 'scallawags' to our city from Illinois. Most of the leading members, we believe, were from that State, and of all the curiosities that were ever packed on the prairies, those 'antediluvians,' as some one called them, are the greatest."

Pretty good for the land of Tom Corwin. Let us assure our brother that we had no hand in sending them, but even if it were true that we had, they were the very best of the kind.

Charles McCue, the son of a Mason, was initiated in Ireland, in 1775, and died May 5, at Ingersoll, Canada, aged 112 years, 10 months and 25 days.

The editor is appropriately indignant at the treatment of General Robert Anderson, now an invalid in Europe.

The Grand Master of Ohio says he has arrested no charters of lodges for working on Sunday, for the very good reason that he knew of no such cases. He took good care to add that he would do so if occasion offered.

Our Toledo Templar fraters had a grand time awhile ago at Put-in-Bay.

The editor, wasting rapidly in the "Old Chair," is sighing

"For a pleasure trip up to the Poles."

Michigan Freemason, July.—This is No. 1 vol. 2, and is published at Kalamazoo, Mich., by Chaplin & Ihling. Monthly, at $2 per annum. The article by H. M. L. is sound, but pardon our asking if it would not be better to avoid the necessity for such?

Sir Knight John H. Hoffman, a member of Peninsular Commandery No. 8, was married, at Kalamazoo, Mich., in the commandery room, Sir Knights in line, June 27, to Miss Lizzie Rollins, by Rev. Dr. Foster, assisted by Rev. Mr. Watts. The whole affair was elegant.

The Freemason's Magazine, Boston, August.—The Colorado brethren at Denver and vicinity, had a fine celebration at Denver, June 24, at which time the corner-stone of the new depot was laid, and an address delivered by Bishop Randall. There were three hundred brethren in the procession, and the Templars performed escort duty on black horses.

A Provincial Grand Lodge has been formed in New South Wales, subordinate to the Grand Lodge of Ireland.

Masonic Mirror, August.—The Boston Pilot is given as authority that all Freemasons belonging to the Catholic Church are to be expelled, by decree of the Ecumenical Council. Why then is Napoleon retained in the bosom of the church?

The August number completes the first volume.

Freemason (St. Louis), August.—A grand fair is to be held under the auspices of the ladies in Kansas City, Mo., in October, in aid of a Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home.

In some remarks upon "War," the editor says that Mike McCoole could have crushed Henry Clay with a blow of his fist. Not quite; Mr. Clay was a good pugilist in self-defense, and has laid more than one man on his back.

Record of Western India, June.—Bro. James Gibbs is appointed District Deputy Grand Master of Bombay. Symbolic, Royal Arch, and Templar Masonry are prosperous in Bombay and Lanlowee, and Symbolic Masonry flourishes in British Burmah, Secunderabad, and Jubbulpore.

Masonic Record, August.—The Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland has 123 chapters, and 23 Mark Lodges. One of these chapters is at Smyrna and one at the Cape of Good Hope.

From the Bauhutte it is ascertained that a Grand Lodge has been formed in Hungary, Bro. Frank Pulsky, G. M. We extract for another place, remarks made by Bro. Wills. The editor says we are interesting ourselves about Cuban Masons; how much, brother?

The Freemasons' Journal, July.—If the statement in regard to the transactions in the Grand Lodge of Canada at its session recently held at Toronto, be true, then, it seems to us, passion and not reason ruled the hour. We do not justify the formation of the Grand Lodge of Quebec; we condemn it decidedly, but we are satisfied that certain influences in the Grand Lodge of Canada were and are averse to the fair consideration of the needs and rights of the Fraternity in the provinces or Quebec and Ontario, both before and since the organization of the Quebec party, and recognition, which might have been avoided by fair treatment, may become a necessary measure of justice.

Home Advocate, August.—The Grand Lodge of Indiana postponed the question of recognizing the Grand Lodge of Quebec until the next meeting.

Martin H. Rice was re-elected Grand Master; Geo. W. Porter, was elected Deputy; W. T. Clark, S. G. W.; Christian Fetta, J. G. W.; and John M. Bramwell, of Indianapolis, Grand Secretary. The Advocate is now owned by Grand Master Rice, who is assisted as editor by Past Grand Masters Hacker and Fravell, and by Hon. John Caven. The latter is a modest gentleman, and was several years Mayor of Indianapolis; in real ability, we feel sure that he has few superiors.

Voice of Masonry, August.—Dr. Franklin willed to the city of Boston one thousand pounds in 1791; it amounted to $133,494.36 on the first day of January last, and is to continue increasing to the end of one hundred years; then one hundred thousand pounds is to be expended for public works, the remainder to continue on interest another hundred years, when a portion is to go to the city, and the remainder to the State.

St. John's Lodge No. 3, Glasgow, Scotland is one hundred and twelve years old.

It seems that some feeling has grown out of our appointment of Bro. Bailey on the Committee on Correspondence. We appointed Bro. Rounseville, Chairman, because of his learning and acknowledged ability; Bro. Bagby, because he is W. M. of one of our oldest lodges, and is an able man; and we appointed Bro. Bailey, because he is the editor of a Masonic journal, and, with the other two, is an honorable man.

The editor takes strong ground against District Grand Lodges.

The Evergreen, July.—In a letter from Bro. Luse, we learn that Gov. John Bigler, of California, was once sick with fever in an Indian wigwam in the Wabash country, where he was recognized as a Mason and was lovingly attended, and not suffered to depart until he was thoroughly well. We knew Bro. Bigler afterward as editor of a paper at Mt. Sterling.

In a lengthy notice of Hon. Alfred E. Ames, M. D., of Minneapolis, Minn., it appears that in the winter of 1842-3, both Dr. Ames and the editor the of Evergreen were students in Rush Medical College—Dr. Ames being a married man and twelve years older than the then sedate boy, now the sedater editor of the Evergreen! It also appears that Dr. Guilbert's father was the first Master of the first lodge in Chicago—Lafayette No. 18. We might have suspected this before, but there was no u in the name, only i. It is not always best for i to be alone; it is often better for u and i to live together. Dr. Ames presided over four lodges in Illinois, was both Representative and Senator, and then went to Minnesota, where he founded a lodge, chapter and commandery; was Surgeon in the U. S. Army; member of the Constitutional Convention, and has been Grand Master, Grand High Priest, and Grand Commander.

Dr. Guilbert was initiated, passed and raised in Union Lodge No. 78, at Waukegan, in 1851, and appeared in Grand Lodge the same year as representative, and was immediately appointed S. G. Deacon, pro tem. The returns of the following year show him demitted from No. 78, and a member of Elgin No. 117. Of the latter, he was S. W. in 1853, and W. M. in 1854. He demitted soon after and removed to Dubuque. No man has impressed himself more thoroughly upon Masonry in Iowa than he.

The editor may rest assured that while we occupy the Grand East, any Masonic subject which the representatives desire to discuss in Grand Lodge will have a full hearing. The created assumes no power over the creator.

The Freemason's Magazine, London July 16, 23, 30, and August 13.—The rejection of twenty-five candidates out of seventy-three propositions in Washington Territory, is mentioned as worthy of imitation in England.

The annual summer fete and distribution of prizes in the "Royal Masonic Institution for Boys," was held at the school grounds and buildings, Wood Green, Tottenham, July 8. A large number of prizes were distributed, the attendance was large, and all passed off pleasantly.

At the meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Surrey, ten pounds ten shillings was voted to the Boys' School, and a like sum, one-half to the aged Freemasons' fund, and half to the Widows' fund.

The Provincial Grand Chapter of Yorkshire, was held at Whitby, July 6.

The Provincial Grand Conclave K. T. for Lancashire, met at Bolton, June 3. Five pounds was voted to Sir Knight Ledward, a Mason of fifty years standing, and the oldest Mason in the province.

The Lodge of Benevolence met July 21, and appropriated, in the name of the Grand Lodge, the sum of one hundred pounds to cases deserving assistance. The Provincial Grand Lodge of Cornwall met at Truro, July 19. The representation was very large. Sixty-six pounds were voted—20 to Widows' Fund, 20 to the Cornwall Annuity fund, 5 to a widow, and 21 to the Boys' and Girls' Schools.

The Provincial Grand Lodge of Devon, met at Tiverton, July 21, and contributed 20 guineas to the Boys' School, 20 to the Girls' School, and 20 to the Fortiscue Annuity fund. The P. G. Lodge of Kent met at Dartford, June 24. The sum of 140 guineas was granted to the Girls' School, twenty pounds to the female fund, five to one brother and twenty to an aged member. The P. G. L. of Suffolk met at Aldeburg, July 26, and distributed charties as follows: five pounds to a distressed brother; twenty-one pounds, half to the Boys' and half to the Girls' school, and ten pounds, half to the Institution for aged men, and half to that for aged women.

The Supreme Grand Chapter of England met in London Aug. 3. The Earl de Grey and Ripon was installed as Chief. Charters were granted for four new chapters.

The editors take decided ground against the Quebec party.

Dispatch Aug. 7, 14, 21.—At a meeting to consider the expedency of having a pic-nic to aid in raising funds for the Masonic Temple, held Aug. 13, 55 lodges were represented. Charles Roome, D. D. G. M., presided, A committee of 34 was appointed, Bro. Simons, Chairman. The Courier, Pomeroy's Democrat, and the Landmark, agree to labor earnestly to make the matter a success. The time fixed for the grand pic-nic is Tuesday, Oct. 4, at Funk's Park, foot of sixty-second street, East River.

The Freemason London, July 16, 23, 30, and Aug. 6. 13,—Mention is made of the death of Stephen Blair, Prov. G. M. for Lancashire; his funeral was very large. Also, of the death of Jacob Christian Cosmos Brastnep, Grand Master of Denmark, and Minister of Justice and Worship.

Freemasonry is progressing in Egypt.

On the 22d of March a Freemason's hall was consecrated at Adelaide, Australia.

The late Stephen Blair, P. G. M., East Lancashire, bequeathed twenty thousand pounds to build and furnish a hospital for sick persons. In 1735 Sweden was a Masonic Province under England; Couut De Schiffer was P. G. M. The King is now perpetual Grand Master of the Swedish Grand Lodge. The Mark Grand Lodge of England met in London Aug. 2. Measures were inaugurated whereby the Mark Grand Lodge, Order of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, and the Supreme Council of the 33d degree, would recognize each other and in case of expulsion from one body, it should operate as an expulsion from all.

The Ark Mariner's Grand Lodge was annexed to the Mark Grand Lodge.

Freemasonry is flourishing at the Cape of Good Hope.

The Landmark, July 23, 30, and Aug. 6, 13, 20.—A correspondent writes that "like a fool" he loaned a Gen. H. B. Williams, who hailed from Utah, the sum of $20. There are plenty of such men to take the spare funds of lodges and brethren.

R. W. Bro. Jerome Buck, late D. D. G. M. of New York City, was lately serenaded by Mozart Lodge, at the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia.

Keystone Aug. 6, 13, 20, and July 30, mislaid.—Theodore Tilton gets $7,500 for editing the Independent. He ought to have more than that, to ease his conscience in his attempts to overthrow the marriage covenant.

The population of Berlin exceeds 800,000.

Six sons and two daughters of Charles Dickens survive him.

Agreement.—The Quakers of Philadelphia discourage costly weddings, and the Catholics of New England discourage costly funerals.

Objection is made to the pic-nic in New York in aid of the hall fund, on account of the "looks of the thing," and borrowing is suggested as a better course. We don't see it. Our New York brethren mean to own their house when built, and enjoy themselves while building it. When built, there is no debt, no interest. Then we look for a home for the aged, the invalid, and the orphan. On with the picnic!

Tidings, August 1.—The Free Methodists held an anti-Masonic Camp-Meeting at Newfane, N. Y., July 16. It was a pretended Christian meeting with the Christian left out.

Aug. 15.—A good number, but nothing for comment.

Christian Cynosure, Anti-Masonic, July 26, Aug. 9, 23.—The principal editor, in his correspondence makes war on a woman, and styles her a piece of "mouldy virtue." How do you know that, Mr. President?

The President calls upon "friends of God and haters of secret societies," to act as agents for Wheaton College. Are we to understand that a "friend of God" who is not a hater of secret societies, and a "hater of secret societies" who is not a friend of God, are ignored as agents? And how about those friends of God who reject Christ? Are they wanted?

The editor who signs himself "H." takes a general tilt at Masonic editors and writers all round. He accuses the Monthly of trying to imitate the Nasby papers, but thinks it succeeds about as well as the ass did in the fable, when trying to imitate the lap-dog. H. is better in the application of fables than in anything else.

Masonic Review Western India, July.—We regret to learn the death of Bro. Wm. H. Hoff, which occurred at Simla, June 30.

The Hon. James Gibbs was installed District Grand Master July 2.

Home Book, August, has compassed Oliver's Masonic Dictionary from "knee-bent" to "sacred." Bro. Alfred T. Jones is now associated with Bro. Hyneman, in the business of publishing.

Courier, Aug. 14.—The Masonic editor says it is intended that the Masonic pic-nic, in aid of the Hall Fund, shall rival the great fair, at which over $55,000 was realized.

Aug. 21.—It has the best notice of Bro. French we have yet seen.

Mystic Star, August.—Very good. No news.

Evergreen, August.—The dog story has a splendid ending.

In an article in our last number in regard to the names of lodges, while speaking of St. John's Lodge No. 13, a statement is made in regard to St. John the Evangelist and is, credited to the "old lectures." These are not Trowel articles, as the editor supposes, and as thus far they appear to be, but are furnished by a contributor who, for reasons of his own, will stand in the back-ground for awhile. We are surprised at the attack upon Webb, and at the allegation that, as we infer, the "fable," as the editor calls it, first appeared in the Trestle-Board.

On the 28th day of February, 1851, Vitruvious Lodge dedicated a new hall at Wheeling, Cook county, Ill. On that occasion, R. W. Bro. George Davis, who, in 1844, was made a Mason in the lodge of which the editor's father was first Master, delivered an oration on the occasion of said dedication, and dwelt at length upon the character and history of the two Sts. John. He could not have made his draft from the Trestle-Board, for his comments are much more lengthy and circumstantial. Bro. Davis was a man of fine education, character, and accomplishments. He was several years Clerk of the County Court, and his memory is reverenced by every old Mason in Cook, Lake, and DuPage counties. The address may be found commencing on page 173 Vol. X., Moore's Magazine. If the editor will inspect the U. M. L., we think he will find more about it.

The Masonic Record, August.—Felix Grundy, a member of Cumberland Lodge No. 8, Nashville, Tenn., was buried Dec. 20, 1837. Bro. T. A. Thomas, agent of the "Masonic Orphan's Home," reports that he has secured $57,210 subscriptions from fifty-nine lodges.

The death of James Penn, a Mason of distinction in Tennessee and Alabama, is kindly noticed by the Consistory at Memphis, where the illustrious brother formerly resided.

The Grand Lodge of Tennessee has appointed August Schroeder representative to the Grand Lodge of the Three Globes at Berlin, Prussia, which is reciprocated by the appointment of R. W. Bro. Geo. S. Blackie as representative near the Grand Lodge of Tennessee.

Transactions.

New York.—The proceedings are out in good time. The laying of the corner-stone of the new temple, has been already properly noticed in The Trowel. Six hundred and twenty-four lodges were represented.

M. W. Breth. Robert Rusling, G. M. of New Jersey, A. A. Stevenson, G. M. of Canada, B. L. Peters, G. M. of New Brunswick, J. H. Drummond, P. G. M. of Maine, Winslow Lewis, P. G. M. of Massachusetts, D. B. Bruen, P. G. M. of New Jersey, and R. W. Breth. W. E. Pine, D. G. M. of N. J., Robert White, D. G. M. of West Virginia, Wm. Sutton, P. G. S. W. of Mass., R. L. Dodge, G. Treasurer of Arkansas, and N. D. Larner, G. Secretary of District of Columbia, were present as visitors.

The Grand Master made mention of the decease of M. W. Robert D. Holmes, P. G. M., and of W. R. Merriam D. D. G. M. The Grand Master recited a case where for swearing to the truth against a brother, a member was tried and expelled. The Grand Master justly condemned the proceeding, and took especial occasion to say that no law of Masonry exculpated a man from any duty which he owes to God, his country, his neighbor or himself, but that Masonry requires that all such duties shall be done.

Non-intercourse with the Grand Lodge of Hamburg and the Grand Orient of France still continues.

Three hundred and forty thousand dollars have been raised for the temple, and the Grand Master estimated the further sum of $300.000 to be necessary. It is the intention to borrow nothing, keep clear of debt, and to make no delay in building. Three good intentions. We hope and believe they will prove to be realities.

The Grand Master decided that a lodge may lawfully assess its members equally to pay a sum sufficient to satisfy the amount of its existing indebtedness. To this we decidedly demur. The Grand Secretary reported that he had received for dues, warrants, dispensations, certificates, diplomas and seals $65,598, 34.

The G. Treasurer reported debits, $70,467.18; credits, $62.594.69; balance, $7,872.49.

The Grand Secretary reported the assets of the Hall and Asylum fund (temple) at $384,887.58.

Bro. Simons presented the report on correspondence. It fully sustains the writer's reputation, but we are compelled to pass it over.

F. W. Herring presented the portrait of Jas. Herring, deceased, formerly Grand Secretary, and his name was placed upon the painting as the founder of the Hall and Asylum fund.

The committee on the District Grand Lodge system were discharged, and the whole matter was abandoned.

John H. Anthon was elected Grand Master, and James M. Austin, Grand Secretary. The Grand Lecturer reported that he had visited and lectured forty-seven lodges. The sum of $1.305 was distributed in charities.

The salary and clerk hire of Grand Secretary was fixed at $5,000; Grand Treasurer, $500; Grand Pursuivant, $200; Grand Tyler, $200; Translator, $150; Committee on Correspondence $250. Warranted Lodges, 650; Initiations, 6,778; Members 75, 262; increase, 1,183.

Indiana.—We have noticed the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Indiana at considerable length from the published proceedings in the Home Advocate, under the head of "Spirit of Masonic Exchanges."

The sum of $8,121.70 was paid out in milage and per diem. The recapitulation shows 420 lodges; 2,241 initiations; 22,333 members; average 53.

Maine.—Grand lodge met at Portland, May 3. John H. Lynde, Grand Master. Representtatives appeared from 150 lodges.

The Grand Master took decided ground in favor of the Grand Lodge of Quebec. His views were powerfully sustained by Bro. Drummond in his report on correspondence, and concurred in by the grand lodge.

Grand Treasurer's debit, $5,937.60; credit, $4,525.43; balance, $1,412.17; charity fund, $15.600.00; total $17,012.17.

Bro. Drummond reviewed the proceedings of thirty-five grand lodges and the proceedings of Quebec, in his usual masterly manner. "Foreign Flummery" is good.

The following are the footings of Bro. Drummond's enumerations in the United States and British America, viz.:—Grand Lodges, 46; members, 483,535; increase since 1868, 96,133.

The tables in Maine show 154 lodges, 1,130 initiations; average over 7; 14,726 members; average nearly 96.

British Columbia.—We have heretofore alluded to the formation of a new grand lodge in that part of British America lying immediately north of Washington Territory. We now have the proceedings of their second annual meeting, and the organization now proves to be a Provincial Grand Lodge. It met at Victoria, Vancouver's Island, May 1, 1869. Four lodges were represented. I. W. Powell, M. D., Prov. G. Master; H. F. Heisterman, G. Secretary, both of Victoria. Olympia, of Washington Territory, and Victoria are both upon the Gulf of Georgia, and not more than 150 miles apart by water.

Dispensations were reported for six lodges, and ten charters were granted.

The report of the Grand Master upon disciplinary matters was very full. The grand lodge takes a high stand for landmarks, and is thorough in discipline. One brother was expelled where the lodge had failed to administer proper discipline; another for making false charges, and another a W. Master, upon direct trial.

The committee on so much of the Grand Master's address as relates to Quebec, examined the precedents, and compared them with the present condition of Masonic matters in Ontario and Quebec, and in conclusion recommended the recognition of the Quebec party, and upon the motion of Grand Master Tucker, the report was adopted. For ourself we desire to say here, that we look upon the movement as partaking of a rebellious character, upon the organization as irregular, and upon much that has been done by the Quebec party as factious and indefensible. On the contrary there are lodges in the Quebec district which have continued in obedience to the Grand Lodges of England, Scotland and Ireland; sound policy and political division indicate the necessity for a grand lodge in each of the divisions of Ontario and Quebec in which all the lodges should be incorporated; the Grand Lodge of Canada has not met the question fairly, nor manifested any spirit of conciliation, but has resorted to the most doubtful of all Masonic measures, violence and force. All things considered, we have determined to join the movement for recognition.

The recapitulation shows 528 lodges; 1,268 initiations; 11,502 members; average, 22.

Clinton M. Walker, Corsicana, G. Master; T. J. H. Anderson, Deputy; Wm. Bramlett, S. G. Warden; J. F. Miller, J. G. Warden; Geo. H. Bringhurst, Houston, G. Secretary.

Georgia.—The Grand Lodge met at Macon, October 26. Two hundred and eighty lodges represented.

Samuel Lawrence, was elected G. Master; D. N. Austin, Deputy; J. M. Mobley, S. G. Warden; J. I. Wright, J. G. Warden; J. Emmett Blackshear, Macon, G. Secretary.

Illinois State Fair.

The State Agricultural Society will hold its next Annual Fair at Decatur, from Sept. 26, to Oct. 1. Wm. Kile, M. D., Paris, is President, and Hon. John P. Reynolds, of Chicago, Secretary.

President Kile, Ex-Pres. McConnell and Vice Pres. Cobb, Committee of Reception.

The extraordinary success of our Agriculturists and Horticulturists give promise of unusual and rare attractions to all interested in in home prosperity.

We acknowledge a polite complimentary.

Will be Late.

In consequence of the meetings of the Grand Bodies, and in order that our readers may be informed of their transactions, The Trowel for October will be issued from five to ten days later than usual.

Items.

The editor of The Cynosure of May 17, in commenting upon Samuel Adams, says that the first Grand Lodge of Massachusetts was formed in 1733.

If a man lose all else, and four things are left him, he can take no harm—temperance, cheerfulness, truth, and trust in God.

A lady, in reply to some guests that praised the mutton on her table, said: "Oh yes, my husband always buys the best; he is a great epicac."

A Kentucky postmaster gives notice as follows; "After this date, everybody must lick their own postage stamps, for my tongue's give out."

A Piute Indian seized the handles of an electrical machine at Virginia, Nevada, "Hi-you, whoa, you stopee wagon, do 'im small."

A. T. Stewart's income is stated at $1,420,000; W. B. Astor's at $1,273,000; Helmbold's at $182,000; Vanderbilt's at $400,000. We will give all of ours for a hundredth part of either.

Washington and Wyoming.—We have a letter from a correspondent in Washington Ter., requesting that all who write letters to either Territory will please write in full. W. T. means either one. Our exchanges will please notice this.

Many thanks to the Journal of Commerce, St. Louis, for an elegant engraving of the adventurous and enterprising Capt. John J. Roe, deceased.

English Catalogue of Regalia.

We have just received from Bro. Geo. Kenning, of London, a price-list of the articles he deals in. It is printed in blue and gold, and contains exact representations in the different colors of the several articles of regalia and jewels he has for sale, and it is the most complete and beautiful regalia advertising catalogue we have ever seen. Price, including postage to America, one dollar, in gold.

We would advise brethren in America who are interested in regalia, and wish to become acquainted with foreign patterns and fashions, to send for one of these catalogues.

Address, George Kenning, 2, 3, and 4, Little Britain, London, E. C., England.

Mistake.

It seems that Macomb and Kile Lodges did not consolidate after all. It was supposed to be done, but suppositions are not facts. Bro. Irvin did not say that the consolidation had taken place, but neither he nor we at the time had any reason to suppose otherwise.

Impostor.

NAPLES, Ill., Aug. 6, 1870.

H. G. Reynolds, Esq., G. M., Springfield, Ill.:

DEAR SIR AND BRO.—For the good of the Fraternity in general, I send you the inclosed letter which, with the following facts, will explain itself: A few weeks since, a young man calling himself E. J. BALL, and claiming to belong to Friendship Lodge No. —, Holly Springs, Miss., came to me and through his representations, obtained from me the sum of $5.00. Said BALL is about 6 feet high, brown hair, about 27 years of age, rather slim, and a very smooth and fair talker. His operations appear to be numerous, and a notice from you through the columns of THE TROWEL, will, I hope, guard against further impositions on the Craft by this scoundrel.

Respectfully and fraternally yours,

H. ABBOTT, S. W.,
Naples Lodge No. 68.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., Aug. 4, 1870.

DEAR SIR—Your favor of 30th ultimo to hand. In reply, I have to say that there is no such lodge as Friendship Lodge here or in the State of Mississippi, nor do I know anything of E. J. BALL. The lodge here is Holly Springs Lodge No. 35, and we have never had a man by the name of E. J. Ball belonging to this lodge. He is an impostor and swindler, who seems to be doing a wholesale business in your State, as within the last six weeks or two months I have received four or five letters from different parts of the State, making the same inquiry that you do. Only a few days since one came from Tallula, and a week ago one from Gilman. Your people ought to advertise and have him arrested if possible.

I have the pleasure to be,
Very respectfully and fraternally,
JAS. T. FANK,
W. M. Holly Springs Lodge No. 35.

HENRY ABBOTT, Naples, Ill.

Died.

Very suddenly, July 14, at Knoxville, Ill., Bro. JOHN GRIMES, S. D. of Pacific Lodge No. 400, aged 59 years.

Our brother left a wife and three children to mourn his death. He was a good man and a zealous Mason.

At Mascoutah, St. Clair county, Aug. 6, Bro. RILEY FETRICK, S. W., of Douglas Lodge No. 361. The lodge resolutions commend him highly.

Miscellaneous Reading.

The Grey Mare in the Garret.

In the portal of the ancient church at Reculver, dedicated to the blessed Saint Mary, hung, many centuries ago, a picture, the portrait of a certain Dame Mary Maycote and her two children, of whom this singular story is related. The picture was covered by a curtain which she worked with her own hands.

Her husband, Sir Cavalierro Maycote, was in the year of 1140, a rich burgomaster of the flourishing city of Canterbury, though he resided latterly in the fair town of Reculver, living at the sign of the Paroquet, in the Market Place.

During his lifetime a fearful plague desolated the south-west quarter of Kent, and among others he fell sick; though his wife, Mary, who also fell sick of the pest, never recovered, but to all appearances died.

After the usual period had elapsed she was buried in the vaults of the church at Reculver dedicated to the blessed Saint Mary. She was buried, as the custom then was, with her jeweled rings on her fingers, and most of her rich ornaments on her person. These tempted the cupidty of the sexton of the church. He argured with himself that they were of no use to the corpse; and he determined to possess them. Accordingly, he proceeded in the dead of night to the vault where she lay interred, and commenced the work of sacrilegious spoliation. He first unscrewed the coffin lid; he then removed it altogether, and proceeded to tear away the shroud which interposed between him and his prey. But what was his horror to perceive the corpse clasp her hands together; and, finally, to sit erect in the coffin. He was rooted to the earth. The corpse made as though it would step from its narrow bed. He fled, shrieking, through the vaults. The corpse followed, its long white shroud floating like a meteor in the dim light of the lamp which, in his haste, he had forgotten. It was not until he had reached his own door that he had sufficient courage to look behind him; and then, when he perceived no trace of his pursuer, the excitement which had sustained him so far subsided, and he sank senseless to the earth.

In the meanwhile, Sir Cavalierro Maycote, who had slept scarcely a minute since the death of his dear departed wife, was surprised by the voice of his old man servant, who rapped loudly at his chamber door, and told him to awake and come forth, for that his mistress had arisen from the dead, and was then at the gate of the court-yard.

"Bah!" said Sir Cavalierro, pettishly; "go thy way, Jacob; thou art mad or drunk; or thou art surely in a dream. What thou sayest is impossible. I should as soon believe my old grey mare had got into the garret, as that my wife was at the court-yard gate.

Trot. trot, trot, suddenly resounded high over his head,—trot, trot, trot.

"What's that?" he asked of Jacob.

"I know not," replied Jacob, "an, it be not your old grey mare in the garret, Sir Cavalierro."

They descended in haste to the court-yard, and looked up to the window of the attic.

Lo, and behold! there was, indeed, the grey mare with her head poked out of the window, gazing down with her great eyes on her master and his man, and seeming to enjoy very much her exalted situation, and their surprise and consternation at it. Knock, knock, knock, went the rapper at the street gate.

"It is my mistress!" exclaimed Jacob.

"It is my wife!" exclaimed Sir Cavalierro, both in the same breath.

The door was quickly unfastened, and there, truly, stood the mistress of the mansion, enveloped in her shroud.

"Are you alive or dead!" exclaimed the astonished husband.

"Alive, my dear, but very cold," murmured the lady faintly, her teeth chattering the while, as those of one in a fever chill; "help me to my chamber."

He caught her in his arms and covered her with kisses; then he bore her to her chamber, and called up the whole house to welcome and assist her.

She suffered a little from fatigue and fright; but in a few days she was as well as could be expected under all the circumstances.

The thing began to be the talk of the good town of Reculver; and thousands flocked daily to see not alone the lady that was rescued from the grave in so remarkable a manner, but also the grey mare who strangely contrived to get into the garret, and so contribute to that rescue.

This excellent lady lived long and happy with her husband; and, at her death, was laid once more in her old quiet resting-place.

The grey mare, after remaining in the garret for three days, was got down by means of ropes, pulleys, machinery, and on inclined planes, quite safe and sound. The interesting animal sometime survived her mistress, and grew to be a general favorite with the good people of Reculver. When she died, her skin was stuffed and placed in the arsenal of the Roman station as a curiosity.

The sexton went mad with the fright he had sustained, and in a short time entered that bourne whence he had so unintentionally recovered the wife of the rich burgomaster.

Inventions.

Inventions commonly supposed to be recent, often turn out to be of ancient date. Something very like printing was in use by the Egyptian monarchs, who stamped their names on bricks. The inscriptions found on Babylonian bricks also appear to have been impressed wirh a stamp; and a similar practice was common in China at a very remote epoch. Interlinear translations are also very ancient, and were not, as might be supposed, invented for the benefit of those students who think the easiest way through college is the best.

The earliest race that is known to have inhabited Babylonia go by the name of Akkida; and this people not only understood the art of writing, but they had an abundant literature. Their works were written on tablets of baked clay, in letters or characters composed of arrow-headed or wedge-shaped marks, and commonly called cuneiform characters. These Babylonian tablets were collected into libraries, and accompanied by interlinear translations, to explain the Akkad language to the Assyrians.

We often see in old books a word placed under the last line of one page, and repeated at the top of the next. The Akkadi had an arrangement equivalent to this; only instead of catch-words, they had catch-lines. At the end of the inscription on one tablet a line was drawn, and the first line of the tablet next in the series was written. As one of their works sometimes consisted of more than a hundred tablets, and these tablets could not be bound in volume, it was only by these catch-lines that a reader could find the separate parts of his book.

HAIL is one of the most successful inventions of the age. It is done at last. A perfect and complete

WASHING MACHINE.

Few will believe that a Machine of this description could be made to do what has been claimed for them, viz.:

To Wash Every Description of Clothes Perfectly Clean.

The HAIL COLUMBIA WASHING MACHINE has been in use over three years, and in every family where it has been introduced, it has given entire satisfaction.

This Machine washes four different ways, and does thoroughly and completely cleanse every kind of clothes that can be washed with soap and water. No rubbing on a wash-board or with the hands, is required for any part of the garments. This is absolutely true. Wrist-bands, neck-bands, stockings, etc., are as thoroughly washed in this Machine as by any process known, and with half the wear and tear on the fabrics.

We need not say much of this Machine or its principles. Any one can call and see the Machines at the places herein mentioned. HOPPING & RIDGELY, Sash and Blind Factory, Third between Market and Jackson Sts., FOX & HOUSE, Hardware Merchants, North Side of Square.

The following testimonials will show in what estimation the Machine is held by those who have it in constant use:

I consider the Hail Columbia Washing Machine invaluable to my family for its durability, convenience, and practical utility. A. S. SWEET.
Locomotive Depot, M. C. R. R.

I have in use two of the Hail Columbia Washing Machines, and hereby certify that it does thoroughly and well all the work claimed for it by the inventor.
Z. R. ROCKWAY,
Sup't Detroit House Correction.

MR. HARTT—I have done the whole of my washing to-day, and cannot say I am much more than ordinarily fatigued. I have not done a washing before in five years, and did not suppose I could. Permit me to say you deserve a place among the benefactors of the human race. MRS. KATIE UHL, Dixon, Ill.

I think your Machine embraces every principle in washing. REV. EPH. MILLER, Springfield, Ill.

This is undoubtedly the best machine of the kind before the public. REV. MR. PAINTER, Springfield, Ill.

I think, sir, your Machine involves common sense principles, and I think it could not help being a success. MRS. JOHN J. BAGBY, Detroit, Mich.

You certainly deserve great credit for furnishing to women a time, health, and life saving machine.

Townsend, under the lead of R. W. Bro Fred. Widows, of St. Cecile Lodge New York, sang the following ode, in which they were accompanied by the voices of the Grand Lodge, viz:

1. Genius of Masonry, descend
    And with thee bring thy spotless train;
Constant our sacred rites attend,
    While we adore thy peaceful reign.

2. Bring with thee Virtue, brightest maid;
    Bring Love, bring Truth, and Friendship
While kind Relief will lend her aid, [here,
    To smooth the wrinkled brow of care.

3. Come Charity, with goodness crowned,
    Encircled in thy heavenly robe;
Diffuse thy blessings all around,
    To every corner of the globe.

4. To Heaven's high Architect all praise,
    All praise, all gratitude be given,

M. W. Bro. Thomas J. Pickett, formerly G. Master in this State, and representative near the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, was introduced and welcomed with the grand honors. R. W. Bro. W. S. Coombs, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota, was also introduced by M. W. Bro. Wm. Lavely, and welcomed with the grand honors.

During the session the same honors were accorded to Breth. O. H Miner, as representative of the Grand Lodges of Florida and Oregon, R. W. Bro. W. T. Palmer, Grand Secretary of Wisconsin, and H. G. Reynolds, Grand representative of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky.

We now give such portion of our address as would be new to our readers, and is of a nature proper for publication in a journal like this.

ADDRESS.

Most Worshipful, Right Worshipful, and Worshipful Brethren of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, A. F. and A. Masons.

One year more has receded from our view, and now contributes its share of history to the measureless past. Gathering strength from its events, and wisdom from its experience, it is our duty to improve the present and prepare for the future.

The Infinite One, in whose hands our breath is, with whom our lives is but a moment's space, and our whole being but an atom, has seen fit to spare us until this present hour; not a hair of our heads has fallen to the ground without his notice, and each thought of each one of us is registered in His Book of Remembrance. We have professed our trust in Him; let us be thankful for His goodness, and prove our gratitude by obeying His laws.

DISTRICTS, DEPUTIES AND REPORTS.

In conformity to the order of the Grand Lodge, I divided the State into twenty-four districts, and appointed the brethren whose names are mentioned on pages 364 and 365 proceedings of the Grand Lodge for 1869, as Deputies for their respective districts.

Reports have been received from all the Deputies. These reports show a remarkable degree of unanimity, peace, and concord, in which we all rejoice. The Deputies have been great helpers and assistants in my work, and their advice, always cheerfully given, has been sound and impartial.

The district system has thus far worked well. I would fraternally recommend that the number of districts be increased to thirty. Our territory is very large, and the number of lodges largely increased. I think it advisable to make the districts large enough to give respectability to the office of Deputy, and yet of such size as to be conveniently traversed, and not render the office a burden.

It is my duty to return my grateful thanks to the Deputies for their services, counsel, and cordial co-operation, but special mention is due to Deputies Clyde, Barnard, Stevens, Hammond, Hollister, Stilwell, Hay, House, and Palmer, for their efficient and timely services in settling difficulties and enforcing discipline.

I have had occasion to call to my aid the services of several brethren as special deputies, among whom are R. W. Breth. Thomas J. Wade, A. L. Virden, John C. Winslow, and John D. Hamilton, all of whom rendered important service, and are entitled to your thanks.

* * * * * *

I have thus brought before you some of the principal cases requiring my attention. Other cases under different heads, will be mentioned, while very many others amicably adjusted or involving a point of law, will be entirely omitted.

In this connection, permit me to say that Masonry is no hiding-place for criminals or shelter for crime. If a Mason should be a good man and true, and should strictly obey the moral law, then we have no room in our lodges for criminals and deliberate violators of the laws of the land, nor have we any use for lodges which harbor offenders against the peace and security of society. The idea that a Mason is to shield a brother guilty of crime, or screen him from just punishment, is a portion of the anti-Masonic code, and is in no sense justified by any Masonic teachings or practice.

FOREIGN JURISDICTIONAL QUESTIONS.

In July 1869, I received a communication from the M. W. Grand Master of the State of New York, that H. W. Bigelow Lodge had conferred the degrees upon one George Van Houton, a resident at the time of Rochester, New York, and who had previously made application to Genesee Falls Lodge No. 507 at Rochester, and had been rejected.

I communicated by letter with the W. M. of H. W. Bigelow Lodge No. 438, who defended the action of the lodge and insisted that Van Houton was at the time a legal resident of Chicago.

Communications passed between the M. W. Grand Master of New York and myself, and I became satisfied that Van Houton was really a citizen of Rochester at the time he was initiated, and placed the matter in the hands of R. W. Bro. Clyde, D. D. G. M., and from him I learned that H. W. Bigelow Lodge would endeavor to make a settlement of the matter with Genesee Falls Lodge and so the matter stood at your meeting last year.

In the latter part of November I received another communication from the Grand Master of New York alleging that no adjustment had been made.

The correspondence satisfied me that Van Houton had been guilty of gross deception, that he was really an unworthy man, that he had exercised important functions as a citizen of Chicago, when in reality he was a citizen of Rochester, New York, where his family resided, and that he ought to be expelled.

Charges were therefore prefered against him in H. W. Bigelow Lodge, upon which he was tried and found guilty and expelled. The correspondence is lengthy, and in some cases quite sharp, but courteous and fraternal. The whole of it is subject to inspection.

In October, 1867, M. W. Grand Master Gorin caused charges to be forwarded to the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of New York against Cosmopolitan Lodge No. 585, charging said lodge with initiating one Mark Pollack, a sojourner, who had been twice rejected in Chicago Lodge No. 437, and who was at the time of his initiation, passing and raising a citizen of Chicago.

Charges were preferred in said Cosmopolitan Lodge against said Pollack, upon which he was tried and definitely suspended. From the testimony it appears that Pollack asserted that he had never been rejected, and in this matter he and others involved W. Bro. Charles Cohen, who was at the time W. M. of Chicago Lodge.

On the 31st of Dec., 1868, the M. W. G. Master New York, addressed a letter to me, charging that Bro. Cohen aided and abetted said Pollack in obtaining the degrees in said Cosmopolitan Lodge, and that he was a party to the misrepresentations of said Pollack.

That letter I referred to R. W. Bro. Clyde, D. D. G. M., who reported to me, that he had been unable to gain any information from any one except from Bro. Cohen, who asserted that he never had any knowledge or information in regard to the application of said Pollack, until he had taken the degrees. I supposed that I had communicated this to the M. W. Grand Master of New York, but if I did, it never reached him. I regarded the matter at rest, until I received a copy of that portion of the address of the M. W. G. Master of New York delivered before the Grand Lodge of that State in June, 1869, which was followed by a letter from Bro. Cohen calling my attention to the matter and desiring an investigation. I then procured from the M. W. G. Master of New York, a complete copy of the testimony and documents used in the said trial of Bro. Pollack, and sent the same to R. W. Deputies Clyde and Barnard for further investigation.

It appears that when Bro. Pollack returned to Chicago, he applied to Chicago Lodge for admission to visit, and was objected to by Bro. Cohen himself, then in the chair, for reasons which he stated to the lodge.

I am credibly informed that no one in the city of Chicago stands fairer in character than Bro. Cohen. His statement, corroborates at great length and with minuteness the statement made to R. W. Bro. Clyde, and this is supported by statements from Breth. Jacob Koch, Morris Kohn, and Deputy Barnard, which resulted in a firm conviction, that Bro. Cohen was in no way directly or indirectly obnoxious to the charge preferred against him, and I so expressed myself to the M. W. Grand Master of New York, who, among other things, in a letter of date June 2, said: "the evidence is convincing so far as any evidence can be where only one side is heard, that Bro. Cohen is guiltless in this matter."

Another party is involved besides Breth. Cohen and Pollack, but I am of opinion that enough has been done.

On the 27th day of January last I received an official letter from the R. W. Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Missouri in regard to an alleged invasion of jurisdictional rights by Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76. After some correspondence with said lodge, I visited Carlinville, and gathered up the facts in the case, and thereupon addressed the following letter to the M. W. Grand Lodge of Missouri:

To the M. W. Grand Master, R. W. Deputy Grand Master and Grand Wardens and Brethren of the M. W. Grand Lodge of Missouri:

M. W., R. W., and Dear Brethren:—Health, Salutation, and Peace. The M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois, and the Grand Master of Masons send you fraternal greeting.

It pleased your Grand Master, M. W. Bro. John D. Vincil, at your communication in Oct. A. L. 5869, to say as follows:

"There are others. A lodge over the river in our sister Grand Lodge of Illinois, perpetrated the same wrong upon our rights." Mr. Adam Tappan, for some years a resident of the Territory of New Mexico, went (in the spring of 1868), on a visit to his relations in Illinois. While there he was made a member of Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, "and after an absence of four months, he returned to Santa Fe, a full grown Mason. He also visited Montezuma Lodge No. 109, until Bro. Green interfered. I issued the same order in his case as in the other. I dislike to speak harshly or judge uncharitably, but am constrained to utter the conviction that, seeking the honors of Masonry in places remote from the residence of the applicant throws a dark cloud of suspicion about the case. It ought to raise a doubt in the minds of the brethren where the application is made, and that doubt should only be removed by the most indubitable assurances of worthiness, accompanied by all necessary legal authority to work up such material."

W. Breth. Wm. H. Stone, Martin J. Hubble, and J. A. Price, Committee, were also pleased to report upon the above subject with others as follows:

JURISDICTIONAL RIGHTS.

"Your committee are pained to learn of the invasion of this jurisdiction by Monitor Lodge No. 528 of New York city, Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, in Illinois, and St. Merron Lodge No. 129 Paisley, Scotland, and fully endorse the emphatic protest of the M. W. Grand Master in the premises, and had supposed that the firm and unswerving position of this Grand Lodge was fully understood by every other jurisdiction, to the extent that our rights would not be again invaded; but, believing that the above acts were committed by subordinate lodges, ignorant of Masonic rights and usage, and that ample redress will be afforded when the grievance is properly presented to the respective grand lodges, we therefore recommend that the Grand Secretary express in suitable terms, the solemn protest of this Grand Lodge to Grand Lodges named, against this action by their subordinates, and that the parties so made Masons be recognized only as clandestine, until they be properly healed by the lodges to whose jurisdiction they properly belong, entertaining, as we fully do, the belief that the Grand Lodges named will make ample apology, and punish the offending lodges."

On the 26th day of January last, I received a letter from the R. W. Grand Secretary of the M. W. Grand Lodge of Missouri from which I give the following extract:

> "By reference to pages 25 and 65 of published proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, you will notice the complaint made by the M. W. Grand Master, of Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, of your jurisdiction in the invasion of the rights of Montezuma Lodge 109 New Mexico under charter of this Grand Lodge.
> Also that it has been made my duty to express to you, fraternally, the firm position of this Grand Body in respecting the jurisdictional rights of other grand lodges, and this Grand Lodge is naturally jealous of her own; and to express the belief that you will administer the reprimand which the case justifies, and to prohibit to the extent of your ability a repetition of causes for such complaints."

The facts in the case are as follows:

Bro. Arthur Daniel Tappan, a native of the State of New York, came while quite a youth to Illinois to reside. For several years he resided with his brother, Bro. Henry Tappan, at Alton, for three years with him at Jerseyville, and for some time with another brother at Bunker Hill, who is now deceased. At or before the decease of this brother, Bro. Henry Tappan, removed to Bunker Hill, and there remained until he was elected Sheriff of Macoupin Co., when he removed to Carlinville where he now resides, and is a member of Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76. The deceased brother represented Macoupin county in the Legislature in 1847, and both he and Bro. Henry Tappan were men of unusual intelligence, capacity and enterprise. Bro. Henry Tappan, served the lodge in several capacities at Bunker Hill. He was the natural guardian, and stood as father to Bro. Arthur D. Tappan, and the latter considered his home to be with his brother Henry.

Before the latter brother left Bunker Hill, Bro. Arthur D. Tappan, then, ever since, and still a single man, went west, and traveled over California, Arizona, and New Mexico for several years. That he was at Santa Fe and did business there, is admitted, but that he considered it as his home, is denied. In 1867, the Indian troubles induced him to return to his brother Henry, at Carlinville, where he arrived in the fall. He came with the intention, stated previously by letter, of going into business with his brother. Before doing so, he determined to visit his birth-place, and there spend the winter. Up to this time he had entertained no serious intention of becoming a Freemason. But at his first home, in company with his relatives, he found that his father had been a devoted Mason; that he was witness to the terrible persecutions of the anti-Masons; had suffered himself, and that he had left behind him a noble record and many memorials of his devotion to the Order. This awakened in him a strong desire to become a Mason, and he communicated to his brother Henry his desire to take the degrees in his lodge where he was known, and as he had received intelligence that his affairs in New Mexico demanded his attention, that he would like to receive them as soon as practicable. Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, at Carlinville, is not obnoxious to the belief that she is "ignorant of Masonic rights and usages." Her membership will compare favorably with that of any lodge in Illinois, Missouri, or elsewhere, for character, learning, or Masonic intelligence. She has always been loyal to Masonic law and usages. Enrolled upon her list of Past Masters are the names of the present Governor, judges, members of both branches of the Legislature, clerks of courts, and regimental, brigade, division, corps, and department commanders during the late civil war. Col. Thaddeus Phillips, the present Master, was elected in December, 1855, and served as such until 1861, when he entered the service as Captain, and left it in 1866 at the head of a regiment. In December, 1867, he was again called to the Oriental Chair, and is now in his third term of second service. I have been thus particular in detailing these facts in order that the supposition of ignorance of Masonic law and usage on the part of either Mt. Nebo Lodge or Bro. Henry Tappan, may be dispelled.

No lodge now in existence would repel more promptly any invasion of her jurisdictional rights, or be more careful to respect the rights of lodges, than Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76. Of this I am myself a cheerful witness.

The Grand Lodge of Missouri has no sovereignty beyond her own State lines. Every Grand Lodge in the United States has a right to occupy the Territory of New Mexico, in common with all the others. The fact that there was any lodge in New Mexico was wholly unknown to either Mt. Nebo Lodge or Bro. Henry Tappan. It was natural for the younger brother, when resolved to become a Freemason, to apply to the brother who had been the guide of his youth, with whom he still intended to become a business partner, and at the place where he intended to reside. The facts, as communicated by Bro. Henry Tappan and as understood by the lodge, were made known to the Grand Master, who granted his dispensation to confer the degrees upon Bro. Arthur Daniel Tappan without regard to time. More than eight months after he left New Mexico, to-wit: on the first day of June, 1868, he was initiated, passed June 6th, and raised June 13th, and was demitted the same day.

With this demit he went to Santa Fe, was admitted to visit the lodge, and was subsequently exalted in Santa Fe Chapter, a part of the members of which, if not all of them, were members of the lodges in Santa Fe, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Missouri.

Having closed up his business, Bro. Arthur Daniel Tappan, in pursuance of his previous intention, in the winter of 1868–9 returned to Carlinville, entered into business with his brother Henry, affiliated with Mt. Nebo Lodge, but not suited with his prospects, demitted again in May, 1869, and returned to Santa Fe.

The Grand Lodge of Illinois has ever been careful of the rights of her sister Grand Lodges. No lodge is permitted to receive petitions from the borders of adjoining States, without the consent of the lodge holding jurisdiction, with the approval of the Grand Master.

The present Grand Lodge of Illinois was formed in 1840, and was immediately recognized by the Grand Lodge of Missouri; yet, instead of withdrawing from our territory, I do certainly know that as late as 1847, Col. H. P. Boyakin, of Salem, Marion county, was D. D. G. M., and it is my belief that the Grand Lodge of Missouri continued to hold jurisdiction over a lodge at Salem, if not over others, as late as 1851; for all this, the Grand Master of Illinois exerted all his authority to prevent one of our subordinate lodges from initiating a candidate who had applied from Missouri, on the ground of convenience, during his term of office in 1850–51.

Even if all the statements and suppositions of M. W. Bro. Vincil, your honorable committee, your M. W. body, and of your R. W. Grand Secretary in your behalf were true, I cannot conceive upon what principle of Masonic law or common justice you can require of us to treat Bro. Arthur Daniel Tappan as a clandestine Mason. He petitioned and was accepted in due form. He was made in a regularly constituted lodge, and by the authority of the Grand Lodge of Illinois. As I understand the term "clandestine" it applies to Masons working without lawful consent. While I understand that a brother may be irregularly made in a regular lodge, yet I have never learned that such irregularity is to effect his standing. On the contrary, unless previously forbidden, his making is considered good, but the party guilty of the irregularity is subject to censure or discipline.

If Mt. Nebo Lodge has invaded the jurisdiction of a subordinate lodge in New Mexico, she is subject to discipline and should make atonement, and if she has been aided and abetted in so doing by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, ample apology should be made. But the demand to hold an innocent party to be clandestine, is one which we hold to be unlawful, and one which I fraternally decline to entertain.

Far be it from me to criticise your M. W. body upon the manner or the mode in which you may seek for justice or demand reparation for violations of Masonic law or jurisdictional rights. But in no other instance have I any recollection of any such matter being brought to the notice of this Grand Lodge, without first giving our authorities or the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois due notice and opportunity for explanation, apology, or defense. The first notice or knowledge that came to the Grand Lodge of Illinois or any of its subordinates, came through your printed proceedings, accompanied by the letter herein alluded to from your R. W. Grand Secretary. May I be pardoned in saying that M. W. Bro. Vincil charges us in explicit terms with wrong; admits and justifies the use of harsh language, not to say an uncharitable judgment? That your honorable committee assume our guilt, and that your M. W. body has rendered judgment, and demanded execution at our hands without notice or trial? M. W., R. W., and W. Brethren, have you done by the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois as you would expect her to do by you? We are your equals; nothing more; nothing less. And in a friendly and brotherly spirit, I do claim that we should have had notice, and opportunity for explanation, apology, or defense. In conclusion, I say:

1. That Bro. Arthur Daniel Tappan (not Adam) if a resident anywhere, was a resident of Illinois.

2. That he was well known personally or by reputation at Carlinville, and known to be worthy.

3. That the character of both Mt. Nebo Lodge and of Bro. Henry Tappan, forbids the idea that any violation of law or jurisdictional rights was intended or thought of.

4. The indifference of Bro. Arthur Daniel Tappan to the subject of Masonry until his visit to New York, and his want of any knowledge of Masonry in New Mexico, preclude the idea of any mercenary or improper motive on his part.

5. Bro. Arthur Daniel Tappan was a single man, with no fixed and determinate residence, but with a constant idea of home in Illinois; it has been the custom to respect that idea, and to permit some flexibility in such cases.

6. All the parties are worthy; all have acted sincerely and in perfect good faith.

7. The M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois and all her subordinates have the highest respect for your M. W. Grand Body, and will at all times observe the laws of comity and jurisdiction, and will not permit them to be violated, and most sincerely desire to live on terms of perfect amity and friendship with you, all your subordinates, and every Mason in your jurisdiction. Your glory is our glory; our success is your success, and there is no interest affecting the one that does not affect the other.

Regretting any difference, trusting to your calm consideration of the whole subject, I shall lay before the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois this letter, and its action thereon will be communicated to you at the earliest convenient moment. Renewing my assurances of high fraternal consideration,

I am fraternally yours,
HARMAN G. REYNOLDS,
G. M. of Masons, Ill.

I respectfully ask that my action and the foregoing letter may be approved and indorsed by your M. W. Body, and that the same may be instantly communicated with fraternal assurances, to the M. W. Grand Lodge of Missouri, through our Grand Representative, R. W. Bro. Martin Collins. That able body will be in session next week at St. Louis.

INSTALLATIONS.

December 23d I installed the officers elect of Wenona Lodge No. 344. The ladies provided a fine supper.

January 11th, I installed the officers of Lincoln Lodge No. 210, and of Logan No. 480, at Lincoln. Two marked events attending this installation deserve special mention. The Rev. Mr. Anderson, 82 years of age, was initiated in Jonesboro, Tennessee, fifty-four years ago, came as a traveling preacher to Illinois in 1829, and was then a colleague of the celebrated Peter Cartwright. The old patriarch acted as Chaplain, and was treated with great affection by the brethren.

R. W. Bro. John M. Scott, now a Justice of the Supreme Court, delivered an address replete with sound doctrine and convincing arguments, which was severely classical and delivered with great eloquence and power. Strenuous efforts were made to procure the address for publication, but his well known desire to avoid noteriety could not be overcome.

A splendid banquet was served up by Bro. J. W. Sponsler.

EXEMPLIFICATIONS OF WORK.

On the 4th, 5th and 6th days of March last, Grand Examiners Chamberlain, Fisher, Prickett, and Barnard, with myself, held a Grand Lodge of Instruction at Odin, which is at the crossing of the Illinois Central and Ohio & Mississipi Railroads. The attendance was large from the neighboring lodges, several degrees were conferred, Masonic ceremonies were taught, and instruction was given in the ritual. The Worshipful Master of Odin Lodge, Bro. T. J. Whitehead, is a thorough proficient in the work, an eloquent degree worker, and an accomplished gentleman. Bro. H. S. De Pew, the Secretary, is an able supporter.

On the 26th, 27th, and 28th days of April, Examiners Chamberlain and Barnard, with Secretary Ide and myself, held a meeting at Galesburg, at which nearly fifty lodges were represented. Degrees were conferred by Alpha, Galesburg and Vesper lodges, followed by the same degrees conferred by the Examiners, and the differences were specially noted and corrected. Instruction was given in the ritual and in Masonic ceremonies, and good order and attention prevailed. Important assistance was rendered by the brethren at Galesburg, and by Grand Lecturers Stevens, Dewey, Hammond and Thompson. Both at Galesburg and Odin, ample provision was made for the comfort of brethren from abroad.

MASONIC TEMPLE.

At your last Grand Communication, the committee appointed the previous year to consider the most feasible method for the permanent location of the Grand Lodge, and the erection of a Masonic Temple, made a very able report, and demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Grand Lodge, that if a temple is to be built for the purpose of deriving a revenue from its use and rental, that it could not be made so largely profitable upon the money expended, in any place so well as in Chicago. An increase of more than 160,000 in its population within the last ten years, very greatly confirms this opinion.

The following resolution was offered and adopted after the adoption of said report, to-wit:

> "Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to select a suitable site in the city of Chicago, on which to build a "Temple", or building for the Grand Lodge, and procure a refusal of said site, until all the lodges in the state can be made acquainted with such selection, and have received a printed copy of the report just made, and when a majority of such lodges shall have sanctioned such selection, the committee shall be empowered to complete such purchase or lease, and proceed in the usual way to make an offer for the same."

After considerable reflection, I resolved to act carefully in the selection of the committee, and to select such as would command the confidence of this Grand Lodge and of the business community.

Accordingly, after considerable consultation, I appointed R. W. Bro. Wiley M. Egan, formerly President of the Board of Trade, of unquestioned foresight, probity and business sagacity, and associated with him P. G. M., T. J. Turner, of Freeport, a good lawyer, R. W. Bro. John M. Pearson, of Alton, who presides over the Grand Chapter, and R. W. Bro. Wm. H. Turner of Chicago, P. G. J. Warden, a gentleman of character and business capacity, and your Grand Secretary, whose financial ability was so thoroughly demonstrated as auditor of State.

The committee held several meetings, selected a site in a commanding business location, but found that a large sum of money must be advanced as a forfeit, and that large sums, utterly beyond their power to raise, must be paid at short intervals until the whole sum was paid. Nor could any other desirable property be purchased on any better terms. One piece of property which was offered your coommittee on such exacting terms, in ten days thereafter was sold at five per cent advance in price and on much better terms to the selling party.

The committee found themselves embarrassed with terms with which it was impossible to comply. No means had been provided them, nor any made by which they could be raised. They had no authority to borrow, and even if they had been authorized to borrow, the act of incorporation restricted them to one thousand dollars.

But under the terms of the resolution it was clearly ascertained that the refusal must await the action of the lodges, and that until their sanction could be obtained, no purchase could be made. Every Chicago representative—every representative in this Grand Lodge at all acquainted with operations in real estate in this city, will at once see, that while the report presented the matter fairly, that the resolution under which the committee were compelled to act, completely blocked their progress, for no transactions can be had in such real estate as this body would demand under that resolution. Of course further action and expenditure of money was unnecessary.

What is to be done? It is not for me to recommend, neither do I express any opinion in regard to the manner in which a temple shall be built or where it shall be located.

But the difficulties which environ our brethren in Massachusetts, Maryland and Missouri, should be carefully avoided. A temple can be built, it should be built, and if for revenue, then it can and should be built of such proportions and magnitude as to ensure a revenue far over-reaching all other possibilities of additional or extra expense, and in such a manner as to reflect credit on our Craftsmen and State. This should be planned and deliberately perfected, and so as to avoid all discord and confusion.

The following plans have been suggested to me in brief:

1. A joint stock arrangement.

2. An amendment to our act of incorporation, and the issuance of bonds.

3. An investment of our surplus funds from year to year, by commissioners, in Chicago real estate, until the amount becomes sufficient to build a temple free from embarrassment.

4. To resort to the methods practiced in New York to raise money. These two latter propositions might be united.

5. To locate the Grand Lodge at some central point, and erect a plain building sufficient for its wants.

M. W. Bro. Thomas J. Turner having advised me that he cannot attend at this Grand Communication, I have appointed R. W. Bro.

Isaac R. Diller, Past Senior Grand Warden, upon the Temple Committee.

DECISIONS.

I have made the following decisions:

1. The lodge found a brother guilty upon charges preferred and voted a reprimand; the W. M. neglected to perform the duty, and removed from the State; held, that the S. W. should administer the reprimand, or cause the same to be done.

2. An objection before balloting made to the Master is equivalent to a rejection, and the ballot should be stayed until the objection is removed.

3. The charter members of a new lodge, are liable for dues for the quarter or term in which such charter was granted to the lodge of which they were members at the time such charter was granted.

4. It is the duty of every non-affiliate to join some lodge, but he is privileged to join such one as suits him best, without regard to local jurisdiction.

5. The right to visit is not absolute, but conditional. The right to ask implies the power to deny, and the power to deny rests with any member of the lodge, and must be respected.

6. Where a negative ballot is cast upon application for initiation, advancement or affiliation, no brother has any right to disclose how he voted, and any such disclosure should be followed by effective discipline, except in cases where it is clear that the negative was the result of misapprehension or mistake.

7. The officers of a lodge named in a charter hold their positions after installation, until the time set for election in the by-laws, when an election should be held, even if it should occur on the next day after their installation.

8. When a candidate is declared rejected, the lodge has no further power over the matter, until the W. M. orders another ballot under section 42, Grand Lodge By-Laws.

9. In voting by show of hands, the W. M. does not vote, unless his vote may be necessary to a tie, or as a casting vote. The W. M. never has but one vote, and may vote whenever a ballot is taken.

10. The "any other lodge" mentioned in section 26, Grand Lodge By-Laws, includes any lodge wherever located.

11. A brother wishing to visit a lodge must first satisfy himself of its legality by inspection of the charter and the usual test; the Master of the lodge must then require proof in the usual way that the brother is a just and upright Mason.

12. The test should precede all examinations; two brethren may examine each other for their mutual satisfaction, but they cannot vouch for each other upon such an examination: the only cases where vouchers are permitted are where the brethren have sat in lodge together, or where a satisfactory examination has been had by authority of the W. M.

13. It is unlawful to give a suicide Masonic burial, unless the evidence of insanity is clear.

14. A two-thirds vote restores a member suspended indefinitely to membership.

15. In the absence of any lodge by-law, a majority vote is sufficient to grant a demit.

LIABILITY OF ONE LODGE TO ANOTHER.

Northern Light Lodge No. 81 F. and A. M., at Maustin, Wisconsin, submitted an account of June 13, 1870, giving items against Marengo Lodge No. 138 for the sum of $105, charges for attending upon Bro. H. Nickerson.

Woodbridge Lodge No. 138, F. and A. M., at Woodbridge, California, also submitted an account of date May 24, giving items, against said Marengo Lodge No. 138, for the sum of $619.00, charges for supplies and attention in sickness bestowed upon Bro. A. L. Wheeler. The sum total is $724.00.

I received a letter from the W. M. of Marengo Lodge No. 138, asking if the lodge was obliged to pay such demands; I advised that the whole matter be referred to you for authoritative decision.

I am clearly of the opinion that one lodge cannot hold another in a legal sense beyond its contracts, or the provisions of its by-laws.

A lodge does not assume the obligation binding upon its individual members, and it seems to me that no lodge has the right to incur expenses at the charge of another unless upon a promise to pay or a plain provision in the by-laws. The W. Master of Marengo Lodge avers that his lodge cannot pay these demands. As a matter of good policy, it may be expedient for this Grand Lodge to pay them, asserting that no more such accounts can be allowed unless by promise to pay in some form.

But I submit the whole matter for your decision.

AUDITING ACCOUNTS.

I would respectfully suggest to this Grand Lodge that some method should be devised to meet its demands and necessities in some methodical form. It is hardly possible for a finance or auditing committee to do justice to the questions and business which comes before it during your sessions.

I would therefore recommend that an estimate be made of sums necessary to meet the regular and legitimate expenses of the Grand Lodge during its recess, that the necessary sums be appropriated, and that the Finance Committee be required to meet quarterly and pass upon all bills and accounts which may be presented, and that, upon the certificate of the said committee orders be issued, and in no other case, except as now provided by the by-laws.

GRAND LODGE OF QUEBEC.

That section of North America formerly known as Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, was, some years since, joined together under one government known as the "Dominion of Canada," and the Provincial Grand Lodges in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have been formed into sovereign Grand Lodges.

As long since as 1855, many lodges in both Upper and Lower Canada united in forming an independent Grand Lodge, with a jurisdiction over the whole country. It was followed by a serious confusion, and while the differences were mainly adjusted in 1858, but many lodges retained their connection with their respective Grand Lodges in the old country.

The old provinces of Upper and Lower Canada are now known by the names of Quebec for Lower Canada, and Ontario for Upper Canada. In October last, a convention of delegates from eighteen lodges, upon the Canada Registry, two upon the Registry of the Grand Lodge of England, and one upon the Registry of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, met at Montreal, adopted a constitution, and formed a Grand Lodge under the name of Quebec. Among many reasons urged in favor of this movement was the similarity of condition by Quebec to that of the separate States of our Union, and the right to form a Grand Lodge for that reason. To that the Grand Lodge of Canada replied that her jurisdiction extended over the territory of both Ontario and Quebec. This was met by the fact that the Grand Lodge of Canada never did exercise exclusive control over said countries. It has resulted in more violence and ill-feeling than is at all justifiable among Masons. I deemed the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Quebec irregular, but the necessity for a separation is clearly demonstrated. It was hoped that the Grand Lodge of Canada would come to some compromise, whereby the lodges in Ontario should retain the Grand Lodge of Canada, and those in Quebec should be formed into another Grand Lodge.

Notwithstanding the most strenuous exertions by M. W. Bro. William Mercer Wilson, the first Grand Master of Canada, and the powerful co operation of several eminent Masons, the Grand Lodge of Canada has refused all compromise, and nothing is now left but to recognize or refuse to recognise the Grand Lodge of Quebec. It is certain that the formation of the Grand Lodge of Quebec is no more schismatic or rebellious than was the formation of the Grand Lodge of Canada. This Grand Lodge unhesitatingly recognized the latter; the former has been recognized by several Grand Lodges, and I think the matter may as well be set at rest by a general recognition of the Grand Lodge of Quebec.

CONDITION OF MASONRY.

With the charters which will be granted this session, this Grand Lodge will have nearly 650 chartered lodges, and something over 36,000 affiliated Master Masons. The increase has not been as great as in former years. This is to be ascribed to the scarcity of money, emigration westward, and a closer watchfulness over the ballot box. It would naturally be inferred that the frenzy of anti-Masonry would debar many from seeking admission, but it is a singular fact that in the region where anti-Masonry is the most furious, the average of initiations is equal to any other portion of the State.

The Grand Lodge met in this city in 1849. M. W. Bro. William Lavely, now an active member of your body, was Grand Master at that session, and R. W. Bro. William McMurtry, at that time Lieutenant Governor of the State, was in attendance as Grand Treasurer. R. W. Bro. E. R. Roe, Deputy, is now the able editor of the Pantagraph at Bloomington. M. W. Bro. W. C. Hobbs was elected Grand Master from the station of Junior Grand Warden. A most thorough scholar and gentleman. R. W. Bro. William Mitchell, Grand Secretary, died immediately after reaching his home at Peoria. No Secretary ever excelled him. R. W. Bro. Geo. Davis, deceased, was Grand Orator. Prominent among the members was M. W. Bro. Harrison Dills, since Grand Master and now Grand Treasurer, and R. W. Bro. John C. Bagby, who now represents No. 9. Of the officers and members, Breth. Whitaker, Russell, Cabiness, Gilson, Wallace, Heyl, Noyes, Barrett, and probably several others, are dead. Of the others, Breth. Wade and myself are with you now. Several have since been Grand or Deputy Grand Masters, one of whom, M. W. Past Grand Master Picket, our representative near the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, we are glad to welcome to-day. The Grand Lodge met in a spacious and convenient hall for those days on Lake street near LaSalle, and the third day the Grand Lodge and members of the Fraternity in this city formed in procession under the escort of Apollo Commandery, R. W. Bro. John R. Case, Commander, and proceeded to a hall on Randolph street, between State and Dearborn, where a most elaborate and polished oration was delivered by Bro. Davis. The whole number of lodges represented did not exceed forty, and yet we thought it a grand affair. The old Sherman, on the site of the present Sherman, had sufficient room for us all.

In 1866, the Grand Lodge met here the second time, and now, just twenty-one years after the first meeting here, I presume that 575 lodges are represented, and that from 600 to 800 representatives are present.

Is there anything singular in this? Yes. In 1850 the population of the State was over 850,000. The affiliated Masons did not exceed 2,500, an average of one to 340 inhabitants. Now the population of the State is 2,500,000, and the average is one to every 70 inhabitants. Romantic as the increase of the population may seem, the increase in Masonry almost exceeds the range of credulity. What has kept pace with this? Everything good—everything noble. Equality among the people, universal education, the magical spread of the arts and sciences, a higher range of civilization, a higher tone of personal honor, and a decided improvement in the moral culture of the people.

It will be asserted that some lodges are low in the scale of morals, efficiency, or usefulness. Admit it. The same is true in every department of human society. Banks are sometimes compelled to close, merchants fail, farmers and mechanics do not succeed, and demoralization reaches churches and other societies. Masonry cannot be expected to escape the fate of all other earthly things. Yet, the advancement of Masonry is the advancement of improvement, civilization, religion, morality, culture, learning and law, and its cosmopolitan influences bring good men in contact, and contribute to bring about that time when all men shall love one another. Wherever there is civilization there is Masonry. Wherever Masonry advances darkness disappears. Wherever it declines, fanaticism obscures the light of culture and learning, and barbarism, rudeness, and lawlessness override order and law.

While Masonry is essentially social, and a large system of charity, it is not license. Where I find the majority of members of a lodge in dram-shops, addicted to profane swearing, loose in morals and personal honor, and ready to excuse immoral or unmasonic practices, I tremble for the community where it is located. Such lodges are the blots upon our fair system, and are no better than birds of prey. They are a moral pest, and should be cleansed or closed. My brethren, is this the case with any of your lodges? Let it be so no longer.

OUR LAMENTED DEAD.

The Rev. James I. Davidson of Decatur, Grand Chaplain, and Past Grand Orator, died at his residence on the 10th day of January last, aged about forty years. A native of England, and a machinist by occupation upon arriving at his majority. As early as twelve years of age he was known as the "boy preacher." He came to this country when twenty-one years old, and commenced preaching in the Methodist Episcopal persuasion. He was originally licensed in this country at Quincy, by the Quarterly Conference, of which our R. W. Grand Treasurer was a member. He passed regularly through the orders, and had become a famous preacher when our late civil war broke out. He entered the service as Chaplain, but was soon elevated to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, and displayed in several engagements the most daring, heroic, and soldierly qualities. At Chattanooga he was severely wounded, and was transferred to the presidency of a court martial at Nashville.

After leaving the service, he preached for three years in the first Methodist Society in Springfield, one year in Decatur, and one year since he was made presiding elder. He left a widow and an adopted child. Elwood Commandery, of which he was a member, went from Springfield to Decatur and escorted his remains to Oak Ridge Cemetery, near Springfield, our M. W. Bro. William Lavely, commanding, and the deceased was buried with Masonic honors.

Bro. Davidson was a remarkable man. He attached his friends to him very strongly; his mind was of a philosophical cast, but he studied oratory, and his preaching, always effective, was occasionally very eloquent. The wounds received at Chattanooga were the ultimate cause of his death; he suffered much, but bore all patiently, was serene and tranquil, and in the possession of his reason, died happily and in peace.

R. W. Bro. Phares A. Dorwin, Grand Lecturer, and Past Master of Central Lodge No. 71, at Springfield, died of consumption on the second day of February last, at the age of forty-eight years, leaving a widow and three minor sons. The deceased was Master of Central Lodge several years, was one of the brightest workmen in the State, and an elder in the Presbyterian church.

Hon. D. D. Shumway, of Taylorville, for several years Master of Mound Lodge No. 122, county judge, member of Legislature in 1846–7, and of the convention which immediately followed, died May 8th, leaving a widow and several children. The deceased was a gentleman and an honorable man.

I cannot avoid mentioning the decease of Col. Lawrence S. Church, of Woodstock, a member of the Constitutional Convention, and for several years a member of the Legislature, and who, though never Master of a lodge, was most influential in favor of Masonry. His death occurred on the 21st day of July last. The deceased was a able man, a talented legislator, and an honorable gentleman.

I presume there are others whom I ought to mention here, but I leave that for the Committee on Obituaries.

The deaths of M. W. Breth. Robt. D. Holmes, Past Grand Master of New York, who died on the 12th of March last, and Benjamin B. French, Past Grand Master of the District of Columbia, who died on the 13th day of August last, have caused profound regret and sorrow. Their Masonic lives furnish a large portion of the history of Freemasonry in this country since 1849.

In April, 1837, at Montpelier, Vt., I bid adieu to father and mother for the last time on earth; exchanged farewells with brothers and sisters, among whom was the youngest child—a lad nine years old. The father had suffered at the hands of anti-Masons as few men suffered. The eldest son—myself—came by stage and boat to Detroit, and thence to Rock Island on foot and alone. Upon reaching the verge of the bluff overlooking Rock Island, Fort Armstrong, Davenport, the town of Rock Island, the Mississippi and the mouth of Rock River, as the sun was declining in the west, a scene of beauty and grandeur burst upon my vision such as I had never witnessed before. Two other brothers with myself, became Masons in this State, but the parents having passed away, the younger lad, grown to man's estate, went to California, and from thence to Virginia City, amid the Sierras of Nevada, where he, too, became a Mason, married, and in a few years sickened, and though kindly cared for by stranger Masons, closed his eyes upon the scenes of earth in September, 1868. In July last, the body was brought to Rock Island, and on that same bluff not far from where I stood in 1837, four brothers—three of us Freemasons—looked again upon the well-preserved features of the lad I had left in 1837, with his emblems of Masonry resting upon his bosom. There we buried him. In that hour, where was ambition? Where was wealth, or the pleasures of this world? In the midst of the sorrow and weeping, I felt in my soul to declare, "O, Lord, in the midst of life we are in death; have compassion upon the children of thy creation, and administer them comfort in the time of trouble."

My brethren: I have again brought back the gavel you placed in my hands one year since. I have tried to use it in such a way as to promote harmony and good-will, morality, culture and elevation of character. It is now yours. And it will ever be my prayer, that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, may be your God, your Father, and your trust. For all your forbearance with my faults, for all the honors you have conferred on me, I feel profoundly grateful. I have been honored far beyond my ability or deserts, but in every position in which I have been placed, I have tried to give you honest service, and wherein I have failed it has never been for want of good intention. May good order, unity and courtesy govern your deliberations, and may the Grand Architect of the Universe crown your labors with abundant success.

The address was referred to Breth. H. P. H Bromwell, Ira A. W. Buck, John M. Stilwell, E Powell, J. W. Ross, C. H. Patton, and James Lowe.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Bro. Winslow presented Report on Credentials.

The following committees were announced, to-wit:

On Masonic Correspondence.—Breth. Wm. Rounseville, John C. Bagby, and John C. W. Bailey.

On Masonic Jurisprudence.—Breth. J. R. Gorin, William Lavely, Ira A. W. Buck, J. O. Cunningham, John M. Pearson, John Bennett, and O. H. Miner.

On Finance.—Breth. James Lowe, B. J. Van Court, and William E. Ginther.

On the Library.—Breth. Grand Secretary, Deputy Grand Secretary, and Hugh Ervin.

On Constitution, Manual, and Laws.—Breth. Wiley M. Egan, A. W. Blakesley, D. P. Bunn, Wilson Hoag, J. N. Ryan, and H. G. Reynolds, as previously appointed.

Temple Committee.—Breth. Wiley M. Egan, Isaac R. Diller, John M. Pearson, Wm. H. Turner, and O. H. Miner.

On Chartered Lodges.—Breth. Jas. C. Luckey, J. G. Robinson, John Porter, John McLaren, E. K. Conkling, B. F. Thompson, G. P. Randall, Robert B. Smith, and James Ross.

On Appeals and Grievances.—Breth. Francis Hudson, J. B. Samuel, L. L. Munn, George Mason, and H. W. Hubbard.

On Mileage and Per Diem.—Breth. John D. Hamilton, O. F. Price, J. Freudenstein.

On Petitions.—Breth. W. S. Easton, D. W. Thomson, Jeptha Dudley, William H. House, and J. H. Mowry.

General Committee.—Breth. Daniel Dustin, W. M. Avise, A. T. Darrah.

On Obituaries.—Breth. Joseph Robbins, T. J. Whitehead, and John McCullough.

We would here remark that much that transpired is omitted, because a subsequent statement of results is all that is necessary.

Bro. Flower presented the report on Lodges U. D. Charters were granted to the following named lodges: Comet Lodge, 641; Apollo, 642; Cregier, 643; Oblong City, 644; San Jose, 645; Somonauk, 646; Blueville, 647; Camden, 648; Hinsdale, 649; Irvington, 650; Centre Star, 651; Polar Star, 652; Greenview, 653; Woodford, 654; Yorktown, 655; Mozart, 656; Lafayette, 657; Rock Island, 658; Lambert, 659; Grand Chain, 660.

The dispensations of Mayo and Phoenix Lodges were continued.

In the evening the work was exemplified at Oriental and Blaney Halls, by R. W. Breth. Chamberlin, Barnard, Pricket, and Ide.

Wednesday Morning, Oct. 5.—The Committee on Finance presented their report, which showed that the Grand Treasurer had on hand

October 5, 1869	$5,284.62
Rec'd from Grand Secretary	24,570.50
Total	$29,855.12
Vouchers, commissions, and expenses	$23,383.17
Balance in hand	$6,461.95

That the Grand Master has received and paid to Grand Secretary $1,000 for dispensations for new lodges, $535.00 for dispensations to confer degrees, and $50.00 for other dispensations, being in all $1,585.00.

That the Grand Secretary had received $23,646 dues for 1870, $1,149.00 dues for 1869, and $54.00 dues for former years, making $24,899.35; for dispensations and charter fees including the foregoing amount received from Grand Master $1,982.00; on Masonic Hall stock, $275.00; miscellaneous, $39.00. Total, $27,195.35.

From this sum the mileage, per diem and expenses of present year are to be paid.

Cleveland Lodge paid $241.50; Oriental paid $214.50. The lodges in Chicago paid $2,563.75.

Pontiac and Buda Lodges, having lost their halls by fire, their dues were refunded.

R. W. Bro. W. M. Egan, from the Temple Committee, made a report similar to the statement contained in the address, which was laid on the table for future consideration.

The Grand Lodge proceeded to the election of Grand Officers, and Breth. Chamberlin, Whitehead, Barnard, House, Prickett, Davidson, Winston, Hammond, Sample, Slayton, and Lowe were appointed tellers, and the several ballotings resulted as follows:

D. C. Cregier, Chicago, Grand Master.
J. A. Hawley, Dixon, D. G. Master.
G. E. Lounsbury, Mound City, S. G. Warden.
Jas. C. Luckey, Polo, J. G. Warden.
Harrison Dills, Quincy, G. Treasurer.
O. H. Miner, Springfield, G. Secretary.
Rev. J. W. Agard, Wyoming, G. Chaplain.
John M. Scott, Bloomington, G. Orator.
John P. Ferns, Chicago, G. Tyler.

The following appointments were subsequently made:

T. J. Whitehead, Odin, G. Pursuivant.
J. F. Burrill, Springfield, G. Marshal.
Isaac E. Hardy, Alton, G. St. Bearer.
W. J. A. De Lancey, Centralia, G. S. D.
H. W. Dyer, G. J. D.
H. E. Hamilton, Chicago, G. Steward.
W. H. Long, Mt. Carroll, G. Steward.
Geo. O. Ide, Princeton, Grand Examiner for four years.

On Masonic Correspondence—Breth. Joseph Robbins, Quincy; Wm. Floto, Chicago; J. C. McMurtry, Henderson.

On Masonic Jurisprudence.—Breth. H. G. Reynolds, Sprihgfield; J. R. Gorin, Decatur; J. M. Pearson, Godfrey; A. W. Blakesley, Quincy; Wm. Rounseville, Peoria; W. M. Egan, Chicago.

On Library.—Grand Secretary; J. O. Cunningham, Urbana; C. H. Brennan, Chicago.

Thanks were tendered Oriental Lodge for use of its hall and rooms for the use of the Grand Lodge; also to several railroads for commutation of fare, and to the Young Mens' Christian Association, and the Chamber of Commerce, for polite invitations to attend their meetings.

The resolution forbidding the use of the name of any living man for a new lodge, was repealed.

Three O'clock P. M.—Report on milage and per diem presented and adopted.

Bro. Bromwell from the Committee on the Grand Master's address, submitted the following report (the most of which is here given), which was adopted.

The committee to whom was referred the adddress of the Most Worshipful Grand Master respectfully and fraternally report, that they have considered the same as well as the limited time and opportunity allowed them would permit, and they are of the opinion that the address of the Grand Master together with the large volume of documents, including correspondence with the Masonic authorities of several jurisdictions, give evidence of great zeal, care, and industry, on the part of the Grand Master, and also shows that he has well and ably maintained the honor and dignity of this Grand Lodge, both at home and abroad, in a manner which must be gratifying to all Masons of the jurisdiction.

In regard to the questions arising between this Grand Lodge and that of New York, touching the case of George Van Houton, involving the action of Bigelow Lodge No. 438, and also in the matter of the complaint against Seneca Lodge No. 582, we recommend that the action of the Grand Master be approved, also his action in relation to the case of Bro. Mark Pollack, and the proceedings of Chicago Lodge No. 437.

In relation to the controversy between M. W. Grand Master Reynolds and the M. W. Grand Master of Missouri concerning the action of Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76 in initiating Arthur D. Tappan, which action is alleged by the Grand Lodge of Missouri to be in violation of the territorial jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, your committee would say that in their opinion the act of the Grand Master of Illinois, in the premises has been such as to entitle him to the warm thanks, and approbation of this Grand Lodge, and the law in such cases as held by the Grand Master properly held and applied, and the whole controversy shows a thorough mastery on his part of all the questions involved.

In the first place it is clear to this committee that according to the facts in the case of said Bro. Tappan, as ascertained and set forth by Grand Master Reynolds, he Bro. Tappan, was at the time of his initiation a resident of the Sate of Illinois, and Mt. Nebo Lodge was justified in treating him as such.

Your committee are surprised at the doctrine laid down by the Grand Lodge of Missouri, namely, in that the said Bro. Arthur D. Tappan having been initiated in a regular lodge is by reason of his residence being without the jurisdiction thereof, a clandestine Mason.

It is a matter beyond the understanding of this committee that a regular lodge working under a charter from a regular existing grand lodge can make a clandestine Mason in any way.

We hope the Grand Lodge of Missouri, for which this Grand Lodge and all our lodges and brethren entertain so high a respect and regard will reconsider their expression of Masonic law which we feel sure must have been uttered without that due reflection which usually characterizes the acts of that illustrious body.

To conclude this matter briefly, we recommend that the action of our Grand Master be approved; that the action on our part be communicated at once to the Grand Lodge of Missouri, with fraternal greeting and assurance of high esteem on our part toward that body.

Your committee further indorse the opinion of the Grand Master, in relation to recognizing the Grand Lodge of Quebec, as the only course now left by which the subject can be disposed of to the benefit of the Craft, and accordingly offer the following resolution:

Resolved, that this Grand Lodge recognizes the Grand Lodge of Quebec, as a regular Grand Lodge, and extends its Masonic welcome to said Grand Lodge as one proper to take a place among the regular Grand Lodges of the Masonic world.

Your committee beg leave to congratulate the Craft, upon the happy condition it has maintained throughout our jurisdiction during the last year, as shown by the statements of the Grand Master, concerning the laying of corner-stones, dedications, installations, anniversaries, and meetings for exemplification of work attended by him. We understand that the meetings at Odin, and Galesburg, have been particularly useful to Masons in those sections of the State, and recommend that such meetings be held in other quarters.

We join with the Grand Master in his touching tribute to the honored and lamented dead, who have been called from among us during the past year. May their names be long cherished, and their virtues imitated by the Craft who have enjoyed the benefits of their illustrious example.

Finally, your committee beg leave to join with the Grand Master, and this Grand Lodge in thanks to all the officers, to whose efforts the Craft are so much indebted, and in congratulation to the whole body of the Craft, upon the good order, the harmony and brotherly love which pervail among us, and in an invocation to the Grand Architect of the Universe that he may continue his blessings and approbation upon our labors.

The Committee on Jurisprudence submitted a report, which was adopted, and the amendments were laid over one year.

To the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Illinois, A. F. and A. Masons:

Your Commtttee on Masonic Jurisprudence to whom was referred various resolutions heretofore adopted by this Grand Lodge, and known in the printed proceedings as "Resolutions in Force," would respectfully report that they have carefully considered the same and their origin. They find that the object of the adoption of Resolution No. one, having been accomplished, in the compilation and publication, by Bro. John C. Reynolds, of a creditable history of Masonry in Illinois, they recommend that it be dropped.

They find that while the principle expressed in Resolution No. five is good, yet while the issue of dispensations is a prerogative of the Grand Master, with which the Grand Lodge cannot interfere, except by amending the constitution, recommend that said resolutions be rescinded, leaving the issue of dispensations in the wise discretion of the Grand Master.

Your committee also find that in their opinion the continued existence of Resolutions No. six, nine, ten, and twelve, in relation to the work known as the Conservator's work, serves only to keep in mind the recollections of an era of ill-feeling, now so happily passed, and therefore recommend that they be dropped.

The committee find that Resolutions No. seven, eight, fourteen, and fifteen, being only the expression of opinion of the law and of policy to be pursued for the time, need not further encumber our printed proceedings, and therefore recommend that they be dropped.

Your committee have had their attention especially called to Resolutions Nos. two, three, four, eleven, thirteen, sixteen, seventeen, and from eighteen to thirty-three inclusive, and find that while the regulations sought to be established thereby are good and wholesome, and they have, so far as the committee are advised, been obeyed as law, yet owing to the manner of their adoption, have, in the opinion of the committee, no binding force. Sec. eighty-six of the By-Laws of this Grand Lodge wisely provides that no alteration or amendment shall take place in the By-Laws except the amendment be proposed in writing, at a regular meeting of the Grand Lodge, spread upon the minutes and printed proceedings; and if a majority of the members at the next regular communication shall agree to the same, it shall become a part of the By-Laws. In the opinion of this committee, any regulation aiming at the dignity of a By-Law, must take the course here indicated, or be of no force. Therefore, deeming the objects aimed at in the resolutions last above-named wholesome and desirable, they have embodied the same in the form of amendments to the By-Laws, appended them hereto, and recommend them for adoption as such.

The committee believe that the practice of adopting resolutions intended to govern the action of the officers or members of the Grand Lodge or of subordinate lodges, and which practically amount to amendments to the Constitution or By-Laws, is subject to great abuse, and ought not to be tolerated.

Your committee have likewise had under consideration the subject of a Board of Examiners, provided for in Resolutions thirty-two and thirty-three, and believe the right exists in the Grand Master to call to his aid any Master Mason, and to incur any reasonable expense in maintaining and teaching the work; but that such appointment does not make the persons so appointed members of this Grand Lodge, nor is a provision by the Grand Lodge for their appointment necessary.

Your committee have likewise considered the recommendation of Grand Master Gorin made in 1867, and concurred in by the Grand Lodge of that year, that Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts, not applying for advancement within one year, be dropped from the rolls, said to have the force of a resolution in force, and, believing that the relation of Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts to their lodges cannot be thus summarily severed, recommend that the same be dropped.

Your committee have likewise had under consideration the subject of non-intercourse with the Grand Orient of France, declared in Resolution No. 34. They believe that it is likewise the province of the Grand Master, for what may to him seem good cause, to withdraw official connection from any body of Masons, and in like manner to renew such intercourse; therefore believing such resolution has served its purpose, recommend that it be dropped, leaving to the Grand Master, to renew official connection with the Grand Orient of France, when in his opinion, such recognition shall be proper.

The following amendments to the By-Laws of the Grand Lodge, are proposed by the committee:

Amend section 7, by adding after the last word the words "Any lodge failing to comply with the requirements of this section, shall forfeit its claim for mileage and per diem for its representative in the Grand Lodge."

Amend section 11, by striking out all in relation to Committees on Appeals and Greivances, on Mileage and Per Diem, on Lodges Under Dispensation, and on Chartered Lodges.

Amend section 11 further, by adding after the word "referred," in the third line of the sixth clause, the following: "to destroy all paid Grand Lodge orders surrendered to them by the Grand Treasurer, after being satisfied that the same have been paid, cancelled and listed, and their report on the same has been approved by the Grand Lodge."

Amend section 12 by adding after the third clause of the same, as "fourth," "fifth," "sixth," and "seventh," respectively, the clauses in section 11 pertaining to committees, Lodges Under Dispensation, on Chartered Lodges, on Appeals and Grievances, and on Mileage and Per Diem.

Amend section 12 further, by adding after the seventh clause thus provided for, the following: "All of which committees shall assemble at the call of the Grand Master.

Amend section 12 further, by striking out the word "three," where it appears in the second line, and insert the word "seven."

Amend section 13, by adding after the last word the words: "Which petition shall not be acted upon by said lodges, until the same shall have been presented at a regular meeting, and laid on the table for one month."

Amend section 18 by adding to the same the words: "And the secretaries of such lodges, shall record at length, with the proceedings, the dispensation under which the lodge is convened, and when chartered, the secretary shall likewise record at length, the charter."

Amend section 33 by adding to it the following words: "When two or more lodges desire to consolidate their membership into one lodge, they may do so by taking one of the names, and one of the numbers of said lodges and officially informing the Grand Master of such action, that upon such consolidation being perfected, the title to tho property of the two lodges shall be vested in said consolidated lodge, and a new special charter shall be issued by the Grand Master to said lodge, by its new name and number, without fee: Provided, that no proposition looking to such consolidation shall be acted upon by any lodge until the same shall have been presented at a regular meeting, and laid on the table for one month, and: Provided, further that such consolidation shall only be affected by the unanimous consent of all members present when such proposition shall be acted upon."

Amend section 35 by adding after the word "to" in the first line the following words:

"Receive any petition for membership or the degrees, unless the petitioner shall in such petition set forth whether he has or not ever made application to any other lodge for admission."

Amend section 35, by adding the following paragraph:

"When the petition of a non-affiliated Mason for membership in any lodge in whose jurisdiction he may reside, shall be rejected, he may again petition the same or any other lodge for membership without regard to time, in towns or cities in this jurisdiction where two or more lodges exist, upon the presentation of any petition to any lodge in such town or city, either for membership or the degrees; notice shall at once be given to each lodge in such town or city, of the presentation of such petition and of the time when the same will be acted upon,"

Amend section 36, by adding the words: "Nor shall any petition for membership or the degrees be received unless the petitioner shall have signed the same with his full name; and all lodges are required to preserve in their records the full name of each person hereafter becoming members thereof."

Amend section 40, by adding the following:

"And all lodges are expressly forbidden to confer either of the degrees or to transact any other business, save such as pertains to a lodge of sorrow, on the Sabbath day."

Amend section 46, by adopting in its stead the following:

Section 46. "No candidate shall receive more than one degree on the same day, without a dispensation from the Grand Master; and no candidate for the second and third degrees shall be advanced to such degrees, unless upon examination in open lodge he shall show a satisfactory knowledge of the lectures of the degree upon which he stands, except upon a like dispensation; nor shall any lodge confer any degree upon more than one candidate at the same time."

Amend section 49, by adding thereto the following: "That no lodge may interfere with the right of private ballot; and if a member of a lodge expresses to the Worshipful Master an objection to conferring a degree upon a petitioner, even after such petitioner shall have been elected to such degree, such candidate shall stand as rejected, and shall be so entered on record, and shall so stand until such objection is withdrawn; nor can the reasons for such objection be demanded. Where a candidate for the second and third degrees has been rejected by the lodge, such rejection shall not debar him from applying for such degree at the next or any subsequent meeting."

Amend section 61, by adding after the last word the following: "And will likewise sustain any lodge in administering any reasonable punishment upon any member who shall attempt to give the aid of Masonry in organized or individual form, to any lottery or gift enterprise."

Amend section 81 by adopting in its place the following:

"This Grand Lodge hereby interdicts all recognition of all persons claiming to hail from lodges within the bounds of the United States or of British America, unless such lodges are directly subordinate to the Grand Lodges in correspondence with this Grand Body, in the State, Territory, Dominion, or District from whence they hail."

Add to the By-Laws the following section:

"Section —, When for any reason the charter of any lodge shall be annulled, the Grand Secretary may, upon being satisfied that any member of such lodge free of charges, and in good standing, has paid all dues against him, issue to such member a demit under the seal of this Grand Lodge. And the Grand Secretary may, in like manner, issue demits to Masons made in lodges under dispensation, where for any reason such dispensations have been returned and no charter granted to such lodge."

Charter granted Bethesda Lodge No. 661.

The Committee on Petitions made report.

Several re-instatements were recommended, and several changes of location, which were concurred in.

Called off until 8 o'clock to-morrow morning.

In the evening the Grand Officers were installed, and the work was exemplified at Oriental and Blaney Halls.

THURSDAY MORNING.—R. W. Bro. William T. Palmer, Grand Secretary Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, was received with grand honors.

M. W. Bro. H. P. H. Bromwell, Grand Orator, delivered his oration, which commanded undivided attention. It will be published in the next number. A copy was requested for publication.

The amendment pending to change the location of the Grand Lodge from Chicago to Decatur, was lost by yeas, 265; nays, 948. All other amendments proposing a change of location were lost.

Sections 81 and 82 were repealed by ayes, 599; noes, 455.

Section 38 Grand Lodge By-Laws is amended by adding the following words: "No subordinate lodge shall entertain a petition from a candidate who may have been rejected by any lodge in this jurisdiction, until after the lapse of one year from such rejection.

The first part of Sec. 7 Grand Lodge By-Laws is amended so as to read: "Every lodge subordinate to this Grand Lodge shall on or before the fifteenth day of September annually pay to the Grand Secretary for the use of the Grand Lodge, the sum of seventy five cents for each Master Mason belonging to their lodge at the time of making the annual return, but every lodge shall pay at least ten dollars annual dues;" the rest of the section reads as before.

Sec. 11 Grand Lodge By-Laws was amended so as to make the Committee on Lodges U. D. consist of five, and the Committee on Chartered Lodges to consist of seven.

Paragraph 7, section 11, Grand Lodge By-Laws was amended, and now reads as follows:

"A committee on mileage and per diem, consisting of three members, whose duty it shall be to ascertain the distance necessarily traveled by each officer and representative entitled to mileage and per diem, and report the same to the Grand Lodge. The grand officers, members of the Committee on Masonic Correspondence and Masonic Jurisprudence, and the representative highest in rank from each lodge under this jurisdiction, shall be allowed five cents per mile going and returning, for every mile traveled from his place of residence, computed by the necessarily traveled route, and two dollars per day for each day's actual attendance at the Grand Lodge. No one shall draw mileage both as a grand officer and representative. Said committee shall make up the orders for mileage and per diem, and issue the same, and may employ such assistance as may be necessary."

Sec. 35, Grand Lodge By-Laws was amended by striking out the words "lunar month" and by inserting the words "four weeks." By this amendment petitions for initiation and affiliation are not required to lie over longer than four weeks.

Sec. 69, Grand Lodge By-Laws is amended by striking out the word "should" and inserting the word "shall."

The Committee on Constitution, &c., submitted a report which was amended, seconded, and referred to the lodges. The section relating to new lodges in Chicago, was ordered to be submitted separately.

A code of by-laws was also submitted which lies over one year. The report of the Temple Committee was adopted and the committee discharged. The charter of Rantoul Lodge was restored.

We never knew a committee labor so earnestly and incessantly as the Committee on Chartered Lodges. On Monday morning Bro. Luckey had every error which could be amended, in a condition for correction. We may safely say that fully three-fourths were subsequently corrected, and were not noted in the report, a large sum of money was saved, and much mortification avoided. But many irregularities and deficiencies remained which are reported. We hope that the Grand Secretary will take efficient measures to have the lodges avoid such mistakes in the future, though how he is to do more than he has done, we do not clearly see.

The Committee on Appeals and Grievances submitted a masterly report, but as it alludes to matters that ought not to have much publicity, the most of it is passed over.

In the case of Van Houton, the expulsion by H. W. Bigelow Lodge was confirmed. On motion of Bro. Hudson, the beloved and R. W. Bro. J. B. Samuel, M. D., of Carrolton, was elected an honorary member of the Grand Lodge.

On motion of Bro. Cunningham, it was

Resolved, That the thanks of this Grand Lodge and of the Craft in Illinois, are due to M. W. Bro. Harman G. Reynolds, for the courteous, dignified and masterly manner in which he has discharged the duties of Grand Master during the year now brought to a close.

Resolved, That we tender to our M. W. brother, our sincere wishes for his prosperity and our assurance of appreciation of the valuable services he has rendered the Craft.

Bro. Cunningham, from the Committee on Jurisprudence submitted the following report which was adopted:

To the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois:

Your Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence, to whom was referred the decisions of the M. W. G. Master, reported to the Grand Lodge in his address, would fraternally report that they have considered the same and approve of all except those numbered "2" and "13."

No. 2 reads as follows:

"An objection before balloting made to the Master, is equivalent to a rejection, and the ballot should be stayed until such objection is withdrawn."

Your committee are of the opinion that a ballot on every application to a lodge for membership or a degree is, according to the Landmarks of Masonry, and the By-Laws of this Grand Lodge, imperative, and know of no authority in the Master to dispense with, or to needlessly postpone, such ballot in any case.

The decision of the Grand Master numbered 13 reads as follows:

"It is unlawful to give a suicide, Masonic burial, unless the evidence of insanity is clear."

Your committee are of opinion that the right of Masonic burial is the right of every affiliated Master Mason in good standing at the time of his death, without regard to the cause of his death or condition of his mind, at the time of death.

Bro. Thomson from the Committee on Petitions submitted a report recommending the reinstatement of Bro. A. B. Hammer, which was concurred in.

An effort was made to require the Grand Secretary to keep his office and the archives at Chicago, which was laid on the table.

Several amendments were proposed to the By-Laws.

The calculation made by order of the Grand Lodge, in regard to the amount of mileage to be paid to Decatur, Springfield, Peoria, Chicago and Cairo, shows the following result:

To Decatur,	$8,414 40
To Springfield,	$8,593 30
To Peoria,	$8,944 30
To Chicago,	$11,183 80
To Cairo,	$17,391 10

The Grand Lodge closed.

Brethren, a Candid talk.

Three Things. First. The Grand Lodge has seen fit to repeal the 81st and 82d sections of the Grand Lodge By-Laws, whereby persons of color were in all forms excluded from entering our lodges. The history of this matter will be given in a future number. For the present a bare statement must suffice. Our brethren, many of them, seem to think that the door is open to a general admission of negroes. No such thing. There is no Grand Lodge in our knowledge that has any such regulation as the one just repealed. One year since, the Grand Lodge declared that it held exclusive jurisdiction over the terirtory of Illinois. This excludes all pretended lodges of colored Masons, and all who pretend to hail from them. The ballot will exclude all who are not desired; there is not one lodge in the State, we think, where a colored man can be elected to initiation. The law of objection will prevent the visit of any colored Mason, or any other man claiming to be a Mason, where any single Mason objects. That the 81st and 82d sections were in the face of the landmarks, cannot be denied. But three saving clauses are above reserved as landmarks, whereby every Mason can protect himself against unlawful or uncomfortable intrusion. The law of disabilities excludes every slave, every one who has been a slave, and every son of a male or female slave from initiation. This is a landmark which comes down from Sarah and Hagar, when Sarah declared her son should not associate with the son of the bond-woman. Now we stand upon the landmarks.

Second. We have had much fault found with us for withdrawing as a candidate for Grand Master. Well, let us say that the Grand Mastership was a serious financial disadvantage to us. Our ambition was fully gratified. We consented to be a candidate for the sole purpose only, of protecting and disseminating our work. The Grand Master elect, pledged himself, man fashion, to sustain the work. Then we withdrew, and we did right. The Grand Master will sustain the work. He has given the very best evidence of this by his pledge made at his installation, and by the nomination of Bro. Ide for Examiner. The Grand Lodge has also ordered that Grand Lodges of Instruction be held in several places. R. W. Breth. Chamberlain, Barnard, Prickett and Ide, have the work in their hands for two years, and they work precisely alike. The other Grand Officers will sustain them. When any party undertakes to disturb the present order in regard to work, it will raise a storm that no disturber can resist. Surely the time has come, when, all being a unit in the matter of work, party strife ought to cease. Brethren! please give the M. W. Grand Master your cordial support and co-operation.

Third. A project is afoot to divide the Grand Lodge, and create a Northern and Southern Illinois Grand Lodge. Nothing can be so suicidal to every Masonic, political, religious, moral, industrial or educational interest in Illinois. Whoever gives countenance to such an idea, is an enemy to Masonry, and an enemy to Illinois. Brethren, better to bear such ills as we have, than to fly to those we know not of. We pray you to discard such an idea as you would discard treason or crime.

Centennial Memorial.

We are in receipt from W. Bro. Ezra Palmer, M. D., W. M. of the Lodge of Saint Andrew, of a beautiful book of 292 pages, containing memorials of the formation of the lodge Nov. 30, 1756; the organization of the Grand Lodge of Ancient Masons Dec. 27, 1769, Joseph Warren, Grand Master; of the purchase of the Green Dragon Tavern estate, March 31, 1764, and of the Massachusetts Lodge, formed by Gen. Warren, May 12, 1770.

The book is embellished with engravings of the new Masonic temple; the banner of the Lodge of St. Andrew; lodge seals; the temple erected in 1830; the Green Dragon tavern, &c. The work is full of information. Many thanks to Bro. Palmer, and many good wishes for the Lodge of Saint Andrew.

Be of Good Cheer.

Some friend has sent us "The World's Crisis," with an article headed "Masonry developed" with a request to answer it. We decline. Our brethren will find that by pursuing the even tenor of their way, and leaving all such attacks wholly unnoticed, that no outside pressure or influence can seriously harm them. A few will get excited and rant, and maybe whole communities may be exercised, but men cannot always live in malice and vindictiveness, and reflection will make them more friendly than ever. Keep cool and silent, and let every Mason learn to be patient; watch and wait.

Refutation.

In an article headed "Look well to the East" in the Mystic Star for October on page 185, it is stated that the Grand Lodge made us a donation of $500 in 1869; the Grand Lodge never made us any donation. It is also stated that in 1869, we received $5,217 out of the Grand Lodge funds; we received $1,500 as compensation for our services as Grand Master and our traveling, printing, postage, and stationery expenses, amounting in the whole to less than two thousand dollars, and that is all we received. The whole article is of a similar character, and here we dismiss the slander and its publisher.

Upton's Tactics.

D. Appleton & Co., 90 Grand St. New York, have sent us a neat, portable book, containing a system of tactics for non-military bodies, interspersed with valuable plates, which will be very valuable to such bodies as sometimes desire to march in procession.

Colorado.

The Grand Lodge met the first Monday in this month, and the following Grand Officers were elected and appointed.

H. M. Teller, G. M.; C. J. Hart, D. G. M.; H. M. Orahood, S. G. W.; E. T. Stone, J. G. W.; W. W. Ware, G. T.; Ed. C. Parmelee, G. Sec.

Grand Master Teller appointed the following officers:

B. T. Vincent, G. C.; L. B. France, G. O.; J. A. Burdick, G. L.; O. A. Henry, G. M.; M. H. Slater, S. G. D.; Geo. C. Munson, G. J. D.; D. A. Hamor, G. S. B.; M. C. Kirby, S. G. S.; W. A. Corson, J. G. S.; A. T. Randle, G. T. P. G. M. Van Deren, assisted by P. G. M. Mason, as Grand Marshal then installed M. W. Henry M. Teller, Grand Master elect, who installed the other elective and appointed officers, who assumed their respective stations.

The Grand Master appointed A. Mason, A. J. Van Deren, and C. Withrow, a Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence; and W. D. Anthony, G. G. Brewer, and M. H. Slater, a Committee on Foreign Correspondence.

Grand Lodge of Washington.

Met at Olympia, Sept. 15, R. W. Bro. James H. Blewitt, D. G. M., presiding, R. W. Bro. T. M. Reed, Grand Secretary.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: J. T. Jordan, G. M.; J. H. Blewitt, Deputy; G. O. Haller, S. G. W.; D. C. H. Rothschild, J. G. W.; T. M. Reed, Grand Secretary, Olympia; B. Harned, G. T.; R. Willard, Grand Chaplain; C. B. Plummer, G. Lec.; R. Frost, G. S. D., A. S. Miller, G. J. D.; E. A. Light, G. Mar.; H. Crockett, G. Bible B.; D, Shelton, G. S. B.; A. Haines, J. Mildall, G. Stewards; Wm. Billings, G. Tyler.

We received a circular from Messrs. Laflin Butler & Co., of which we give below a copy; it was too late for the September Trowel. We cordially recommend these gentlemanly and accommodating paper dealers to our printer friends.

LAFLIN, BUTLER & CO.

To their many friends and customers throughout the West and North-west, Greeting:

Gentlemen—We have as you know, just passed through a fiery ordeal.

Our spacious store from which we filled your valued orders, has been swept suddenly out of existence, with an immense stock of all the requisites for Book-binding, Printers, Publishers and Paper Makers. We desire to inform you that we have risen from that desolating blow with renewed energy and vigor. Before the flames were conquered we had secured new quarters temporarily at No. 39 Madison street, and our orders for an entirely new and enlarged stock, were on the way to our manufacturers.

We have received letters and telegrams in rapid succession from these gentlemen assuring us of their readiness to run their mills at once on our orders, so that our large business will proceed with scarcely a perceptable interruption.

You may depend upon having your valued commands filled promptly, accurately and satisfactory.

Yours most respectfully,
Laflin, Butler & Co.
Chicago, Ill., Sept. 7, 1870.

Several Visits.

Business called us to Macomb September 17. We had a cordial welcome from the W. Masters of Macomb and Kyle Lodges, met several brethren, and were the guest of W. Bro. Hugh Ervin, P. M.; had a very graceful welcome from his wife and daughters, one of whom is resting from labor at Alton as a teacher, while the other gave us "Sweet Home," accompanied by music upon the piano in fine style. Lingering among dear home associations, we came near being left.

Monday Sept. 19, starting at 4 P. M. by the Springfield, & Illinois Southeastern R. W., we made close connection with the Illinois Central at Pana, and at 8 P. M. were among the brethren of Temperance Lodge No. 16, at Vandalia, in their excellent lodge-room, and for awhile talked of matters of olden and present time. Owing to a mistake in time of meeting, we promised them another visit, when we will give them more extended mention. Vandalia is a beautiful location, and was the seat of government from 1822 until 1838. The road from Terre Haute via Effingham, crosses here, and passes via Greenville to St. Louis. We tarried with Bro. Duffey formerly of Paris and Terre Haute, who now keeps the Dieckman House, where there is comfort and plenty.

Tuesday morning found us in charge of R. W. Bro. H. W. Hubbard at Centralia. With him, we visited the office of the Sentinel, where we found Breth. Cooper and Fletcher, with a capital, well arranged office, a large business, and ready pay. Then to the machine shops, where Bro. Oxley, Master Mechanic, politely conducted us through the shops and buildings of the Illinois Central Railroad.

Centralia has 4,000 people, two large schoolhouses, several churches, and all the institutions that make city life comfortable. Bro. Hubbard, after his utter wreck twice by fire, in Cairo, with dauntless courage, sustained by a noble wife, is contriving to wring prosperity from adverse fortune, and now has a small fruit farm, which bids fair to yield him a handsome return for his labor. We were made his welcome guest. In the afternoon we visited the fruit farm of Bro. John Betz, where we found a hospitable host and hostess, a charming residence, twenty acres of Catawba, Concord, and Virginia seedling grapes, and a large plantation of all sorts of fruit. Bro. Betz manufactures large quantities of wine, and sends off great amounts of fruit.

Centralia is in the midst of vast orchards and vineyards, and is the centre of an immense fruit trade.

At night, Centralia Lodge, W. Bro. W. A. J. DeLancey, W. M., was out in its glory. Brethren were present from Mt. Vernon, Irvington, Ashley, Richview, Salem, Odin, Patoka, and Onarga. Bro. Hubbard is always in harness, and the third degree was conferred in a most admirable manner. Some talk followed, and we think than Bro. De Lancey proved himself master of the situation. A banquet followed. From small beginnings, Centralia Lodge has become a power, and is now sustained by a chapter, council, and commandery. Our efficient agent, Bro. W. S. Pease, presides over the chapter, and Em. Sir Kt. Hubbard presides in council and commandery.

Thence on the 21st to Duquoin, where we found W. Master Messmore, and Past Masters Johnson and Standing. At the residence of the latter we found an excellent wife, whose love for Masonry is like the love of David and Jonathan.

Brief as was the notice, the brethren assembled in force, our reception was good, and we discoursed upon the practical duties of Masonry, until time for leaving. Duquoin has an excellent lodge and chapter, about 3,000 people, and will soon have a cross-road from Paducah to St. Louis. The site is beautiful, and schoolhouses and churches abound.

From Duquoin to Carbondale by the night train, where we found rest and refreshment in the hospitable family of Bro. Chapman, once more. A chat with the brethren in the morning, and thence to Cairo, where a committee escorted Bro. Hubbard and ourself to the St. Charles, where we found elegant quarters prepared and ready.

The St. Charles is kept by Bro. Jewett Wilcox, who is a pattern landlord and a thorough gentleman. W. Bro. Winston, Master of Cairo Lodge was assiduous in his attentions, and through his kindness we saw much of Cairo. In addition to a Court House, school houses, churches and hotels, Cairo has a government building for its courts, post-office, revenue offices and customs, which is a fine structure and a credit to the city. The streets near the levee are graded up so that all parts of Cairo are now easily traversed by the heaviest teams. The population is over 6,000, energetic, full of life and vigor, and, after the depression which followed the war, Cairo is now springing forward with renewed life. The St. Charles Hotel on the Ohio levee at the terminus of the Central, and is one of the institutions of Southern Illinois.

Cairo and Delta Lodges assembled at their elegant hall in the evening, and our reception by W. Master Winston and the brethren was the heartiest and most graceful that we ever received. We were surprised at the number present, and at once conceived a high respect for Cairo Masons.

R. W. Bro. Geo. E. Lounsbury and representatives from Mound City, Dongola, Anna, Villa Ridge and Centralia were in attendance, and the lodge-room was literally packed.

The third degree was conferred, R. W. Bro. Hubbard presiding, and W. Bro. Lufkin, Master of Delta, conductor on the floor. It was an impressive, dignified and imposing scene. The gavel was transferred to us, and after brief remarks we closed the lodge. Under the lead of an old acquaintance, Bro. Reardon, the brethren repaired to the old hall, where a fine banquet received due honor, and good music graced the closing scenes. A few remarks from Rev. Bro. Foote, R. W. Breth. Lounsbury and Hubbard, W. Masters Winston and Lufkin, and several others, and the brethren separated fully appreciating the sentiment,

"Happy to meet, sorry to part, and hope to meet again."

Cairo Lodge has about eighty members and Delta about forty-five. The chapter, council and commandery are prosperous bodies, and all are moving in harmony. As we sit here in the St. Charles writing this, we are in full view of the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi, freighted with boats, travel and commerce, with the sun apparently rising in Western Kentucky and setting in Illinois.

Such is the singular location of Cairo, and it is emphatically a delta. We shall soon start for Metropolis and before reaching there, we expect to be headed for every point of the compass.

The destiny of Southern Illinois is no problem. Its mines in coal, marble and lead are rich, and it is adapted to the culture of grain, cotton, tobacco and fruit. It will be divided into small farms, and no agricultural part of the world was ever, or will in the future be more densely populated than this highly favored region.

From Cairo we went by boat to Metropolis where we found R. W. Bro. Thomas Moore ready to meet us, and by whom we were made welcome to his hospitable home, happy with wife and son. In the evening we met the brethren in their large and convenient hall, gave them a talk, and held a social for some time.

Metropolis is situated on a point which is washed on three sides by the Ohio river, and it rises beautifully and gradually from the river for a mile and a half, and is well laid out at right angles. It is the seat of extensive boat building, and has a population of 4,000, and the largest gang saw mill in the world. Boats can land at any stage of water at any part of the shore along the town.

A short, pleasant visit, a sleep to Cairo, a ride to Odin, an interview with Breth. Whitehead and De Pew, thence to Pana and home.

Visit to Joliet.

On Tuesday, Sept. 27th, in pursuance of a previous invitation, in company with R. W. Breth. G. W. Barnard, Grand Examiner, O. H. Miner, Grand Secretary, and J. C. Reynolds, D. G. Secretary, we visited Joliet and were kindly received by R. W. Bro. S. C. Stearns, J. G. Deacon, Rev Bro. Gilbert, Gr. Prelate of the Grand Commandery, and W. Breth. Wm. E. Spears, W. M. of Mt. Joliet Lodge, and H. T. Woodruff, W. M. of Matteson Lodge.

In the evening we visited the lodges above named, and were very cordially welcomed by Bro. Stearns on behalf of the lodges and with the grand honors. Delegations were present from Channahon, Wilmington, Gardner, Peotone, Dwight, Plainfield, Rockport, Odell and other places.

The third degree was admirably conferred Bro. Barnard presiding, assisted by the officers of the lodges in Joliet. After the degree was complete, we made a few remarks, when about two hundred brethren sat down to an elegant banquet. The hall at Joliet is quite an improvement on the old one, which was very good, but was some time ago consumed by fire.

Its first room is a general reception hall; to the right is the banquet room, large enough to seat one hundred and twenty; south of the reception room are several apartments for committees and visitors, and to the left of the reception room is the lodge-hall capable of holding two hundred very comfortably. All the rooms are substantially finished, but the construction of the hall, its furniture, paintings, frescoing and style, can be excelled only by Oriental and Blaney halls. Every possible pains was taken to make our tarry agreeable and pleasant, and our reception, treatment, and good fare at the stone hotel, are among the pleasant things long to be remembered.

W. Bro. Geo. Mason.

We are under renewed obligations to the above named excellent brother, of Parkersburg, Richland county, for extra efforts recently made in behalf of TROWEL. For three years he has served on the committee on Appeals and Grievances.

Corner-Stone.

By virtue of authority granted by the M. W. Grand Master, a Grand Lodge was formed on Tuesday, Oct. 11th, at the grounds of the Sangamon county Poor House near Buffalo, as follows:

H. G. Reynolds, Grand Master.
Miles H. Wilmot, Deputy G. M.
Oliver P. Hall, Sen. Grand Warden.
Rufus K. Hawley, Jun. Grand Warden.
William G. Jack, Grand Treasurer.
Wm. M. Warren, Grand Secretary.
Gov. John M. Palmer, Grand Orator.
R. W. Diller, Grand Marshal.
Rev. David King, Grand Chaplain.
Virgil S. Ruby, Grand Sen. Deacon.
J. S. McDaniel, Grand Jun. Deacon.
James M. King, Isaac Mitchell, G. Stewards.
J. W. Wilson, Grand Tyler.

The corner-stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies and an instructive and very able address was delivered by Gov. Palmer, which was eagerly listened to by about one thousand ladies, citizens and brethren. A good basket dinner, keenly relished, closed the scene.

The Mystic Sign.

A Masonic Tale.

BY ROBERT D. HOLMES.

Bro. Reynolds:

Will you please correct an error, by giving notice through the columus of the TROWEL, that the beautiful story with the above caption was written for and originally published, in the Masonic Mirror and Keystone, of which we were the publisher and editor. The story was published in the issues of February 16, 23, and March 2, 1853, of Vol. 2, commencing page 49, and ending page 66. The error of original publication in the Dispatch, to which paper the credit is given by those who have copied the tale was quite natural, as our talented and deeply lamented Bro. Holmes was for many years, but subsequent to its first appearance in print, the editor of the Masonic department of the Dispatch. We only ask what we believe to be just and right, that to Ceasar be rendered that which belongs to Ceasar, and correcting the error by simply stating the source of original publication by those who have copied the tale of "The Mystic Sign."

Fraternally, Leon Hyneman.

Grand Bodies.

For Grand Lodge, please see our notice of proceedings.

The Grand Commandery will meet in the Temple at Chicago on the 4th (25th), Tuesday in this month.

We shall be obliged to defer full notices of the Grand Chapter and Grand Council until our next number. The officers are as follows:

GRAND CHAPTER

Augustus A. Murray, G. H. P. Decatur.
James A. Hawley, D. G. H. P. Dixon.
James C. Luckey, G. King, Polo.
Geo. E. Lounsbury, G. Scribe, Mound City.
Harrison Dills, G. Treas., Quincy.
James H. Miles, G. Sec., Chicago.
John C. Reynolds, G. C. H. Springfield.
Rev. A. P. Forsyth, G. Chaplain, Kansas.

GRAND COUNCIL.

H. W. Hubbard, G. P., Centralia.
W. A. Levanway, D. G. P. Dixon.
G. E. Lounsbury, G. Th. Ill., Mound City.
John F. Burrill, G. P. C. W., Springfield.
W. F. Bromfield, G. C. G. Mendota.
Charles Fisher, G. Treas., Springfield.
E. Blackshaw, G. Conductor, Urbana.
John C. Reynolds, G. Recorder, Springfield.

Tidings.

Items.

Fifteen thousand persons of both sexes and $15,000, 000 are engaged in the oyster trade at Baltimore.

August, Railroad Earnings.—Chicago & Alton, $510,049,86; Illinois Central, $861,357,88; Chicago & Northwestern, $1,216,213,00; Missouri Pacific, $343,194,00; North Missouri, $229 099,99.

Twenty-nine persons own 74,362 acres in Morgan county. If the same land belonged to 464 persons, it would add thousands to the population.

Large stock yards are being constructed at Galesburg.

Indiana and Iowa have paid their public debts.

The North of England Co-operative Wholesale Society, in its last quarter's report exhibits sales to the amount of $635,940 through three hundred minor societies, at a saving of $7.865 to its members.

We are in receipt of invitation from Hon. P. C. Wright, G. H. P. of Iowa, to attend a banquet at Clinton, October 18. We regret that prior engagements prevent our attendance.

Thanks to Secretary Tucker and committee of arrangements for invitation to attend the 25th anniversary of the formation of Oriental Lodge No. 33.

THANKS to Bro. Morris R. Locke, for card of invitation to the Jersey County Fair, held at Jerseyville, Oct. 11, 12, 13 and 14.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—ISA. 8, 20.

Opinions by the Editor.

1. Examinations between two brethren for their own satisfaction, without the order of the Master, does not constitute a basis for a voucher beyond themselves.

2. Jurisdiction between lodges is governed solely by air lines. Any other rule would lead to many complications and much litigation.

3. Demits can lawfully be granted to—

First. Those desiring to join a nearer lodge.

Second. Those desiring to leave the State.

Third. Those whose peace in their families or churches require them—and to no others.

4. Expelled Masons are restored to rights and benefits of Masonry by the Grand Lodge upon the two-third recommendation of the lodge which expelled, and to membership only upon the unanimous recommendation of such lodge.

In Memorium.

R. W. Bro. Alonzo Ramson, Master of Richmond Lodge No. 143, at Richmond, McHenry county, and D. D. G. M. for the third Masonic District, departed this life at his home in Richmond, on Tuesday, Oct. 11. The deceased was an excellent citizen, a good husband and father, and a devoted Mason.

Bro. Ransom was initiated, passed and raised in St. Marks Lodge in 1854, and the same year was one of the petitioners for Richmond Lodge and its first Senior Deacon, which station he held for three years. In 1857 he was elected Senior Warden and Master in 1858, which station he has held by continuous elections until his death.

In chapter Masonry he served one year as High Priest at McHenry.

We believe that he was a membsr of the commandery at Woodstock, and some years ago he received the degrees of the A. & A. Rite in Occidental Consistory at Chicago. One year ago, he was appointed D. D. G. Master, and he adorned and dignified the station. We have a letter from Bro. Cotting, stating that he was buried by Woodstock Commandery, and that a large concourse of Masons and citizens attended the funeral. We tender our sincere condolence to the widow and family, and to the lodge over which he so worthily presided.

During the week before the meeting of the Grand Lodge M. W. Bro. Wm. Lavely, attended three funerals of Masons, in Springfield: one was Bro. Casey, brought here from Taylorville, for interment; another was that of Sir John McGrady, long known in this city as a liveryman; the last was that of Sir J. W. Sponsler, formerly proprietor of the St. Nicholas in this city, more recently of the Spitley House at Lincoln, and at the time of his death, of Keokuk, Iowa. Bro. Casey was buried by Springfield Lodge No. 4, and Breth. McGrady, and Sponsler, were buried by Elwood Commandery of which they were members. The death of Bro. Strott will be noticed in November.

Quebec.

As will be seen by reference to the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, the Grand Lodge of Quebec was fully recognized at the late session. On our return from Chicago, we found a letter from M. W. Bro. A. A. Stevenson, G. M. of the Grand Lodge of Canada, deprecating recognition, accompanied by a circular, giving a historical resume of the matter. Quebec is gaining slowly, and as the G. L. of Canada has obstructed rather than accommodated matters, recognition will soon be universal.

Spirit of the Masonic Press.

Keystone, Aug. 27, Sept. 3, 10.—With our cotemporary we are fain to inquire, what is the matter in the post offices? Our papers are sent under printed directions, and yet how frequently comes the cry, "I do not get my paper?"

The late admiral Farragut who died recently at Portsmouth, N. H., was a Mason in practice and a sterling man and christian. His funeral was very large, and the Masonic services were imposing. He knew no fear.

The Corner Stone—Is a nice little paper published in the interest of the great pic-nic Oct. 4, and is sold for one cent. Published by S. W. E. Beckner 532, Broadway, N. Y.

The Mystic Star for September—Is a good number.

The Freemason's Journal, Montreal, Aug.—The Grand Lodge of Quebec is the burden of most of the articles. They are pointed and pungent.

Figaro, August 20.

Dispatch, Aug. 28, Sept. 4, 11.—In reply to the Keystone, the Dispatch says, that the Fraternity once had a good Grand Lodge Hall in New York, in which they put twenty thousand dollars, and that the remaining sums were borrowed, and that the whole was eaten up with interest, and sold by the sheriff. Now they do not intend to borrow a dollar. We say good, better, BEST.

A wheel-barrow race is proposed between the Grand Secretary and the Grand Treasurer of New York. O, for a railroad pass and a quarter.

Michigan Freemason, August.—Czar Jones, P. G. H. P. was indefinitely suspended Aug. 6, by Peninsular Chapter No. 16.

Elihu Mather, was born in Marlboro, July 26, 1782. In August, 1803, he was made a Mason, and soon after became a member of the Presbyterian church, of which he died an honored member January 29, 1866. We regret to learn that M. W. Bro. Coffinbury is in feeble health.

The editor well says that the Magazine, Boston, is the champion of the Masonic press.

The Landmark, Aug. 27, Sept. 3.—The National Grand Lodge of Germany, celebrated its centennary on last St John's day.

Anna Raymond says the "less refinement, the less the culture, the more fond the women of display." The same is true of men.

Review, August.—Caught up at last; good. The editor thinks the scene on the boat Mississippi on the excursion from St. Louis to Jefferson Barracks, as depicted by a graphic pen, somewhat colored. Not a particle. We were on the Lady Gay, and have no doubt of the literal truth of all that is said, and much more.

He designates Brennan's Freemason anti-Masonic. Grand Master Newcomb laid the corner-stone of the new State Lunatic Asylum, July 4.

Magazine, Boston, September.—William, King of Prussia, was initiated in 1840. He is protector of Masonic lodges in Prussia. St. John's Provincial Grand Lodge was formed by the Grand Lodge of England in 1733, Henry Price, Grand Master; the Massachusetts Provincial Grand Lodge (St. Andrews) was formed in 1769, by the Grand Lodge of Scotland, Dr. Joseph Warren, (Gen.) Grand Master. They were consolidated in 1792.

It is suggested by Bro. John H. Shepherd that there is but one man living who can write the history of anti-Masonry. True. That is Charles W. Moore. By all means let him write it.

The Freemason, London, Aug. 20, 27, Sept. 3.—This paper is very able and sustains the Grand Lodge of Quebec. The brethren of Halifax, Nova Scotia, had a fine pic-nic at McNab's Island, June 24.

In Everton Lodge, Liverpool, ten pounds ten shillings were voted to a worthy brother, and seven pounds to enable a brother to come to America.

Magazine, London, Aug. 20, 27, Sept. 3.—Councils of Royal and Select Masters have been formed in St. John's, New Brunswick, and Halifax, Nova Scotia. Col. Mainwarring, and Ashmole, the great antiquary were initiated at Warrington, England, in 1648. The Grand Lodge of Germany celebrated its centennial birthday on the 24th day of June; the Crown Prince is Grand Master. The Grand Lodges of England, Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands and Belgium were represented.

Masonic Monthly, August.—Courteous and fraternal.

The Gavel, Orillia, Ontario, September.—We can assure Bro. Ramsay, that quoting anti-Masonic authorities will not be likely to accelerate the recogniton of the Grand Lodge of Quebec.

Quebec and Rites are the staple subjects of discussion. The Grand Master of Canada sat with Masons he declared suspended in Grand Chapter and Grand Priory.

Freemason, St. Louis, September.—The editor takes the ground that a man who cannot read or write should not be made a Mason. It is unfortunate for a man that he cannot read and write, and the fact should have its weight, and no more.

The Masonic Advocate—Is the successor of the Home Advocate, Indianapolis, monthly, published and edited by Grand Master Martin H. Rice, at $1.25 per annum.

It is in the form and is the same size of The Trowel. The number before us for September, is elegant in appearance, and full of good Masonic matter. We rejoice at this evidence of success, and wish our esteemed cotemporary much comfort, success and profit in his enterprise.

The Cynosure.—The late numbers of The Cynosure indicates insanity or inexcusable ignorance. Among other things, Presidents Pierce and Grant, and Gen. Jefferson Davis are asserted to have been or to be Masons. Neither of them ever were Masons. The assertion seems to have been made for a purpose. Now odium is attempted to be cast upon the memory of Benjamin B. French, by insinuating that he could as clerk have done much mischief. The whole matter is set at rest by the vote of John Q. Adams, in his favor, in opposition to his party. In noticing the attendance of Dr. Mackey upon the lodge of sorrow, he is represented as a partizan of secession. The reverse is the fact as everybody ought to know. And such untruthful assertions, to our knowledge, are frequent in the Cynosure. We therefore dismiss the concern from our columns, until, at least in matters of notorious fact, it can tell the truth.

Voice of Masonry, September.—One of Bro. Bailey's best numbers. The editor takes strong ground for a temple as do we. It appears to be the organ of the Knights of Pythias, which seems to be becoming formidable. Handsome mention is made of our feeble effort at Young's grove, and of the festive scenes of that occasion.

Chicago Commandery went over to Plymouth, Indiana, to assist in laying the cornerstone of the new court-house. We find Sir Knights Gurney, Gibson, Letz, Barnard, Atkins, and Crane, were there.

The Masonic Mirror, -No. 1, Vol. 2, San Francisco, California, comes to us in the form of the Trowel, at $3.50. Sixteen pages, weekly, by the Masonic Publishing Company, 608 Market street.

The Order of the Eastern Star is making rapid progress in California.

Pomeroy's Democrat, Sept. 7—Bro. Tisdall is staunch for Quebec.

Kentucky Freemason, August.—Kentucky has over 30,000 Master Masons. The editor says he has had kindly relations with the Tidings, Record, St. Louis Freemason, Keystone, and Trowel, has tried to please somebody else and failed. He gets after the Cincinnati anti-Masonic convention with a two-edged sword.

SECOND EDITION.

We are unable to give our usual miscellany, and must confine ourselves to mere mention, or brief notes.

Moore's Magazine, Boston, for Oct., received.

Freemason, St. Louis, October, good.

Record Western India for August at hand.

The Freemason's Journal, Montreal, and the Gavel, Orillia, for September, received.

The Gavel and Freemason's Journal, united, comes to us for October from Orillia, Ontario, Robert Ramsey, Editor. $1.50 per year, monthly.

Kentucky Freemason for September.

The Landmark, Sept. 10, 17, 24, and Oct. 1.

Freemason's Magazine, London, Sept. 10, 17, 24.

Voice of Masonry, October.

The Masonic Record, October. We thank Bro. Blackie for an offer of asylum; but our pastor is a K. T. Safe at present.

Pomeroy's Democrat, Sept. 14 and 21. Thanks to Bro. Tisdall for kind words.

Evergreen, Sept.

The Courier, Sept. 11, 18, and Oct. 1. We reciprocate the good wishes of the editor.

Masonic Advocate for October. We thank the editor for his kind notices. He is at liberty to count our circulation.

Dispatch, Sept. 18, 25, Oct. 2. Three of our articles are copied in the last.

Masonic Mirror, Sept. 10, 17, 24, Oct. 1. It is worthy of the patronage of our Pacific brethren.

Keystone, Sept. 17 and 24, Oct. 1 and 8.

Figaro, Sept. 10.

Home Book, Sept. Two copies Oliver's Dictionary from "Sacred Name" to the end, and six pages of the "History of Initiation."

Masonic Ritual is the title of a new weekly, published every Saturday at 75 Gold St., New York, by E. D. & R. J. Ayers, at $1.00 yearly. It is a 4 page sheet, and has a large advertising patronage.

Bulletin du Grand Orient de France comes regularly.

The Cynosure, anti-Masonic, Oct. 4. Uncharitable and insane.

The Masonic Token. Quarterly. It argues the Quebec matter.

Sheldon's Dry Goods Price List, New York.

The Progress, New York.

The Chicago Courier.

The Chicago Postal Record.

Woods' Household Magazine for Aug., 1870. If a notice which is read by 30,000 or 40,000 persons is not worth a regular exchange, then the object is unworthy of a notice.

The Period.—We thank our old friend J. N. Holmes for a copy, published at Atlanta, Ga.

The New Age comes regularly.

Oliver Optic, Monthly, Sept.—Plane and Plank concluded; the best of all the stories yet. Monthly, in weekly parts. $2.50. Lee & Shepard, Boston.

St. Louis Home Journal.

From the Chicago Tribune.

The Blanchard Case.

Decision of the Referees—President Blanchard Gives False Impressions, Imputes Wrong Motives, and Violates Christian Fellowship.

The referees in the case of President Blanchard, of Wheaton College—who complained of the "card" published by C. G. Hammond, Esq., Rev. H. L. Hammond, Rev. S. C. Bartlett, D. D., Rev. W. W. Patton, D. D., and Rev. G. S. F. Savage, D. D., in which those gentlemen utterly denied certain charges which President Blanchard had printed and circulated, and declared that he was either a slanderer of his brethren, or else was not in sound mind—have made their report. The three referees were selected by the signers of the "card" from a list furnished by President Blanchard as acceptable to him. Their report is as follows:

To the Christian Public of Illinois;

The Committee of Reference of certain matters of misunderstanding between Rev. J. Blanchard and C. G. Hammond, Esq., Rev. W. W. Patton, D. D., Rev. H. L. Hammond, Rev. G. S. F. Savage D. D., and Rev. S. C. Bartlett, D. D., report: That the committee regret the delay in making their report in consequence of the absence from town of some of their number; that having heard the parties at length, and examined the documents submitted to them, namely, thirty-one letters, seventeen printed papers, a certified copy of extracts from the minutes of the Council at Lombard, and a written statement of three pages from C. G. Hammond, one of six pages from Rev. S. C. Bartlett, one of thirteen pages from Rev. W. W. Patton, one of thirteen pages from Rev. H. L. Hammond, one of four pages from Rev. G. S. F. Savage, and President J. Blanchard's reply of fifty-three pages, and the parties submitting these documents and statements as the case for decision, and requesting the committee to decide on the facts and allegations thus submitted, and to publish their decision, and both parties having signed a written agreement to abide by the deliverance as final; the committee find that the dispute is concerning statements of alleged fact and of motives imputed, published by Rev. J. Blanchard, which the other parties severally allege to be erroneous, offensive, and injurious.

Your committee, after reviewing the evidence, feel impelled to say that the facts fully show that President Blanchard has fallen into many historical errors in the statements he has made, has so connected one thing with another, or has placed words or expressions of others in such connections as to give false impressions to the public about his brethren, and has imputed motives of conduct which did not exist; and your committee think that in this he has violated that Christian fellowship which he ought to have preserved with his brethren.

(Signed)

Robert Patterson,
Thomas M. Avery,
Charles M. Tyler.

Chicago, Oct. 5, 1870.

We still adhere to our statement in the September Trowel, that we believe Pres. Blanchard to be honest and sincere, but we also believe him to be of unsound mind, and will have no more controversy with him. Henceforth his name is dismissed from our columns, and the Cynosure from our exchange list.

Masonic Ambition.

There is nothing so pleasing to the venerable Masters in Masonry, as that ambition in the young which tends to assist the advancement of the Order and expand the genius of the Craft. The flowers of evening are gathering about the hoary locks of those beloved sires, and they look upon aspiring youth with more than a fraternal interest and gratification. As the valley they are descending grows deeper, and the paths they tread are becoming greener, they look back on the light of the past and behold with rapture their young friends pressing after them in the temple. Their mantles are about falling, and a score would lift them reverently and with honor, ere they touch the ground. Their jewels are still blazing, but the hand trembles as it reaches them, and many a vigorous, hearty grasp is put forth to steady, and if need be, to becomingly assume them. The various paraphernalia of office must descend to other shoulders, and if youth preserves its spotless integrity with the same care that age has guarded its sacred instillments, then the Craft will do itself infinite credit in the future and reflect a blazing splendor on the past.

Ambition in any station of life, in any condition of circumstances or education, when untrammelled by insatiate greed, is always a noble element of the mind. Without it the world would not have moved one degree beyond the barbaric ages, and all the conveniences of civilization would be still the secrets of another sphere. Without it advancemens would never lift its eye to Heaven, but rank obscurity would fetter the incoming multitude. Helpless, mild, unchristian, and deformed humanity would have abruptly terminated in savage dens by violence and bloodshed, where now the peaceful strains of saint-like music accompany the departing soul into a future life. How may we often thank the "All-seeing One" for his great beneficence in implanting in our bosoms a desire of prominence!

If other men in the ordinary channels of life are impregnated with the aspiring element, and if it is necessary to the success of the world, that man in general should be inoculated with ambition, how much more necessary is it for the Craft to possess the elevating motives of a soaring mind? In works of benevolence we should be known by all, while words of comfort would drop from our lips, which should reconcile the fevered patient to his lot, even as the flowers cast at the feet of the wearied, sun-bronzed soldier, remind him of home and love and peace. If we were as ambitious to do good to others as we are to benefit ourselves, how many more weak hearts would flutter up to bright Hope and ask a boon of Fortune; how many eyes would shine forth with the assurance of Faith in the future, which now only dimly reflect the sad despair of the present.

How important, then, it is to keep ourselves awake and fully alive to passing events in the existing active state of the world. We may be humble, but if we are ambitious and watch closely for an opportunity our turn will come, when we may cast off the shackles of ignoble origin and leap into the company of the distinguished, when we can exchange ideas with noted statesmen, sip a genial bowl of wine with the celebrated artist, or have thought-wrestles with a famous Grand Master.

If we be not ambitious, then a thousand opportunities may come and pass, and no reckoning be made of them. Our plummet, then, seeks only to measure the depths of the brooklet, when we should be sounding the restless sea; our axe aims only at the sapling of learning, when we should be hewing at the great poplar in search of secret truth. Without ambition we are mere instruments without the ability to expand or soar—the tool of others, fit only to serve at the footstool on which greatness steps, in its mighty effort to reach the highest round of the ladder. We may be strong, but we only lift our neighbor up; our voices may be sweet, but we only sing another into fame; our brain is active only at a friend's bidding. Living thus, we fill but a line in the world's record, when our history should occupy a page; we are one of the leaves of the forest, we should be the stately trunk itself.

Let us all, therefore, take on some aspiration in the brotherhood. Let us have an aim, and that a high one. In seeking to reach the opposite shore of light, we may arrive at the island midway in the stream; in aiming at the eagle, we may hit the hawk; and in striving for the office of "Worshipful," we may at least reach the Warden's chair.—Magazine, London.

Martin Luther.

The great reformer was a Freemason. We give Luther's own statement regarding it, as given to his son, Martin Gottlieb, Christmas eve, in 1536, at his home in Wittenberg, who requested him to sing "that strange song" which he had learned when he got his medal. It has become the "Mark Master's song."

"During the night of Christmas, 1520, when I had, just fifteen days before, publicly burned the Pope's Bull, I sat in my study, weary and heavy laden. For the bold act, while it drew my staunch friends closer around me, alienated also at the same time the more timid multitude, and I was left to a certain degree alone. Melancholy and a certain sad feeling crept over me, as the twilight passed away and darkness threw a still greater gloom over the study. But at last I aroused myself, and said: 'A helper will be raised up for me—I will have faith in this my darkest hour.' Hardly had I come to this conclusion when there came a rap at the door, and three men entered and congratulated me upon the bold steps I had taken that day. The eldest inquired of me whether I had considered the danger and risk I ran in thus bidding defiance to the whole Papal power. I replied that I did not stop to consider the probable peril in my way, as long as I knew myself in the path of duty.

"'Well said brother Martin,' replied Hans Stauffenacher, who had until then stood behind his companions; 'well said! The Guild has long thought that in thee we have found a kindred spirit, and is now ready, therefore, to throw its protection around thee. What sayest,' art willing to become one of us?"

"I answered, 'but I am not skilled in the implements of thy calling; how can I then become one of you?' A quiet smile played around Hans' mouth, as he said: 'Ah, there are other implements we use than thou wot'st of, implements which thou wilt find that thou canst wield with a master's hand. In the meantime, for thy satisfaction, thou mayest know that many honorable knights and princes have been made free of the Guild, and they know far less of its implements than thou. We have departed from our ordinary usage in making thee this offer, but the Guild thought that thou wert not only a kindred spirit, but a master, in carrying out the great principles of true and untrammeled religion; it is therefore ready to extend to thee its privileges and help.'

"After a few seconds of hesitation I answered: 'Hans, I have known thee for many years, and am fully convinced that thou wouldst not lead me into any place, where, inconsistent with my calling, I ought not to go; but thy coming to-night seems to have been a special providence, for only a few moments ago did I feel cast down in my soul, when the thought that God would raise me up help, strengthened me. I am ready, therefore; lead on, I'll follow.'

"My three companions then conducted me to the Guild hall, where I was with many and ancient ceremonies, introduced among the brethren of the Mystic Tie. Judge my delight and surprise, when the first thing I beheld in the room was a beautiful copy of the Holy Bible, the book which I ever acknowledged the rule for our faith. I was then told that volume lies ever open in the hall, to be consulted by the brethren. Rapidly was I advanced that night, from step to step, until I reached the grade which entitled me to wear this medal, and know the meaning of its mystic inscription.

That night I learned, too, the beautiful song which you seem to like so much.

"Months passed by, and the multiplicity of my labors did not permit me to meet my brethren more than once, but they did not forget me.

"On the 2d of April I was waited upon by three of the Guild, who presented me, in its name, with this medal which I was now entitled to wear. They at the same time, earnestly entreated me always to wear it when abroad, and particularly when surrounded by enemies.

"A few days after this interview I left for Worms, to defend myself before the Diet. I need not now repeat to you what took place there. You and your mother have made me relate it so often, that you ought to know it by heart. Enough; the trial over, and I set out on my way home. Twice before I reached Moera, the residence of my grandmother, was I accosted by riders in rather a suspicious way; but at each time, when they caught sight of the medal, they stopped short, asked permissin too examine it, cast meaning glances at one another, then shook hands with me and left.

"When we came near the castle of Altenstein, I perceived one of the riders who had been left with me, become sad and cast down; at the same time he always kept close to my side. I entered into conversation with him, and endeavored to ascertain the cause of his grief. At first he remained silent, until it appeared that the words forced themselves to his lips, when he said: "Thy danger, Brother Martin, makes me sad. I felt a great struggle between my duty to keep concealed the order of the Holy Vehme, and the duty which I owe to thee as a brother of high degree in the Ancient Guild.

I have, however, given notice to the Guild, of which the noble Elector, Frederick the Wise, is an illustrious member.

"When I had heard the cause of his uneasiness, I replied: 'Be not troubled on my account; the Lord will raise up help for me.' Hardly had the words escaped my lips, before a troop of savage-looking riders, perfectly disguised, rushed down upon us, tore me from my horse, and, tying my hands, one of them took me up behind him, while the rest surrounded him, and then they all galloped off in a westerly direction. Rapidly they now continued to ride through the woods, nor did they slacken their pace until the Wartburg was in sight.

"When they drew up before the bridge of that stronghold, they lifted me gently from my horse, and led me into the hall of the castle. When arrived there, and I looked around me, I found assembled many of the noblest knights of the empire, and among them, the venerable elders of the Guild; and each of them, as well as those who were my late captors, wore upon their breast a medal similar to the one you now see.

"I was then told that my enemies had succeeded in arousing the Vehme against me; but the man who had charge of it, seeing the medal upon my breast, and having himself received one like it, informed the Elector of the pending summons, and the place where it was to be delivered. The trusty brethren of the Mark, when informed thereof, immediately assembled to rescue a brother from the clutches of the dark tribunal. You have seen how they executed their task.

"'But now, my brother, you must change your garb, and assume that of an esquire, until this storm shall have blown over.'

"My theological and literary labors, in which I engaged during my stay at the Burg, were much facilitated by the love which I found among the brethren of the Guild; and the connections I formed during that time, have continued to be among the dearest and most profitable I have made in life. I shall ever bless the day when I became free of the Guild."

"And I, too, will join the Guild when I shall be big enough," exclaimed little Martin Gottlieb.

In 1759 was buried in Dresden, Martin Gottlieb Luther, a lawyer, and worthy member and P. M. of the Guild, and the silver Mark was placed in his coffin, in accordance with his last request.—Mirror.

Colored Lodges.

We give the following extract from the very able address delivered by Grand Master Gardner before the Grand Lodge of this Commonwealth at its Quarterly Communication, March last. It furnishes a concise and intelligible history of the origin of the colored lodges in this country, and as clearly and intelligently defines their character and legal Masonic status, and ought to be, and it is to be hoped will be received as the conclusion of the whole controversy:

October 1, 1773, the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, after mature deliberation, decided that neither the Lodge at Castle William, nor any other travelling lodge, "has any right to make Masons of any citizen."

I have no doubt that, on the 6th of March, 1775, the day after Warren delivered his celebrated oration in the Old South Church, where he was menaced by British troops, Prince Hall and thirteen others received the three degrees in a traveling lodge attached to one of the British Regiments in the army of General Gage, by whom Boston was then garrisoned; that Prince Hall and his associates met as a lodge thereafter in Boston, without any Warrant or authority, until May, 1787.

In 1784, application was sent to England for a charter. The letter of Prince Hall, dated March 1, 1784, accompanying the petition to the Grand Lodge of England for the charter of the African lodge, says: "I would inform you that this lodge hath been founded almost eight years." "We have had no opportunity to apply for a Warrant before now, though we have been importuned to send to France for one, yet we thought it best to send to the fountain head, from whence we received the light, for a Warrant."

On the 29th day of September, 1784, a Charter was granted but it did not arrive at Boston for nearly three years.

April 29, 1787, it was received, and, on the 6th of May following, Prince Hall organized the "African Lodge" at Boston, ten years after the Massachusetts Grand Lodge had asserted its freedom and independence; ten years after the American doctrine of Grand Lodge jurisdiction had been established.

Without any other authority than that contained in the warrant for said lodge, Prince Hall, the Master thereof, it is said, on the 22d of March, 1797, granted a dispensation, preliminary to a warrant to certain persons in Philadelphia. Soon afterwards, Prince Hall established a lodge at Providence, R. I. African Lodge, of Boston, continued to act as a subordinate Lodge until 1808, when, with the assistance of the lodges at Philadelphia and Providence, established as above stated, it organized a Grand Lodge at Boston, which body granted Charters to several subordinates, not only in Massachusetts, but in several other States.

In June, 1827, the African Lodge declared its independence, and published its declaration in one of the newspapers printed at Boston.

It is unnecessary to argue the Masonic and legitimate effect of this Declaration. It was a surrender of their Charter, and a public declaration that from thenceforth they ceased to act under it, or to recognize its validity or the authority from whence it was derived. If the "African Lodge" had any existence at this time, by force of this declaration its existence came to an end.

In 1847, a National Grand Lodge was formed; and, says the petition of Lewis Hayden and others to this Grand Lodge, set out on page 132 of our printed Proceedings for 1869, "the African Lodge of Boston, becoming a part of that Body, surrendered its Charter, and received its present Charter, dated December 11, 1847, under the title of Prince Hall Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and by which authority we this day exist as a Masonic Body."

Under the direction of Prince Hall the Lodge prospered; but after his death, which occurred December 4, 1807, Æ 72, it became dormant, and ceased to have any actual existence. In 1813, upon the union of the Grand Lodges of England, African Lodge, which had been registered as No. 459 and as 370, was removed from the list, and was never after recognized by the United Grand Lodge. The Declaration of 1827 complains that the members of African Lodge could open no correspondence with the Grand Lodge of England, and that their communications and advances were treated with the most studied deglect.

Boyer Lodge, No. 1, was organized at New York City by the African Lodge or the Prince Hall Grand Lodge. The members of this lodge applied to the Grand Lodge of New York for recognition in 1812, 1829, and again in 1845, Grand Secretary James Herring made a report in 1846 which contains a letter from our Brother Charles W, Moore, Grand Secretary. which throws some light upon the condition of the African Lodge in Boston at this time.

Why this Charter was granted without the consent of the lodges in Massachusetts, and without any correspondence concerning the propriety of the step, is a question which can be answered by every American who remembers the bitter hostility existing in England at that date towards the successful rebels against the crown of Great Britain. This Charter, in common form, conferring no extraordinary powers upon the petitioners, authorizing them to hold a lodge, enter, pass, and raise Masons, and no more, was undoubtedly granted by the Grand Master of England, and under it the petitioners commenced work. The successors of the persons named in that Charter have magnified the powers granted by it; have construed it to confer upon them Grand Lodge powers; have set up, by virtue of it, Grand Lodges, and finally a National Grand Lodge, with subordinate State Grand Lodges; and have established an "American doctrine of Grand Lodge Jurisdiction" peculiar to themselves, distinct and separate from any other Grand Lodge government known to man.

Their National Grand Body "claims and exercises Masonic authority over these United States, with full power and authority to settle all Masonic difficulties that may arise among the Grand Lodges of these States."

The original Charter, granted September 29, 1784, under which the successors of the persons named therein have claimed to act from April, 1787, to the year 1847, and which was the only plausible authority by which they could hope to be justified in their proceedings, was not only surrendered by operation of Masonic law, June 18, 1827, by reason of the declaration then made; but on the 11th of December, 1847, was actually, in set form of words and with premeditation, abandoned and surrendered; and if they aow possess the parchment upon which it was written, it is kept only as a curious relic of the past, emasculated of its virility.

With a National Grand Lodge, State Grand Lodges, and subordinate lodges, they have so complicated the primitive difficulty, that it will not be easy for them to escape from the triple bonds with which they have bound themselves, although many of them may be dissatisfied, some with their form of goverment, and some with their associates.

This is simply a question of Grand Lodge Jurisdiction, a question which was settled and determined by this Grand Lodge, September 17, 1797, when it incorporated into its Constitutions this Section:—

> "The Grand Lodge will not hold communication with, or admit as visitors, any Masons, residing in this State, who hold authority under, and acknowledge the supremacy of any foreign Grand Lodge."

This provision, in some form of language, has existed in our Constitutions from 1797 to this day. It now stands in the following form:

"No Lodge of Ancient, Free, and Accepted Masons can legally assemble in this Commonwealth under a Warrant granted by any foreign Masonic Power."

This is, as I have said, simply a question of Grand Lodge Jurisdiction, and we can consider it calmly and without prejudice.

The Institution of Freemasonry is universal. It stretches from East to West, from North to South, and embraces within itself the representatives of every branch of the human family. Its carefully-tyled doors swing open, not at the knock of evrey man, but at the demand of every true and worthy man, duly accepted whatever his religion, his race, or his country may be. This Grand Lodge stands upon the high vantage ground of this catholic society, and recognizes the great principles which must necessarily underlie an institution which has a home on the continents and on the islands of the seas.

When that celebrated play of Terence, styled the "Self-Tormentor," was first introduced upon the Roman stage, before the great amphitheatre crowded with senators, knights, citizens, and men of rank, some of whom had been found worthy of a Roman triumph, and Chremes, in his reply to Menedemus, repeated the words,

> "Homo sum; humani nihil a me alienum puto,"
> "I am a man; nothing which relates to man is alien to me," the vast assemblage rose up, impelled by a common sentiment, and rent the air with reiterated plaudits. The words of Chremes have not yet ceased to reverberate. We bear upon the Masons' arms of Massachusetts, and have inscribed upon our Grand Lodge banner, the motto,—

"Humani nihil alienum,"
"Man every where our brother."

We are informed that a Masonic co-operative relief association is being formed at Cohoes, in this State, on a plan similar to that already existing in Brooklyn, but on a much more extensive scale. From the names connected with it, we can assure the brethren that its promises will be faithfully performed, especially as in addition to this is the fact of the deposit of $10,000 in this city as security to members.—Dispatch.

For Our Lady Readers.

On one of those fine summer evenings which have been so frequent lately, we sought rest and change of air under the hospitable roof of a dear friend and brother, who resides near the Neeshamony before it outflows into the river Delaware.

It was a lovely night; the stars were bright; the sky cloudless; the air fresh and invigorating; and we were induced by some ladies and gentlemen, who, like ourselves, were guests, to walk and enjoy the freshness, and hear the voices of the night, learn and listen to the joyous music which innumerable living things were giving from their tiny unseen homes.

It fell to our lot, lame as we are with gout, to have for a companion a sweet, charming, artless woman, whose bright eyes, quick perceptions, cleverness, and cultivation made us in our old age young again. Very soon after the walk began, she archly asked if it was true that we were a Mason. We propose to give the dialogue as near as we can now remember it.

"My child, why do you ask that question?"

"Oh, because I do so want to know all about Masons, and Pa tells me that he cannot give me any information."

"Then your father is a Mason, is he?

"Yes, I think so."

"Why do you think so?"

"He stays out late every now and then, and he says he was at the lodge."

"Is that the only reason you have for thinking so?"

"He often talks about Masons, and from what he says, it appears that he knows all the Masons do."

"Well now, tell me, what do you wish to know?"

"I want to know the secrets, all the Masons do in the lodge, what they say, and how they do."

"Well my child you could not understand the secrets if I told you."

"Yes, I could, if you would explain what they are."

"Will you let me ask you a few questions before undertaking to tell you the Masons' secrets. It may enable me to make you understand them the better."

"Yes, certainly sir, and I will answer them if I can."

"Did you ever in your young, bright life feel a vague, undefined, but powerful influence, which exercised over your thoughts and actions a spell, which made you at times happy and then taciturn, joyous and desponding by turns, the central object of all your reflections being some one whom you had more or less frequently met in society."

"Oh, I know exactly what you mean; but I won't tell you any of my secrets. You are not my father confessor, and of course I won't confess to you."

"Pray, my child, why will you not answer my question, yes or no. Surely there is no telling your secrets by just giving a reply to that one question."

"Oh yes there is. If I say I have felt what you describe, then you will say I have been in love, and that is a secret I won't tell."

"Do you admit then that simply answering a question is divulging the secrets of your heart, shut up as they are in that holy temple, and guarded by your modesty, loveliness and discretion."

"Yes, to a certain extent it would be telling my secrets, or those of any lady; for if she admitted she had these feelings, the reason is obvious, and no one ever lived as long as I have, and not been under that spell as you describe it."

"Then you, who have lived so long as you say, must have been under this spell, for you certainly cannot be an exception to your own rule."

"Now that's not fair for you to put such a construction on what I said."

"Why, my child, you said it thoughtfully, did you not?"

"I said it in answer to what you said."

"Am I then not to believe it, only because you said it in reply to my remark? What test is to be given in mutual conversation as to the real opinions uttered, if replies are not the thoughts of the speaker?"

"Oh, you are mixing up things so. You bother me, and I will say more than I intended to."

"Darling child, I don't wish to bother you, or make you say more than you intend, by simply asking one single question."

"No, I know you don't; but I can't answer your question."

"Why, because if you do, you will tell me your secrets?"

"Yes, that's it exactly."

"Well, then, you do not think you ought to tell me your secrets?"

"Why, no, certainly; why should I?"

"Don't you think they will interest me?"

"No, and if they did, they are my own affair, and not to be told."

"Ah, then your heart, the lovely temple where your affections and virtues, wishes, hopes, all that is sacred, are kept enshrined, is not to be opened to the gaze of every questioner, and yet you wish me to open the great Masonic temple, where are kept the secrets of the Masons, and tell you their secrets."

"Is a Mason's temple like a heart, and are Masonic secrets like those holy thoughts that dwell in our hearts?"

"Yes, my child, exactly. Woman's heart is a temple: the door can only be opened first to her love, and once so opened, she can have nothing in her heart which can live without the care and confidence of that love. The Masonic temple can only be opened to that first holy desire to 'have light,' and when closed, it can never be opened except as at the beginning. There is no partnership in Masonry as there is in love, and the secrets of the Mason live in his heart, and die with him, till his immortality reveals before God all things that were."

"You are preaching a sermon?"

"Oh no, child, not a sermon. I am telling you the secrets of the Masons: you asked me to tell them."

"You have not told me a single thing, for I listened attentively, and you have not said anything about the secrets of Masons."

"You have not answered the question I proposed before complying with your request, and which you said you would answer."

"Oh that has nothing to do with Masons' secrets."

"No? it has to do with your secrets, you say."

"But it is the Masons' secrets I want to know —not to tell you mine."

"Why should you expect greater confidence from me than you choose to give to me?"

"I don't know."

"Listen, my fair young friend, if you won't tell me your secrets, why should I tell you mine?"

Our friends who were in the walk, had preceeded us; by this time were lost to memory and view. We were diverted from our reverie by the sound of voices calling out for our whereabouts. They found us at last, and were very curious to know about the flirtation, as they called it. All their efforts were unavailing, for both my charming companion and myself were both Masons enough then, to keep our own secrets.—Keystone.

What Masonry Is.

One of the great mistakes of the present day is, that what is technically called the work of Masonry is Masonry itself. This is, indeed, a serious error, and, unless speedily corrected, will most assuredly tend to lower the importance and dignity of Masonry, and degrade her character as well as her mission.

Masonry, as we understand it and wish it to be understood, is an organization of principles —of principles drawn from the highest sources of human reason and divine revelation—of principles in their nature profoundly philosophical, and in their practical exhibition of untold value to the human family. Masonry, it may be truly said, is a system of symbolic mysteries, full of allegory, wisely designed to attract, enlighten and purify—to elevate fallen man, and reinstate him in his primeval grandeur—it is social and moral, but not strictly religious, for we have no waters of Jordan, in which the soul leprous with sin and defilement, can wash and be clean. We should encroach on the attributes of the Deity—we should touch with profane hands his altars, and offer strange fire thereon did we assert such claims. But we do not claim too much in asserting that Masonry is a moral teacher and reformer. Her mission is a noble one, and not near its end; and we most fully believe that she has a high destiny to achieve, as one of the principal aids to civilize the world.

Thus believing, we should be careful not to remove the Ancient Landmarks which our fathers have set. "Let us search and try our ways," and if we have wandered abroad or been led astray, let us return at once to the old paths. The universal language and the universal laws of Masonry are landmarks, and the key to that universal language, and those universal laws is love—love to God and love to man; this is what constitutes the solidity of Masonry, and its oneness, and the key thereto may be most readily found by an humble and diligent reading of the first great Masonic light—the Holy Bible. Conscious of man's impotency, and of the unstability of all earthly things, Masonry is based upon revelation, and places her "trust in God." This is the reason why Masonry has remained unmoved amid the convulsions which have agitated the political world. All other institutions of human origin have trusted themselves to their own supposed excellence or inherent nature based alone on the wisdom of man. Not so with Masonry. With the same foundation, "trust in God," we may rest satisfied that we cannot improve the superstructure by altering its form or features; but put the knowledge we received at its altar to its proper use. Masonry, therefore, is something more than what is technically called the work.—Pomeroy's Democrat.

Anecdotes of the Indians.

As a specimen of the Indian mode of thinking on the subject of religion we give a paragraph from the speech of the famous chief, Red Jacket. When the missionary mentioned the crucifixion, Red Jacket replied—"Brother, if you white men murdered the son of the Great Spirit, we Indians had nothing to do with it, and it is none of our affair. If he had come among us, we would not have killed him, we would have treated him better. You must make amends for that crime yourselves!"

Red Jacket took part with the Americans in the war of 1812, and becoming attached to a colonel, who was ordered on a distant service, took his farewell of him in the following speech:

"Brother, I hear you are going to a place called Governor's Island; I hope you will be a governor yourself. I understand you white people think children a great blessing: I hope you may have a thousand. And above all, I hope, wherever you go, you may never find whisky more than two shillings a quart."

A chief of the Five Nations met in battle his own father, fighting for the enemy. Just as he was about to deal him a deadly blow, he discovered who he was, and said, "You once gave me life; now I give it to you. I have paid the debt I owed you—let me see you no more."

A white man sold some powder to an Indian, telling him if he sowed it in the ground, he might raise his own powder. The Indian watched his ground for a long time with great patience, but at length began to suspect that he had been imposed upon. He said nothing, however, but went to the trader, who had forgotten the trick, and obtained credit for a quantity of goods. When the time of payment came, the trader requested the money, but the Indian, with great complaisance, only replied, "Me pay you when my powder grows!"

An Indian, notorious for his falsehoods, laid the following plan to obtain a drink of cider. He stopped at the house of an acquaintance, and told him that he had just killed a deer, and for a certain sum would tell him where to find it. "You know such a meadow?" said he. Yes. "You know such a tree?" Yes. "Well, under that tree lies the deer." It may be easily supposed that no deer was found. Some time after, the duped man met the Indian, and began to censure him for his deception. "Why," said the Indian, "You find him meadow?" Yes. "You find him tree?" Yes. "Then what for you find fault—me tell you two truth to one lie!"

An Indian woman, in a canoe, being drawn by the current into the rapids of Turner's Falls, in the Connecticut River, seized a bottle of rum, and drank it all off at a draught. The boat went down the falls uninjured, and she was found floating in it some miles below, alive, but drunk. Being asked how she dared drink so much in the prospect of certain death? she replied she "was unwilling that any of it should be lost."

Selected Poetry.

Did Ye Note Their Noble Bearing?

BY BRO. JAMES DOUNAN, OF CITY LODGE. NO. 408.

On the laying of the Corner-Stone of the Masonic Temple, June 8th, 1870.

Did ye note their noble bearing
As they marched in faith along?
Did ye mark their gallant footsteps,
Full forty thousand strong?
There was not a serf among them
To any creed or clan,
There was nothing in that phalanx
Save the brotherhood of man.

Did ye see within their number,
A despot or a knave?
Did ye see beneath their ensign
A monarch or a slave?
Were they not as brethren equal?
Did they not as brethren stand,
Ever ready, ever willing,
To obey the loved command?

Of the Master, as he bade them
To assist him while he laid
The corner-stone of Friendship,
By the true Masonic grade,
Of Square, and Plumb, and Compass,
Of Faith, and Hope, and Love,
The emblems of our Temple,
And the Temple grand above.

In that gathering of the noble,
There were men of will and mind,
The best blood of the nation,
The choicest of mankind;
There was but one common purpose,
Prevailing through them all,
To obey the love born summons
Whenever it should call,

For them to aid the needy,
Wherever they should be,
In the realm, or with the stranger.
On the land, or on the sea.
Masonic Love is holy,
Masonic Love is blest,
'Tis the hope of the hereafter,
'Tis of Charity the best.

Did ye note their noble bearing,
As they marched in Faith along?
Did ye mark their gallant footsteps,
Full forty thousand strong?
A braver band ne'er rallied
Upon the earth's green sod;
A truer class ne'er gathered
'Neath the canopy of God.

Funeral Hymn.

1 Wreathe the mourning badge around—
Brothers, pause! a funeral sound!
Where the parted had his home,
Meet and bear him to the tomb.

2 How his life-path has been trod,
Brothers, leave we unto God!
Friendship's mantle, love and faith,
Lend sweet fragrance e'en to death.

3 Here amidst the things that sleep,
Let him rest—his grave is deep;
Death has triumphed, loving hands
Cannot raise him from his bands.

4 Dust to dust, the dark decree—
Soul to God, the soul is free:
Leave him with the lowly slain—
Brothers, we shall meet again.

Job's Comforters.

The torrent came swirling the drowning man
Rider and horse; and the fish spoke thus:
Cried the grayling and the salmon trout,
"Why don't you swim like us?"

Down, lightning-struck, the æronaut fell,
Down through a mile of sky;
Cried the eaglets and the eagle king,
"Creature, why don't you fly?"

The mole came where the dead man slept,
The mole and his brother scout,
And said, "You soldiers that were shot,
"Why don't you burrow out?"

Masonic Work.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

In a former paper we ventured some strictures on the preliminary measures to introduce a candidate to the lodge—what might be called the outside work of the Fraternity. We propose now to remark on what may properly be denominated the inside work of the lodge, that which is performed within the secret door. We would ask the reader to remember what was said about the ridiculous and false impression sometimes made upon the mind of the candidate by officious members who are more zealous than wise. With this impression, which he cannot in a moment shake off, he is ushered into the lodge.

The first duty required of him is to address the Almighty Ruler, asking him for guidance and protection in all his future life, and especially in the business in which he is then engaged. Was there ever such an incongruous succession of circumstances as is here presented? But to make this incongruity still more prominent to the perception of the candidate, he is formally and solemnly required to make a profession of his faith and trust in God, as a requisite for him to proceed in the ceremonies.

What must be the effect of these scenes upon the mind of the initiate. On the outside of the door he has been bantered, and made to believe the whole business in which he is about to engage is ridiculous and trifling in the extreme, and when he arrives across the threshold, he is required to profess in the most solemn manner a belief in the most important truth in the Universe; one that underlies all real good, all true religion. If he is a man of thought and judgment he can do little else than come to one of two conclusions: he may conclude that the whole matter is a wicked farce, the outside influences being the real power of the Institution; or he may believe that the solemn services within have had very little influence on those members he has met in his progress to the Masonic altar. In either case a false impression is given, and the neophyte loses the best influences of the ceremonies he is yet to pass through.

But the candidate is conducted still farther, and inducted more deeply into the mysteries of Masonry. The circumambulation is performed. Much of the effect of this part of the ceremony depends upon whether it is made to conform in its spirit to the outside or to the experience of the candidate. It may be that the mind of the neophyte, impressed by the solemn and sacred ceremonies through which he passed as he stepped over the threshold, is in a frame to appreciate in a suitable way what is to follow, should the first impression be followed up by other ceremonies equally solemn. But are these ceremonies, as frequently performed, of that character?

We naturally move slowly and with measured step when our minds are imbued with the solemnity incident to an impressive ceremony. We naturally conclude that it is worthy of the time it will consume if done in an appropriate manner. No Christian partakes of the Eucharist as though he was starving or dying of thirst. No one goes to the baptismal font as though traveling for a wager. We do not precede our friends to the grave at the top of our speed. Quick and agile movements are inconsistent with solemnity, and are as much out of place in the lodge work, as a waltz at a funeral.

But how often do we see the circumambulation performed with all the lightness of manner and movement of the clown in the circus-ring. And not only that, it is sometimes made with so little regard to fitness that it partakes of the nature of violence towards the candidate. When this is the case the impression on the candidate must be thrown upon the side of the outside Institution, and accumulate in his mind still more arguments in favor of the trifling character of the Institution. What is worth doing at all is worth doing well, and abundant time should be taken to give the ceremony its full weight. A solemn, measured tread, the absence of haste and the presence of a serious and respectful regard for the occasion, are absolutely necessary on the part of the officiating officers. This remark applies as well to what is said as to what is done in this part of the ceremony.

As the candidate progresses in his initiation into the mysteries of the Fraternity he should still be met with a serious earnestness on the part of the officers of the lodge, that betokens a profound regard and reverence for the rites which he is called upon to perform. It is not enough that he has every word and syllable perfectly at his command as he delivers the charges and lectures of the Order. He is not a good officer who does not in some degree feel and appreciate the sentiments and truths which he enunciates. The best impression is made by the officer who enters so deeply into the spirit of the lecture that he pronounces as to identify himself with each thought, sentiment and sentence. He who does not do this can scarcely be said to be fit for the east of a lodge.

Suppose a candidate who has an idea of the fitness of things and the solemnities that ought to reign in a lodge of Masons, and has come up from the ante-room under the discouraging circumstances that we have said sometimes prevail, stands before the principal chair to receive the finale of the degree, and finds there as all along through the ceremony, there is an evident carelessness and negligence in the conduct of the work; that he finds no evidence of an appreciation of the beauties that even he can see are covered up in the indifference of the officials. Will he not be likely to become disgusted with the lodge which is so unmindful of the proprieties which they ought to preserve. That this is the legitimate influence of such a negligent, heedless and unimpressive way of doing the work of the lodge, few will dispute. That this is the cause of more than half the prevailing indifference among Masons, we profoundly believe.

If this be so, then it is the duty, the interest, and should be the pleasure of those who occupy stations of honor in the lodge, to amend their conduct in this respect. Do the work of Masonry in that solemn, reverential manner designed by those who created and established it; strive to be impressed with its importance; become permeated with its spirit; above all, do not so conduct, or so speak, as to give the impression to those with whom you come in contact, that Masonry is in any way a trifling institution, unworthy of the patronage of the serious and earnest men of the age.

But our limits admonish us to close. There are other points connected with those we have noticed, and which are important to the progress and welfare of Masonry, but we must make them the subjects of discussion in a future number.

Reminiscences and Recollections of the Grand Lodge of Illinois from Oct., 1848, until Oct., 1870.

NO. I.

On Monday, the 2d day of October, 1848, the Grand Lodge met in the hall of Piasa Lodge No. 27, in its ninth annual grand communication. What appears to be at one side now, was at that time more central to the desirable mode of travel than any other point that could be named. None traveled by stage or private conveyance who could travel by water. The representatives living along the Mississippi and Ohio, and near the Illinois River and the canal, traveled by boat. Of the 55 lodges entitled to representation, about forty might use the water, though some had to travel quite a journey to reach either river or canal. Those who traveled by water were liable to detention on the rapids or by sand bars, and the Grand Secretary and several representatives did not reach the Grand Lodge until the second day, having been delayed by reason of low water. Forty-five lodges were represented, by sixty-two brethren. The hall was a nice one, and for those times was thought to be spacious. The officers, members, representatives, and a few visitors, left no vacant room. One hotel, not as large as the American in Springfield, held all the guests, and high good humor prevailed. There was no peace or quiet in-doors or out, for the mirth, fun, and roars provoked by George Davis, of Chicago, Harrison Dills, of Quincy, and Dr. Cabiness and George Chatterton, of Springfield. There was no chapter at Alton and no Grand Chapter in the State. Councils were "attachments" to chapters, and Apollo Encampment at Chicago had long been, and perhaps was then, the only one in the northwest, west of Ohio. The entire membership did not exceed 1,500, while nearly 400 non-affiliates were reported. The Mexican war had just closed, and several who had distinguished themselves, appeared in Grand Lodge; among them were Col. Wm. B. Warren, who held Saltillo as governor during the conflict at Buena Vista, where Hardin, the last to retreat, gave his life to his country; Major Xerxes F. Trail, of Waterloo, who served under the chivalrous, Bissell, who held the pass against the entire Mexican army at Buena Vista; from that field Bro. Trail was borne, supposed to be mortally wounded. He had just been elected to the Legislature, but, before his term expired his wounds did prove to be fatal. Col. Stephen G. Hicks, of Mt. Vernon, was another whose more recent gallantry at Paducah, has covered his name with deathless renown. All three "rest in the stilly shade."

We will now proceed to notice the make up of the grand body itself. William Lavely was Grand Master. He received the degrees in Springfield Lodge No. 4, in 1842, was elected Master in 1843, and took his seat in Grand Lodge in October, 1844, and has held a deservedly high standing in Grand Lodge ever since. Many others have since come upon the stage, attained to high position and influence, and have died, gone away, or ceased to be active in Masonic matters. That year he was appointed Grand Sword Bearer, was elected Deputy in 1846, and, in his absence, Grand Master in 1847. He served his lodge as Master from 1843 until December, 1847; from December, 1857, until December, 1864, and by special urgency, one year since, making twelve years' service in all. He has served as Treasurer more years still, several years as Prelate, and two years as Commander in Elwood Commandery. A devoted Sunday School man, preeminent in Christian graces, pure in heart, blameless in life, scrupulously correct in business, lovely in the domestic circle, lively and social among his friends. Such is the man now sixty years of age—such for thirty-five years has been the man, who presided as Grand Master in 1848. Now, practically, the Father of the Grand Lodge.

John R. Crandall was Deputy. Of him we have spoken. Joseph C. Ketchum was Senior Warden of Piasa Lodge, and as such, represented the lodge at Quincy in 1847, and was also proxy for the Master of 31. He was elected Senior Grand Warden, and by his influence secured the meeting at Alton in 1848. It pleased the Grand Lodge to elect him to the same station in 1848 and 1849; he was a dignified and excellent officer, and would have been elected Deputy in 1848 and Grand Master in 1849, if he had been eligible. Fortune has been giddy with him, but we believe he is now in comfortable circumstances, with a good reputation.

Matthias Taylor, Master and representative of Lafayette Lodge No. 18 in Grand Lodge in 1847, was that year elected Junior Grand Warden. He was long noted as principal sojourner among Chicago Royal Arch Masons, and did at one time serve as High Priest. We believe he is still alive, at a great age, much honored and beloved. He did not attend the meeting of 1848, and Rev. W. W. Happy was appointed pro tem. He was then pastor of the Christian (Cambellite) church at Jacksonville, had been Master, and once or twice a member of the Legislature. He is still living at Jacksonville a worthy, good man.

William McMurtry was Grand Treasurer. He had been elected the previous year. Very few men located like Gov. McMurtry, have rendered such and so much real service to a community as he. He has ever been ready to advise out and help out of difficulty. It was his rule to keep out of difficulty, and had he been as careful in trusting others as he was to avoid unnecessary collision, he would have been immensely rich. He did his part in the Black Hawk war. In 1836 and 1838 he was elected to the House, and in 1842 to the Senate. In 1846, we had some influence in the Democratic party. Col. John Buford was then State Senator from Rock Island. He wanted Col. McMurtry nominated for Lieutenant Governor. Jos. B. Wells wanted to be nominated either for Lieutenant Governor or Congress. Julius Manning wanted to be nominated for Congress. He and Col. McMurtry lived in Knox county. We were authorized by Messrs. Wells and Buford to propose to Col. McMurtry, that if he or Mr. Manning would withdraw, we would join forces. Neither did withdraw and Mr. Wells was nominated and elected.

Two years after we were a candidate before the Democratic Convention for Lieutenant Governor. We had received the support of the largest delegation, and had we made a certain answer to suit them, would have been nominated on the next ballot. We knew this when we gave the answer, but we gave an honest one agreeably to our convictions at that time, although the answer would be honestly different now. Our vote fell off. Gov. McMurtry had just been named as a candidate, and we declined in his favor, and all the others followed suit, and the nomination was unanimous. He knew nothing of it until informed by one of the delegates on his return home. In 1854, when the anti-Nebraska excitement was at its height, he was nominated for Congress, and polled a full party vote. He was elected Grand Treasurer until 1862, and then declined because he was Colonel of a regiment raised for the service. No one is more welcome among old members than the plain, frank old Governor.

William Mitchell was Grand Secretary. We have spoken of him before, and shall have occasion to say more in our notice of the proceedings of 1849. Rev. S. Y. McMasters was Grand Chaplain. He remained as rector of the Episcopal Society until as late as 1860, when he went to some parish in or near St. Paul, where he has rendered efficient Masonic service, and stands deservedly high in his profession.

Dr. E. R. Roe represented Warren Lodge No. 14 at Quincy in 1847 as Senior Warden, and was elected Grand Orator. He had been Master, and was this year elected Deputy. Soon after he removed to Jacksonville, where he conducted a journal for some time. From there to Bloomington. During the late war, he acted in some capacity in one of the regiments, and on his return was elected Circuit Clerk. Again he resumed the tripod as editor of the Pantagraph, and is now a member of the Legislature.

William A. Dickey, Grand Lecturer and Master of No. 4, appeared in Grand Lodge for the first time. He was bred to the trade of a baker, but afterwards engaged with Bro. P. A. Dorwin in the tin and stove business. He was initiated by Bro. Lavely in 1856, and while traveling through Indiana fell into distress, and found it difficult to make himself known as a Master Mason. He came home and began to learn, and was appointed S. D. About this time John Barney was employed to lecture the lodge, and Bro. Dickey applied himself, and obtained the complete lectures, manner of working and of opening in every degree from the first to the ninth. And Bro. Barney gave him no Vermont, Webb, or Ohio work, but the Baltimore lectures complete. When Bro. Lavely was elected Grand Master, he appointed Bro. Dickey Grand Lecturer, and for two years he was sedulously employed in disseminating the work. As he taught the work, so Grand Examiners Chamberlin, Barnard, Prickett, and Ide teach it now. In 1846 he was elected Junior Grand Warden. In 1849, Central Lodge was formed of which Bro. Dickey was first Master. He was regarded as authority until his decease, which occurred in 1857.

The first dispensation granted by Grand Master Morse was to Bloomington Lodge in 1846. William C. Hobbs was the first initiate, and appeared as the first representative in Grand Lodge the same year, at Quincy, and was appointed G. S. Deacon. At Alton, he was elected Junior Grand Warden, and the following year at Chicago, was elected Grand Master. As his history, Masonically, is connected with the proceedings of 1849 and 1850, we will have occasion to allude to him several times hereafter. In personal appearance he resembled very few men. Erect in person; large, masculine form; expressive, mild eye; courteous manner; sweet, pleasant voice; and a face handsome as a blonde beauty; and in deportment combining both feminine and masculine graces, beauty, and manner. Charitable, just, and tolerant, he had no patience with cynics, bigots, or controversialists. In dress, always in fashion; in fact, the best dressed man wherever he might be found, and yet everything seemed to be as it ought to be. Pure, he wanted positive proof of impurity in others before giving any credence. Forgiving to such a degree that as governor, refusal to grant a pardon would have caused him exquisite torture. As a public speaker, he was easy, grace itself in manner, classical in diction, and wielded large influence. Both heart and hand were open, and of course he was always poor. The people of McLean elected him County Clerk in 1858; in February, 1861, he died, and but one other Mason—N. D. Elwood—was ever more sincerely or generally lamented. He served repeatedly as Master of Bloomington Lodge and with us took the Templar Orders at Chicago in 1849, and was the first Generalissimo of Elwood Commandery at Springfield. It was no task for him to govern a body of men, and none knew better how to resent an indignity and preserve his dignity and courtesy.

R. W. Bro. James B. Kyle, M. D., of Macomb, served as Grand Junior Deacon, pro tem. It was his first appearance in Grand Lodge. Soon after he was elected Master, and has probably served full half of the time since. Then and still in full practice, he is one of the first men in McDonough county, and bids fair for many years of life still. No Mason in Fulton, McDonough, and Hancock counties has exerted more or better influence than Dr. Kyle.

Peter Sweat was Grand Marshal. He had been several years Master of Peoria Lodge No. 15, was at that time Senator from his district, had previously filled the office of Sheriff, and subsequently did that of Quartermaster General.

In Capitular Masonry he served as High Priest and Grand Scribe.

W. W. Bennett, brother of R. W. Bro. John Bennett, of Petersburg, filled the station of Grand Pursuivant, pro tem., and represented No. 31 at Mt. Vernon as Master. In 1850 he was elected S. G. Warden at Shawneetown, and afterwards removed to Jacksonville, and after leaving that place, his history has been lost.

Anti-Masonry of the Last Century.

In the closing numbers of the last volume of the Evergreen we had occasion to refer to the anti-Masonic-ism of certain probably well-meaning but unquestionably very bigoted members of a somewhat irregular branch of the Methodist organization, and in the same connection, in the December number, we spoke of the papal antagonism to Masonry. It seems pertinent to give something more than a passing glance at these constantly recurring evidences of the special ill-will which intolerancy and illiberalism have ever nursed against our Order. It may be news to these gentry that their recent efforts have not even the merit of originality. From the earliest dates to which our printed archives reach, they contain full accounts of similar action by the different synods, conferences, etc., who were emulous of the fame of the Pope's Bull against the comet, and sought a similar glory by, in their own way, co-operating with his His Holiness in his fulminations against Masonry. We have in our library a copy of the—

"ACT OF THE ASSOCIATE SYNOD CONCERNING THE MASON OATH.

(First published in the Scott's Magazine for August, 1757.)

"EDINBURGH, 25th August, 1757.

"Whereas, an oath is one of the most solemn acts of religious worship, which ought to be taken only upon important and necessary occasions; and to be sworn in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness, without any mixture of sinful, profane or superstitious devices;

"And, whereas, the synod had laid before them, in their meeting at Stirling, on the 7th March, 1745, an overture concerning the Masonic oath, bearing, that there were very strong presumptions that among Masons an oath of secrecy is administered to entrants into their society, even under a capital penalty, and before any of those things which they swear to keep secret be revealed to them; and that they pretend to take some of these secrets from the Bible; besides other things, which are ground of scruple, in the manner of swearing the said oath; and therefore overturing that the synod would consider the whole affair, and give directions with respect to the admission of persons engaged in that oath to sealing ordinances;

"And, whereas, the synod, in their meeting at Stirling, on the 26th of September, 1745, remitted the overture concerning the Mason oath to the several sessions subordinate to them, for their proceeding therein, as far as they should find practicable, according to our received and known principles, and the plain rules of the Lord's word, and sound reason;

"And, whereas, the synod, in their meeting at Edinburgh, on the 6th of March, 1755, when a particular cause about the Mason oath was before them, did appoint all the sessions under their inspection to require all persons in their respective congregations who are presumed or suspected to have been engaged in that oath to make a plain acknowledgment whether or not they have ever been so; and to require that such as they may find to have been engaged therein should give ingenuous answers to what further inquiries the sessions may see cause to make, concerning the tenor and administration of the said oath to them; and that the sessions should proceed to the purging of what scandal they may thus find those persons convicted of, according to the directions of the above mentioned act of synod in September, 1745;

"And, whereas, the generality of the sessions have, since the aforementioned periods, dealt with several persons under their inspection about the Mason oath, in the course of which procedure, by the confessions made to them, they have found others, beside those of the Mason Craft, to be involved in that oath, and the synod, finding it proper and necessary to give more particular directions to the several sessions for having the heinous profanation of the Lord's name by that oath purged out of all the congregation under their inspection: Therefore, the syned did, and hereby do, appoint that the several sessions subordinate to them, in dealing with persons about the Mason oath, shall particularly interrogate them if they have taken that oath, and when and where they did so; if they have taken the said oath, or declared their approbation of it, oftener than once, upon being admitted to a higher degree in a Mason lodge; if that oath was not administered to them without letting them know the terms of it till in the act of administering the same to them; if it was not an oath binding them to keep a number of secrets, none of which they were allowed to know before swearing the oath.

"Moreover, the synod appoint that the several sessions shall call before them all persons in their congregations who are of the Mason Craft, and others whom they have a particular suspicion of as being involved in the Mason oath, except such as have been already deal with, and have given satisfaction upon that head, and that, upon their answering the first of the foregoing questions in the affirmative, the sessions shall proceed to put the other interrogatories before appointed; as also that all persons of the Mason Craft applying for sealing ordinances, and likewise others concerning whom there may be any presumption of their having been involved in the Mason oath, shall be examined by the minister if they have been so, and upon their acknowledging the same, or declining to answer whether or not, the minister shall refer them to be dealt with by the sessions, before admitting them to these ordinances; and that all such persons offering themselves to the sessions for joining in covenanting work, shall be then examined by the sessions as their concern in the aforesaid oath.

"And the synod further appoint that when persons are found to be involved in the Mason oath, according to their confessions, in giving plain and particular answers to the foregoing questions, and professing their sorrow for the same, the said scandal shall be purged by a sessional rebuke and admonition, with a strict charge to abstain from all concern afterwards in administering the said oath to any, or enticing any into that snare, and from all practices of amusing people about the pretended mysteries of their signs and secrets. But that persons who shall refuse or shift to give plain and particular answers to the foregoing questions, shall be reputed under scandal incapable of admission to sealing ordinances, till they answer and give satisfaction as before appointed.

"And the synod refer to the several sessions to proceed unto higher censure, as they shall see cause, in the case of persons whom they may find involved in the said oath, with special aggravation, as taking or relapsing into the same, in opposition to warnings against doing so.

"And the synod appoint that each of the sessions under their inspection shall have an extract of this act, to be inserted in their books, for executing the same accordingly."

The high ecclesiastical standing of this synod, and the personal character of its members, gave to their action on this, as on other subjects of their attention, an importance far beyond that of any of the spasmodic outbursts of the bile of the short-lived, illegitimate associations like that of which the Free Methodist is the mouth-piece.

The action of the associate synod was ably reviewed in the Edinburgh Magazine for October, 1757, and we commend the following extracts from this review to the calm and honest consideration of all who, from whatever cause, have, either actively or passively, acquired feelings inimical to the welfare of Masonry as an organization:

"The society of Freemasons, which, notwithstanding the opposition of human power, civil and ecclesiastic, has now subsisted for many ages, and always maintained its inseparable character of secrecy prudence, and good manners, stands at this day in such high repute that an apology in its behalf is certainly unnecessary.

"Public esteem has always been reputed a crime in the eyes of malevolence, and virtue and goodness have always been held as declared enemies, by hypocritical sanctity and bigot zeal. To such impure sources alone can be attributed a very extraordinary act lately pronounced against this venerable society by the synod of the associate brethren, and published in the Scott's Magazine for August, 1757. From this act the practices of this holy association appear so agreeable to those of the Roman Catholic church that they afford a shrewd suspicion that the principles from which such practices result are of the same nature, and have the same dangerous tendency, with those professed by the Roman See.

"In the year 1738, his Holiness, at Rome, by the plenitude of the apostolic power, issued a declaration condemnatory of the society of Freemasons, with an absolute prohibition to all the faithful in Christ to enter into, promote, or favor that society, under no less penalty than an ipso facto excommunication; and the help of the secular arm is commanded to enforce the execution of this declaration. By an edicts consequent to this declaration, information, are commanded, under the severest corporal punishment, and encouraged by an assurance from the Infallible Chair, 'That oaths of secrecy in matters already condemned are thereby rendered void, and lose their obligation.' Let it be recorded in history, to the honor of their holinesses, the associate synod in Scotland, that, in the year 1757, they also thundered out their tremendous bull against the Freemasons, whereby all their votaries are enjoined to reveal everything which, under the sanction of a solemn oath, they are obliged to conceal; they are thereafter to abstain from such societies themselves, nor are they to entice others to enter into them, under the terrible certification of being reputed under scandal, debarred from sealing ordinances, and subjected to higher censure, as there should appear cause.

"The professed reasons which brought the Fraternity under the papal displeasure were, that they confederated persons of all religions and sects, under a show of natural honesty, in a close and inscrutable bond, and under certain ceremonies which, by an oath taken on the Bible, they obliged them, by the imprecation of heavy punishment, to preserve with inviolable secrecy.

"These, urged by the seceders as the motive of their proceedings, are: That the Masons administered their oath of secrecy under a capital penalty, without first declaring what the matters to be concealed are, and that some of these things are taken from the Bible. And the publishers of the Scot's Magazine very quaintly insinuate another reason—that the whole matters thus communicated, under the strictest ties of secrecy, are a bundle of trifles and inconsistencies, unworthy of the solemnity of an oath. This they do by a reference made to a pretended discovery of the secrets of Masonry, published in their magazine, 1755, p. 133, and communicated to them, it may be presumed by the same correspondents.

"The great conformity betwixt these two bulls leave small room to doubt but the last, as well as the first,, would have had the sanction of corporal punishments if God, for the curse of mankind, had strengthened the hands and seconded the intolerating views of its authors with secular power. They have not, however, omitted what was within their grasp, but have attempted to erect a dominion over the consciences of mankind, by assuming a power of dispensing with human obligations. This is a privilege which, however envied, the reformed clergy have hitherto left, together with his pretended infallibility, in the possession of their elder brother at Rome, till, in this more enlightened age, these bold asserters of the Christian rights have dared to reclaim and vindicate it as their own; for, should antichrist enjoy any benefit which the saints are not better entitled to?

"This is not the least engine which has been successfully employed to rear up and support port the enormous fabric of Roman hierarchy. The most solemn treaties betwixt princes and states, the allegiance of subjects to their sovereigns, the obligations of private contracts, the marriage vow, and every other the most sacred bond of human society, are dissolved, and fly off at the breath of this dispensing power, like chaff before the wind; and to this, as to their native source, may be ascribed those many wars and devastations, rebellions, massacres and assassination, with which every page of the history of the Christian world is defiled.

"The cause of introducing oaths into civil society affords another forcible argument against this dispensing power. The natural and indispensable obligations to justice and equity, even assisted by the fear of civil punishments, were found insufficient to correct the depravity of the human mind, and prevent a bias to apparent self-interest in the performance of mutual contracts. It was found necessary to assume the aid of religion, and upon the faith of an oath to establish a mutual trust. This arises from a confidence that he who swears will never violate that promise to which he called God to be his witness, and of the breach whereof he has obtested him to be the judge and avenger. But, if there is anywhere on earth lodged a power of absolving from these obligations, mutual terror and diffidence must take place of the happiness and tranquility expected from civil society, of which the utter subversion must ensue.

"However extraordinary this claim may appear, his Holiness, the Pope, arrogates it to himself, very consistently with his other attributes. He is the viceroy of God, and, under him, the spiritual lord of the universe; all mankind are his subjects, and every oath, every contract is with a reversion of its being to him well pleasing.

"But upon what consistent bottom their holinesses, the brethren of the association, found their absolving power, is not so evident. Perhaps, like the Jesuits, those expert casuists and subtle divines, they will distinguish, and resolve it into a declaratory, whereby, from their profound knowledge, they only show that certain oaths, from the peculiar circumstances that attend them, are unjust or wicked, and performance of them will not, therefore, be expected by God; nor is it exigible by man, or obligatory on the conscience.

"In this view let us examine their conduct towards the Freemasons, and endeavor to explore on which side the imputation of blasphemy and impiety will fall.

"In this conflict the match is very unequal. A Freemason, while he defends the mysteries of the Craft, is at every step under the awe and reverence of his oath. He cannot, therefore, exhibit those mysteries to view, or subject them to examination. He must, then, like the lion in the fable, suppose the picture such as it is represented by his antagonist.

"Untainted probity frequently meets with strong opposition from villainy supported by fraud. Experience has taught her to oppose prudence to cunning, and secrecy and resolution to the dark designs and dire machinations of her foes. But the depravity or facility of mankind soon discovered the difficulty of attaining that degree of secrecy upon which the success of enterprise must often depend, and from a confidence of which resolution and activity result. To remedy this defect, religion interposes, and affords the sanction of an oath, under the security of which the schemes suggested, and maturely planned by judgment, are entrusted to prudence and resolution for their execution. Hence oaths of secrecy have become one of the necessary hinges of government—they have been adopted by every civil state, and every branch of administration requires them. To them must be ascribed the success of the greatest enterprises. Under their influence the noble, generous plan of British liberty was matured into execution, and the purposes of popish tyranny rendered abortive by the revolution; and to them the Freemason owns his grateful acknowledgments for the unrestrained liberty of defending his Craft, and of detecting the damnable principles and black practices of the pretended messengers of Christ, without the dread of a merciless inquisition. The innocence of such oaths cannot then be doubted, and their necessity sufficiently sanctifies their use.

"But it seems the seceders hold it a crime to exact an oath of secrecy before the things required to be kept secret are revealed. Can anything be more ridiculous than this objection? The purposes of such oaths would thereby be disappointed, for the secret would be communicated without any security or obligation to preserve it, and it would then become optional to grant it or not. Cromwell, that arch politician, when he imagined his secretary's clerk, who was fast asleep, had overheard him deliver some important orders, would not trust to the security of a subsequent oath, and thought that security could be assured only by his immediate death. The common practice of the world refutes the objection, which could only proceed from those whose want of modesty equals that of their honesty. Mankind is so prone to religion that it requires only confidence enough for any persons, however unqualified, to assume the character of spiritual guides, and they will not fail to obtain votaries. These, from that same tendency, soon yield up their judgment and consciences to the direction of their teachers, and their affections or antipathies, which become no longer their own, are pointed at particular objects, as the zeal or private interest of their priests shall dictate. One distinguishing characteristic of the associate brethren seems to be an abhorrence of every oath not devised by themselves, and framed to promote the interest of faction, rebellion and schism.

"[They have, in their synods, condemned as unlawful the clauses in Burgess oaths, with respect to religion and allegiance to the king.]

"They have not, as yet, however, perverted the morals of all their followers; some of them, notwithstanding of all their endeavors, still retain a regard for an oath as the sacred and inviolable bond of society. This, they perceived, was a check to their ambitious views of an unlimited obedience from their people. It was, therefore, necessary to diminish that reverence, in hopes that when their deluded flock had learned to overleap the fence in one instance, they would not be scrupulous to do it in any other.' And for this end, the nature of an oath of secrecy is deliberately misrepresented, and rashness and profanity ascribed to it.

"Oaths have almost universally had some rite or ceremony annexed which, however insignificant in themselves, were originally expressive of something that tended to increase the awe and respect due to that solemn act. The casuists all agree that, though the oath is equally obligatory without them, the perjury is, however, increased by the solemnity. All nations have adopted them—the Hebrews, by putting their hand below the thigh of the person to whom they swore (Gen. xxvi, 2; xlvii, 29); the Pagans, by taking hold of the altar (Et, ut mos Græcorum est, Jurandi causa, ad aras accederet, cic. pro Balbo), and both, protending their hands to heaven (Gen. xiv, 22).

"Suspiciens cœlum, tendit que ad sidera dextram,
Hæc eadem, Ænea, terram, mare, sidera Juro.
Virg. Æ l. 12, v. 196.

In which last they have been followed by all Christian nations, some of whom, particularly our sister kingdom, when they take an oath, touch or kiss the holy Gospels; and not only so, but every private society, every court of justice, have forms of administering oaths peculiar to themselves. Shall not, then, the society of Freemasons be allowed that privilege, without the imputation of superstition and idolatry?

"The matter of the oath comes next under consideration. The Freemasons pretend to take some of their secrets from the Bible. A grievous accusation, truly! 'Jack, in the Tale of a Tub, could work his father's will into any shape he pleased; so that it served him for a night-cap when he went to bed, or an umbrella in rainy weather. He would clap a piece of it about a sore toe; or, when he had fits, burn two inches under his nose; or, if anything lay heavy on his stomach, scrape off and swallow as much of the powder as would lie on a silver penny—they were all infallible remedies.' But it seems Knocking Jack of the North will not have all these pearls to be cast before swine, and reserves them only for his special favorites. What magical virtues there can be in the words of the sacred passage mentioned in the act (1 Kings, vii. 21), the world will be at a loss to discover; and the holy brethren, so well versed in mysteries, are ~~the~~ most proper to explain.

"But there are other things which are ground of scruple, in the manner of swearing of the said oath. This the synod have not thought fit to mention; but their publisher has supplied the defect by a reference to a Mason's confession of the oath, word and other secrets of his Craft (vide Scot's Mag. 1755, p. 133) which indeed contains variety of matters insignificant and ridiculous in themselves, and only fit for the amusement of such persons as the ignorance and incoherence of the author display him to be.

"The Freemason, conscious of his integrity, and persuaded of the good tendency of his principles to promote the purposes of virtue and human happiness, beholds with contempt the impotent efforts of envy and ignorance, however sanctified the garb, or dignified the title they may assume. In his lodge, which he considers as the school of justice, love and benevolence, he is taught to oppose truth to misrepresentation, good humor and innocent mirth to sourness and grimace—the certain signs of malice and imposture. To attend the importunate calls of his enemies, would be to interrupt his tranquility; and, therefore, wrapt in his own innocence, he despises their impotent attacks, and for the future will disdain to enter the lists with champions so weak and ignorant, so deluded and deluding."

In the language of the author of the review in question, "The Freemason does not think himself at all concerned to defend and support whatever nonsense shall be fathered upon the Craft by the ignorant and malevolent. The honor of the Fraternity is not in the least tarnished by it."

Though this was written more than a hundred years ago, yet we know not how we could improve either the sentiment or the expression of this able and courteous defense of the Craft, and we can only close our present reference to the subject by, in the kindest spirit, asking our defamers to contrast the bitter wordings in which their assaults are clothed, with the temperate style in which the responses are made.—Evergreen.

How I Became A Freemason.

BY AND OLD MASON.

It is now many years ago, and I was a young man. My father was not a Mason, nor my elder brothers, nor any of my intimate friends. The war of the anti-Masons was raging violently, and political demagogues were availing themselves of the excitement to ride into power. Minsters of the Gospel were hurling their anathemas from the pulpit, and the public teemed with violent invectives against the Craft. I had no means of knowing anything about the truth or falsehood of these public and vehement charges, but suspected that much of it was manufactured by politicians, as political capital, for personal and party purposes. The whole country at a distance resounded with the agitation; but as I did not live in the immediate vicinity, and being quite a young man, just assuming the responsibilities of life, I had but little time or inclination (for I was not personally interested) to examine closely into the merits of the controversy.

Just about this time, a new influence was brought to bear upon me, to induce me to prejudge the case and declare myself an anti-Mason. I was a member of the church, and somewhat zealous in the religious activities of the day. My most intimate personal friend in the ministry, was a man somewhat advanced in life, very pious and very zealous. He was a man of ordinary mental abilities, but his education had been sadly neglected. His appearance and manners were a little uncouth, his address quite awkward, and his preaching abilities below mediocrity. The consequence was that, though no one doubted his piety or sincerity, he did not succeed in making himself acceptable in the congregations to which he ministered. The field of his labors was frequently changed, and he was unfortunate in being assigned to poor and out of the way stations. His salary was in consequence quite limited, and often even the small amount was not all paid.

He felt all this keenly, for he was very sensitive and looked around to discover the reason for ~~his hard lot. He was not a Mason, and had~~ an unfavorable opinion of the Order. He soon discovered that some whom he imagined were instrumental in having him assigned to poor stations were Masons. He at once put the two facts together and felt assured that one was the sequence to the other. The conclusion was immediately reached that Masonry was the direct cause of his hard lot; from that moment every mishap and misfortune that befell him was attributed to the Freemasons. He was doubtless sincere in this, and believed it most religiously. No wonder he was an anti Mason. Had he paused to inquire, or looked nearer home for the reason why he was assigned to poor and obscure stations, he might have arrived at a different conclusion; but having found a scape-goat, he at once bound the burden upon him, and then sent him forth with all the maledictions he could heap upon his head.

I was very intimate with this mistaken good man. He was my pastor, and I being young, he took especial care to give me instruction in things pertaining to the Christian profession. Among other matters he was careful to warn me against the great evils and pernicious influence of Masonry. Viewing it from this stand point, and through the medium which colored and clouded it to his eyes, it was a fearful and most dangerous organization. By its pretentious professions, it captivated the unsuspicious youth, and lured them in its toils. Once there, they were bound hand and foot, head and heart, and led away the helpless captives of an art that could only have originated with the Prince of Darkness. He set all this before me, related terrible stories of the wickedness of the Order, pictured its direful influences upon society, and faithfully, earnestly, and with tears in his eyes, warned me to have nothing to do with Masonry; it would blast my morals, destroy my religious enjoyment, injure my reputation in life, and send me to perdition in the world to come! Such were my instructions, and such the solemn warnings I received from my spiritual adviser, in whose piety and sincerity I had unlimited confidence. It would not have been strange had I become as bitter an anti-Mason as himself. But I did not.

Young as I was, I thought I could see where the difficulty lay; that the good man had conjured up from his perturbed imagination a hideous monster that had no real existence. There was not a Mason that I knew of, in all the circle of my personal acquaintances, yet I could not believe that the members were guilty of robbery, murder, treason, and all the fearful catalogue of crimes with which they were charged. So I patiently listened to the good man's fatherly warnings, without permitting them to have any influence in warping my judgment, or moulding me into an opposer of what I knew nothing about.

In a year or two my venerable friend removed to the west, and I never saw him again. But in a few years I too concluded to transfer my residence to Ohio, and settled in a prosperous town where there were two lodges. I thought not of Masonry, for my attention was given closely to business and the cares of a growing family. It chanced that among my acquaintances I discovered that two or three were Freemasons. They were men of standing in the community, honorable, honest, and highly respectable. I did not trouble myself about their Freemasonry, nor did one of them ever introduce the subject with a view to proselyting me, nor did I ever express to him any opinion on the subject of Masonry. I knew nothing about it with any certainty, and therefore had nothing to say either for or against it.

One day I received a letter from my former friend. It was a mere letter of friendship, but the writer availed himself of the opportunity to renew his cautions against Freemasonry; to which was added the usual philippic against the dreadful and dangerous institution. It happened that I was in company with a Mason, at the time I received and read the letter. Turning to him I stated its contents, and asked him in all sincerity if there was anything in Masonry to justify my friend's fierce opposition to the Order, and remarked, jocosely, that I was tempted to join the Freemasons to see if it was the dreadful institution that some represented it to be. The gentleman assured me that there was not the slightest cause for this anti-Masonic spirit, and the bitterness with which many pursued the Order; that it was a moral, charitable, social organization, designed to cultivate the social virtues and benefit society at large. I knew this gentleman to be a man of honor and truthfulness; that he had no motive to mislead me, and was incapable of doing so, even if there were motives.

After a full and free conversation on the subject, I came to the conclusion that I would make application for membership, and so expressed myself. My friend said that he would not advise or persuade me to do so, but if I had determined on it, he would present my application to the lodge, and aid me in any way he could. I excepted his kindly offer, and at the next meeting my name was presented for initiation. In due time I was accepted, and initiated. Since that day I have taken, not only the three degrees of symbolic Masonry, but those pertaining to the Chapter, Council, and Commandery. In all I have ever seen or heard, in all the duties enjoined, in all the instructions received, I have yet to discover anything of a pernicious moral influence; on the contrary, I have acquired much valuable knowledge, enjoyed many social advantages, formed many valuable personal acquaintances, and been benefitted in various ways. I believe Masonry to be a good institution, and capable of being made much better and more useful. Some of its members may be bad men, but they would be such, and possibly worse if they were not Masons.—Masonic Review, Cincinnati.

IT is quite possible that our remarks on Bro. Findel were not conceived in a spirit of admiration, for we by no means intended they should be. We do not undertake to criticise his history, but to express our opinion of his intolerable self-sufficiency and his frequently expressed and offensive contempt for American Masonry and Masonic government in the United States; for his ill-concealed desire to break up our Grand Lodges, and to applaud the intrusion of Hamburg on our territory, and follow it up with others of like character, till every other lodge on our soil would owe fealty to a different Grand Lodge, or to none at all, as might be most convenient. He is, in fact, a common barrator, and as he persists in scolding American Masonry, we are determined that he shall understand, without any mincing of terms, that we know our own business, and are quite competent to transact it without any of his impertinent interference. He professes to be only a symbolic Mason. Let him attend to that department in his own country, and, so far as he can, persuade the brethren to follow him, run it according to his own notions, but when we want him to teach us what is good for us, we will send him word. The myths and legends of our degrees may be very silly, but they are such as we have received in trust from our predecessors, and we propose neither to change them ourselves, nor, so far as we can prevent it, suffer others to do it for us, and especially one who, like Findel, wraps up his would-be instructions in an envelope of superciliousness.

In the paragraphs of the communication above, to which we have appended small figures, our correspondent points out practices of former times, which have been amended with us, and asks if we do not call them reforms. We answer without hesitation that we do not, in the sense he would evidently attach to them. They are very decided, and much to be applauded improvements in the conduct of Masons; but they are not reforms in Masonry. Masonry is a great principle, a most laudable rule of action, a mystic bond of union and friendship, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. It is not in human wisdom to reform it, for when humanity has arrived at the level of its sublime teachings, the end of earthly things will have been reached, and reform will not be needed.

The conduct of Masons may very well be reformed, and in view of what has already been accomplished, we may look forward with hope to the time when profession and practice will more nearly assimilate. If our grandchildren can improve so much the better for Masonry in their day and generation; it will have a lighter burden to bear, and a smoother road to travel.

In the statement set forth by our correspondent in the concluding paragraphs of his letter, we fully concur, though we take a more cheerful view of the facts than he does.

The reason why the distinguished magazine of intellect, mentioned by him, does not shed a portion of its intellectual energy on Masonry, is because "literature, business, and politics," pay, and Masonry does not. It is on the contrary a matter of sacrifice, and those whose time is a gold mine, and whose lightest words are transmutable into dollars, prefer to make that use of them to wasting their talents on the mere uplifting of the oi polloi, when no gain can possibly come from it. Henry Clay and DeWitt Clinton were distinguished Masons because they were distinguished men apart from Masonry, and they would have been so esteemed though they had never set foot in a lodge after their initiation. Clinton gave much time and thought to the Institution, but the labors of his whole Masonic life could hardly equal the labors and sacrifices of the Grand Master of New York in a single year, with the present proportions of the Fraternity. We shall have to try and get along without the distinguished illustrators of the liberal arts and sciences, but, God aiding, we will do for and in the name of Masonry greater work, and by patience and perseverance, weave for it a remembrance that will live when they and their works are forgotten.

Few men are so constituted as to be able to serve two masters at once, and so it is that he who so makes himself the servan of Masonry as to merit the term of "distinguished" among the brethren, must to that end forego the opportunities of distinction in the world, and be content with the passing fame of his Masonic labors. We know several who have been content to wear away the best years of their lives in that service, who will go down to the grave with no other blazonry than the love of the brethren, but who will, we doubt not, be lovingly remembered when the great ones of earth are no more mentioned among men.—J. W. Simons, Dispatch.

Oh How Tender!

That a man's private griefs and misfortunes, the scorns of adversity, and all the ills that mark our passage through this life, should be borne by himself with such fortitude as may be given him, is, we presume, a proposition that will meet with general assent. But the best established rule may have its exception. We feel that in this place we are not addressing the general public, but brethren, linked to us not only by the mystic bonds of the institution, but by the steel hooks of warm personal friendship. Many of these are located in distant places, and will only know of our great loss when these lines fall beneath their eyes. We may then be pardoned a brief tribute to the memory of one who has so long been the sharer of our life, and who has apparently so untimely been called to leave us. Of a peculiarly unselfish nature and genial temperament, she had the faculty of making friends of all who knew her, and of leaving in the hearts of all who were separated from her, a feeling such as we all experience when we part from an old and valued friend. So loving and devoted a wife was she, that during all the quarter of a century of our married life, she never gave her husband an unkind word nor angered him with cold and averted looks. Knowing us better than we know ourself, she guarded us against our inherent weaknesses, and encouraged whatever was likely to lead us in the better way. A most tender and devoted mother to her children, a sincere friend and wise counsellor, a true and loving wife, she has gone from the duties which she bore as her share of the heat and burden of the day, to that rest which has been prepared from before the foundation of the world. Nature bends before the trial, and cries out against the bereavement; but our better judgment points to the saint, and teaches us that it were cruelly selfish to recall the loved one from that presence so infinitely beyond the power of man to understand. We leave her in the hands of one who doeth all things well, and we trust it may be given us and to her many friends for whom these lines are written, to find consolation in the thought, that from her home beyond the gates of "Orient pearls" she looks down upon us and them with infinite and tender love.

We desire to express to the many, many friends, who, in the hour of supreme distress have gathered around us with words of sympathy and acts of kindness, our most greatful thanks. The ladies of Alpha Chapter No. 1, and Olive Branch No. 7, Order of the Eastern Star, for their great kindness and genuine, womanly sympathy, have our deep and grateful acknowledgements. The Knights of De Witt Clinton and Clinton Commanderies, and the brethren of Normal Lodge have laid us under obligations which can never be forgotten.

Out of our affliction, we at least learn, that there is a consolation in human sympathy, and that the loving tie of the Craft is a bond which even death cannot divide.—J. W. Simons, Dispatch.

The Kentucky Widows' and Orphans' Home.

The Widows' and Orphans' Home at Louisville was dedicated recently by the Grand Lodge. It was in August of last year that the Board of Directors invited architects to prepare designs for a building to cost about one hundred thousand dollars, offering a premium of $300 for the adopted design. From among those submitted that of Messrs. Strugby & Mergell of Louisville, they selected as the most suitable for execution. The corner-stone of the present bnilding was laid by the Grand Lodge on the 17th of October, 1869, and the erection of the building commenced in April of the present year.

The entire front of the building, according to Messrs. Strugby & Mergell's design, is 128 feet. The depth of each wing 100 feet, the height to cornice, 65 feet, to top of towers, 125 feet.

The cellar and foundation walls are to be of the best rubble masonry, the brick walls to start from a good stone base course.

The basement, which is entirely above the ground, will contain the general dining-building room, 50 by 80 feet in the center, and kitchen, pantry, store-rooms, and china closet on one side; and wash-room, laundry and drying-room on the other; with servants' hall and bath and wash-rooms, closets, &c., for girls, in the north wing, and work-room and wash and bath-rooms, closets, &c., for boys in the south wing.

The principal story will contain in the center, the public office, private office, with vault, reception parlor and library; also two chambers, with wash and bath-room attached, and a dining-room with pantry and china closet, for the superintendent; on one side the sitting-rooms, lavatory and nursery; on the other the recreation halls, with two large school-rooms with matron's rooms attached in each wing

The second-story will contain, in the center, twelve chambers for two beds each, giving accommodations for twenty-four widows; also a double parlor. On the sides there will be four large dormitories with lavatories, water-closets, &c., attached. In the north wing there will be an infirmary 349 by 22 for ten beds, with wash and bath-rooms, closets, &c., for girls, also a dormitory 34 by 22 feet. The south wing will be arranged in a similar manner for boys.

The center of the third story contains an exhibition hall for boys 50 by 80 feet. The side buildings and wings are divided into dormitories, with wash-rooms, &c., attached.

There will be in all sixteen dormitories, each to contain from twenty to twenty-six beds, giving room for from 300 to 400 children. The attic story may be arranged to give bed room for fifty more.

The plan of the entire building has been arranged so as to give a free and full circulation of air and light to every part of the same. Wide halls and stairways are so laid out as to give easy and convenient communication to or from every part of the building.

In designing this edifice care has been taken to avoid the monotonous and prison-like appearance which most buildings of this character present, where only the purpose of securing strength, durability and space is taken in regard.

The entire plan is divided into three principal parts, the center, and the north and south wings.

The center projects about thirty feet in front of the side building. The faces of the walls are ornamented with quoins, banded pilasters, and projecting courses. The windows are surmounted with brick projections, all protected by stone courses. The roofs of the wings will be covered with tin. The central portion of the building is designed to have a French roof and two towers with ornamental iron railing.

There will be stone porticos, with balconies, and steps and buttresses to front and side entrances. The entire building will be crowned with a galvanized iron cornice of bold projection.

The estimated cost of the entire building is about $100,000.

Only the north wing has been contracted for at present. There are four cellars, furnace and store-room, occupying about 54 by 80 feet.

The first floor contains the office, recreation room, kitchen, 30 by 22 feet, dining-room, 60 by 22, with pantry and china closet attached, store-room, wash room and laundry, and wash and bath rooms for boys.

On the second floor are the Superintendent's rooms, store and linen-rooms, wash and bath-rooms, for girls, sitting-room, nurseries, school-room, 22 by 33 feet, with recitation-room, 16 feet 6 inches by 24 feet attached.

The third and fourth stories are arranged for dormitories to accommodate about 100 children, with the attendants.

A broad stair is continned from the cellar to the attic, and a corridor 9 feet wide extends through the entire length of the building from north to south in center of each story. An additional temporary stair leading from basement to attic, is placed in the south end of the corridor.

The building will be provided with all the modern conveniences, and heated by steam. —Kentucky Freemason.

M. W. Hon. H. P. H. Bromwell.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.—At a regular meeting of Charleston Lodge No. 35, A. F. and A. Masons, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

To the W. Master, Wardens and Brethren of Charleston Lodge No. 35, A. F. and A. Masons:

Your committee, appointed at a special meeting of the members of Charleston Lodge No. 35, to draft suitable resolutions in expressing he sense of the members of your lodge in regard to the well-wishes to our M. W. Past

Grand Master, H. P. H. Bromwell, who has emigrated to the far West, beg leave to submit the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, Our M. W. Brother H. P. H. Bromwell, Past Grand Master of the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois, and Past Master of Charleston Lodge No. 35, A. F. & A. Masons, in changing his place of residence from among us, to locate in the far West, Charleston Lodge No. 35 will be deprived of one of its bright ornaments, as well as a great supporter of its institutions; the Grand Lodge of a distinguished past grand officer and orator, and the Fraternity of the great State of Illinois a scientific Mason, Masonic philosopher, lecturer, counselor and adviser. Therefore,

Resolved, That we, the members of Charleston Lodge No. 35, as Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, as well as citizens, most deeply regret the departure of our M. W. Brother; that we will remember our M. W. Brother when upon our knees before the altar in our devotion to the great I Am; that He may guide and protect him while traveling through the checkered scenes of life; that we will at all times be happy to meet our M. W. Brother, and rejoice at his welfare. His virtues, lights and lessons, which he has so frequently spread among us, has made a deep and everlasting impression upon our mind and memory, and as we have met from time to time upon the common level, acted upon the plumb and parted upon the square, by faithful reliance we hope again to meet our M. W. Brother upon the Grand Level above and never, never, no, never to part.

The Lord bless thee and keep thee,
The Lord make his face shine upon thee,
The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee,
And give thee peace.

In Weal and Woe.

From an address by Bro Thomas E. Garfield, Grand Master of Missouri.

Let us look in, and picture a scene; for there will be little vexatious domestic scenes beneath every roof. The weaker and fairer members of that family discover that there has been a change which annoys them principally because they are not in the secret. The young wife sees the husband's preparations to leave the house, alone, after the cozy evening meal, and curiosity, or something, impels her to ask:

"Where are you going to-night?"

The reply is: "To the lodge."

"To the lodge! I can't see the good of the lodge, and do not like it because it calls you away from me.

With his arm tenderly about her, and his voice full of endearing music, he rejoins:

"On the contrary, it brings me nearer to you. The lodge is my friend, and it is your friend, too."

"It is a friend, then, that deprives me of your society—me, your dearest bosom friend. It compels late hours; these objections I know. Among your secrets there may be others I do not know. I do not like Masonry, and am determined never to be friends with your lodge—never!"

And the little foot stamped a sharp exclamation point, and the dress rustled away as if vexed through and through. With increase, rather than diminution of affection, he goes to the lodge, nevertheless, and continues to go at intervals whenever Masonic duties call him there.

How many times this little parlor play was repeated in the happy months and years that followed its first rehearsal, it matters not. The filmy cloud of feminine regret often floated into the otherwise clear evening horizon of that home, and sometimes it rained a few drops, but the morning sun dispelled the mists, and all was well again—it may be, fresher and brighter for the rain.

There is a touching sequel to this scene, and the incidents are true.

A dark storm cloud came, bearing in its heaving bosom the thunder bolts of war. The husband responded to his country's call for patriotism and valor on the field of battle. At the tearful parting from the fond partner of his joys, his last words were:

"Remember the lodge—the friend I have told you of; you may trust him—he will be your brother! And our little ones—he will be a father to them till I return to you."

He has gone.

There was a dark and terrible day, which sent the driving mists of sorrow and despair into a thousand homes from the storm that had burst far away. The dark fogs of cheerless grief, and even more racking uncertainty, put out the lights, drowned the hearthstones, crept into the wild throbbing hearts and struck them with a sickly chill, and all was hushed as death, and desolate as the open grave.

A great battle had been fought. Legion was the name of the wounded, and long was the list of the slain. The mother sat motionless, clasping her children with convulsive tenderness, breathing the name of their father so low that Heaven alone could hear. A crumpled newspaper, which told of a heart wrung with anguish, lay on the floor beside them.

"He is missing—perhaps, O! it cannot be, a prisoner? May be wounded, and left on the field to die. My poor little ones—fatherless."

Such were her thoughts, but she did not breathe them aloud.

A stranger stood at the door clad in the uniform of gray. He was not alone, but his companion in blue lay stretched on a litter which might be his bier. He moved not, he gazed not; he did not seem to breathe. No word was spoken. The stranger handed the woman a paper on which was written in a trembling hand, this most singular introduction:

"This is the friend I told you of. He has made me a solemn promise which I know he will keep. I am wounded and weak. When you read what I am writing, you shall see me in life or death. This man was my foe; he is now my friend. Trust in him as I do—he will tell you all."

The paper dropped from the woman's hands, She gasped:

"Is there life?"

The stranger replied, "He still lives."

"Thank Heaven! he is ours again!"

And she sprang to her husband's side, and folded his unconscious form in her arms. What miracles a woman's hand can work on a man's fevered brow, especially when tempered with the heart's undying affection. He lived; and he still lives, and when he goes to the lodge, which he does with conscientious regularity, there are never any more clouds or rain-drops in the happy home.

One noble woman was at least thoroughly converted to the belief that there is something good in Masonry. She knows one of the secrets; and notwithstanding her very sensitive assertion to the contrary, she has become perfectly good friends with the lodge.

Formation of Grand Councils.

The following history of the organization of the several Grand Councils, in the United States, we find in the Masonic Token, condensed from Comp. Drummond's report on Foreign Correspondence to the Grand Council of Maine:

The Grand Council of Alabama was formed by twenty-seven R. & S. Masters who received their degrees under the authority of the Southren Supreme Council 33°, of the A. & A. Rite; that of Arkansas by councils chartered directly by that Supreme Council; those of Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina in the same manner; those of Kentucky and Ohio, by councils chartered by the agent of that Supreme Council and its authority; that of Mississippi by councils chartered by the Grand Council of Princes Jerusalem, of that State, under the same authority; those of Connecticut, Vermont and Virginia by councils founded by Jeremy L. Cross or under his authority; that of California by two councils chartered by the Grand Council of Alabama, one chartered by that of Tennessee and one by that of Texas; that of Illinois by councils chartered by the Grand Council of Kentucky; that of Indiana by two councils chartered by Ohio and one by Kentucky; those of Iowa, and Missouri, by councils chartered by Illinois; that of Kansas by councils chartered by Missouri; that of Louisiana by one council chartered by the Southern Supreme Council, one by Kentucky and two by Alabama; that of Maine by councils chartered by Massachusetts; that of Massachusetts by self-formed councils, though perhaps some of them took charters from New York, and some from Cross; that of Michigan by councils chartered by Connecticut; that of New Hampshire by one self-formed council, one chartered by an old Grand Council, and one Chartered by Connecticut; that of New Burnswick by councils chartered by Maine; that of New Jersey by one council chartered by New York and two by Pennsylvania; that of New York by a union of two Grand Councils, one formed by Joseph Ceneau, and the other formed by councils chartered by Connecticut; that of Pennsylvania originally by two councils located in that State, and one located in Texas; that of Rhode Island by one council founded by Cross, one by Massachusetts, and one by Connecticut; that of Tennessee by two councils chartered by Kentucky, one by Alabama, and two under the authority of the Southern Supreme Council; that of Texas by one council chartered by New York, one by Kentucky, and one by Alabama; and that of Wisconsin by councils chartered by Ohio.

It will be perceived from this statement that none of the following Grand Councils, or their subordinates, viz: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin derived their origin in any part, directly or indirectly, from Jeremy L. Cross. To the nineteen of these now in existence, Pennsylvania should probably be added.

Death of Bro. Samuel Reed.

This venerable brother, so well known in Ohio, in former years, died in Covington, Kentucky, December 27th, 1870, in the 74th year of his age.

Bro. Reed was born in Penn Yan, New York, September 19th, 1797. In early boyhood he removed with his parents to Olean, on the Allegheny river, and in the spring of 1819 came to this city where he resided until 1851, when he removed to Covington. He was initiated in Miami Lodge, No. 46, in this city, in 1821, and subsequently received all the degrees in the York Rite, including the Christian Orders.

He soon became a very active Mason, and was particularly efficient as a ritualist and workman in the different departments of the Order. He not only filled the chief offices in the several bodies, at different times, but was Grand Lecturer for this State for several years. As a Masonic instructor, he traveled extensively over this State, as well as Indiana and Arkansas, and was everywhere regarded as a superior ritualist, while his genial and sunny nature won for him the warmest affection of thousands wherever he went. After his removal to Covington, though burdened with advancing years, he transferred his membership to that city, and continued his activity and zeal in the cause of the Order. At his death he was Secretary of his lodge, (Golden Rule, No. 345) and we believe of Covington Commandery also.

Bro. Reed was a good man, and a sincere and consistent Christian. His death was calm and peaceful. His funeral was attended by large numbers of the Craft, and the funeral service of the Knights Templar was read by Sir Kt. Rev. J. M. Worrall, of Covington.—Review.

ITEM FOR MASONIC HISTORY.—The Norfolk Journal has an article on the origin of the Grand Lodge of Virginia, setting forth that the convention of English, Scotch and Irish Masonic lodges in that State, assembled at Williamsburg, on May 6, 1777, determined to form a Grand Lodge of that State, and recommended "His Excellency, General George Washington," as the first Grand Master. The convention met again on October 13, 1778, when Brother George Washington having been prevented by public duties from accepting the office, Brother John Blair, of Williamsburg, was chosen Grand Master of Virginia, and was installed on October 30th, with Rev. Robert Andrews as D. G. M. Since that time the Craft has increased from five to two hundred and thirty-three Lodges, and M. W. Brother Thomas F. Owens is now the G. M. of Masons in Virginia. Under such a leadership the Craft must flourish.—Ritual.

The Masonic Trowel.

In April, 1862, we commenced the publication of this paper. It was our intention then to publish it so long as necessary for the purpose which originally prompted its publication, and no longer. It grew on our hands. Our friends insisted on its continuance. We have had some pride in it. We had nearly 13,000 subscribers at one time. But that was when the St. Louis Freemason, the Evergreen, Kentucky Freemason, Landmark, Mirror, Michigan Freemason, Tidings, Record, Advocate and Keystone were not in being, and several other papers maintained only a precarious existence. In addition to the above publications, the Masonic Review, Voice of Masonry and Mystic-Star may be considered as well established, while the Magazine of Boston holds on its accustomed way, able and steady.

A large number of local papers have Masonic departments, and several small publications are issued occasionally. In the face of all this, we have kept up a good circulation, and on the first day of January last, it stood at near 10,000. At the commencement of the fourth volume, our second son, then twenty years old, became a partner, and so soon as age permitted, became a Mason. Our duties were arduous and laborious, and our sphere of trade was much enlarged. In the autumn of 1864, we were attacked with catarrh, neuralgia, and finally rheumatism, both external and internal, and barely escaped, to be a wreck and invalid for nearly two years. From that time until now, Harman managed the financial and business concerns of The Trowel office and its appendages, and from March, and in fact from January, 1869, until October last, he was sole publisher and conductor of The Trowel business. He gave the business order, arrangement and system, and built up a large trade; but one or two business operations so crippled the concern, that serious embarrassment followed, the business was contracted, cheaper quarters were sought, and a rigid system of economy enforced.

It falls to the lot of the son to become unable to grapple with disease and failing health, and he seeks a southern clime, to restore his elasticity and vigor, and perchance to secure a remunerative employment. The business falls again into our hands. We find a good custom, and large subscription list, with considerable indebtedness, growing out of old affairs. Our course will be as follows:

1. We shall keep the office and paper in good trim, and thoroughly provided for. We are prepared to do this.

2. All that we can realize and earn over and above the necessary means to keep our business active and remunerative, will be faithfully applied to the indebtedness now pending.

The Trowel will be issued regularly, and everything connected with the office will be under our direct personal control.

A few words in regard to The Trowel and personal matters. Our brethren sometimes complain in regard to receipt of papers. No printing office escapes them, and there are many ways for such errors to occur. The names sent may be improperly written, or names may be omitted. Errors may occur in entering, and here again names may be omitted in entering or mailing. Then there are the chances of loss or mistake in carriage or delivery. It is the interest of publishers to be careful, but unintentional errors and mistakes will occur. To this matter we shall give our personal attention, and no complaint received at this office shall go unheeded.

The price of The Trowel is $1.25. It ought to be $1.50, and we ought to realize $1.25 for each copy sent from the office. We hope our brethren will bear this in mind. Further, we desire to receive every brother's subscription, wherever it can conveniently be done, from his own hand. This is now our business and means of support, and we desire the closest possible contact with our brethren, and their confidence, sympathy and earnest good will.

We are sixty years of age, but in good health. Nearly all of twenty years has been devoted to the interests, growth, reputation and glory of symbolic, capitular and cryptic Masonry in Illinois. In our advancing years, we are accused of speculating off of the Grand Lodge. The charge is wholly untrue. We had no interest in the Grand Lodge printing while we were Grand Master, and the printing of the proceedings of 1867 and 1868, with the history, was at a positive loss of several hundred dollars. Besides, Bro. Lowe says that we are not paid for printing the proceedings of 1865 and 1866. In this matter we simply vindicate ourself. Nothing more. We make no complaint and seek justice only. There is no human being that we would not befriend, neither do we carry malice or ill-will against any. Trusting in the great Giver, we hope to live and die in peace with all men. Our labors are increased, but our courage is in no wise abated.

Having devoted the best days of our life to Masonry, we feel sure, now that we devote ourselves exclusively to Masonic journalism, that we have a right to a liberal support of The Trowel, and a fair share of the printing business.

Is it too much to ask every brother who reads this in Illinois, or in any jurisdiction where no journal is published to give us, now in our need, a hearty and cordial push forward and upward. Surely, out of the 40,000 Masons in Illinois, and 75,000 in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Colorado, Texas, Arkansas, and Mississippi, we ought reasonably to hope for 20,000 subscribers. Will our brethren so gladden us?

Sixty Years.

Six decades have passed away since we came into the world. In the time of our second decade we saw anti-Masonry rear its envenomed head, hiss and rattle, poison and kill, divide and conquer, and in our third it died, a dishonored, wretched, inglorious death.

Before we were twenty years old the Erie canal was an accomplished fact, and De Witt Clinton the most popular man in the nation. Steam was made practical for navigation, and Fulton was regarded as the king of inventors.

In our third decade railroads were introduced, and the great exodus to the West commenced. And we were married.

In our fourth decade Masonry sprang up all over the land as if by magic. Its onward march no earthly hand could stay. Mormonism loomed up in Ohio, emigrated to Missouri, located at Nauvoo, tottered and fell, and its remnants fled to the deserts. The Mexican war resulted in the triumph of our arms. The telegraph system burst upon our vision and now encircles the world.

In our fifth decade we commenced the Masonic official career which has just terminated. The Illinois Central Railroad was built concurrently with, and succeeded by, a magnificent system of inter-communication by land and water, and by ocean steam navigation.

In our sixth decade commenced our terrible internecine national strife. Its terrible progress is history; its close, a lesson. Our Masonic strife, the same. The Pacific Railroad has been built. Oriental populations no longer travel westward. To the Mississippi Valley "the Star of Empire wends its way." Our children have married and grandchildren are around us.

The commencement of our seventh decade finds us in fine bodily health, but toiling harder than ever. In sadness we laid away a bright and beautiful grandson. Our State is commencing under its new constitution. Two brave and rival generals, Logan and Blair, are elected to represent the Empire States of Illinois and Missouri in the most august body in the world—the United States Senate. What they may accomplish time will tell.

The two grandest events of any age are the application of steam to locomotion, and the flash of intelligence over the electric wire. What is in the future none know. Vice and corruption will destroy any nation, overthrow churches and institutions, demoralize whole communities, and undermine both individual and public integrity. Virtue and intelligence are the safeguards of a free people. And God will forget the nation that forgets Him.

Good-By.

To the thousands of subscribers to The Trowel, and my numerous customers in the other branches of business in which I have been engaged, I am compelled to bid a reluctant farewell. On the first day of October, 1864, nearly seven years ago, I commenced acting as the manager of The Trowel. I was then an inexperienced boy. I had just been discharged from the army, was enfeebled by disease contracted in camp, and was suffering from a bullet wound in my arm. I found The Trowel with a small circulation, not paying its expenses, and no business connected with it. By steady work, averaging sixteen hours per day, I have succeeded in putting The Trowel on a good basis and have purchased a fine printing office. But in doing so, my health has failed, and it becomes necessary for me to enter into some occupation which will be conducted in the open air, and which will not require night work. I have made arrangements to move south, and make that my future home. Four times since the war closed have I been down and through the south. It is a magnificent country and a fine people that inhabit it, and I believe, judging by my own observation, and the tide of emigration that is going there, that country will soon be the wealthiest section of America. There has been twenty-two Masonic magazines and papers started in the United States since we commenced publishing The Trowel. Of these six have died, and one (the Masonic Monthly of Boston) I have reason to believe is dead, because we have not received a copy for several months, nor have we seen any notice of it in our Masonic exchanges. The Trowel and business connected with it will be kept up without any change except that my father will be sole proprietor and manager.

Fraternally yours,
H. G. Reynolds, Jr.

Sidney.

We regret that in our notice of visits, we omitted the proper notice of Sidney, Champaign county.

By invitation we visited our brethren there December 27, and installed the officers elect. It was our good fortune to replace our W. Bro. Geo. W. Hartman, M. D., once more in the Master's chair; a chair that he has filled for several years with honor. After the installation followed an address, and then a bountiful dinner, prepared by the wives and lady relatives of the brethren. The occasion was interesting, and, as before, we were the guest of our Worshipful brother. Sidney is the second station east of Tolono, and is a place of considerable business. We took quite full notes while there, but have lost them. One thing is certain; the people there are sober, intelligent and happy. We like them; like to go there, and hope to see them again.

We are in receipt of our Masonic exchanges, with the exception of the Monthly at Boston. We have also received the Manufacturer and Builder, Postal Record, Odd-Fellows' Companion, Technologist, Good Health, Musical Monthly, Happy Hours, Journal of Commerce, (St. Louis), Young Peoples' Helper, Mother's Journal, Peoples' Literary Companion, Qui Vive, Western Odd-Fellow, Rock River Farmer, Herald of Health, and many other valuable periodicals and publications not now in hand.

We are also under obligations to Grand Secretaries, Grand Representatives, and other kind fraters for copies of the proceedings of the Grand Lodges of Missouri, New Brunswick and Ohio, Grand Chapters of Iowa, Kentucky, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, and Oregon; Grand Commanderies of Kentucky, Missouri and New York. From R. W. Bro. Hough, we have part 1, Origin of Masonry in New Jersey; and from Bro. R. E. Richards, a historical sketch of early Masonry in North Western Ohio.

Also, from some brother the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of the U. S., I. O. O. F.

Public Works, Chicago.

Through the politeness of M. W. Grand Master Cregier we have been furnished with the ninth annual report of the Board of Public Works for 1870. It is a pamphlet of 193 pages, besides many plates, plans and diagrams. Omitting allusion to all else, we will notice the matter of water. The total quantity pumped was 6,801,146,720, being an increase of 1,427,000,000 over the previous year, and being a daily average of 14,750,000 gallons. The cost of delivering 1,000,000, is $11.71. The total expenses for the year is $79,648.44. A larger engine than any now in use is demanded. Bro. Cregier is engineer of the pumping works. A new tunnel will soon be indispensable.

Evil Effects.

At one of the places we visited last month half a dozen copies of the Cynosure are circulated. The town is small; the country around is well settled. Three brothers are members of the young lodge, besides several others, all rich and in high standing, good farmers and full of good works. Some two miles away from the town lives a well-to-do farmer, of good character, but ignorant and naturally suspicious. Notwithstanding the good character of these brethren, that man, from reading the Cynosure, is afraid of assassination from the hands of Good Templars and Freemasons, and dares not go to or from town in the night. More insanity.

How Foolish.

All over this land, and all over every other land of civilization and freedom, there are many Freemasons, able, sound, talented, public spirited, honorable, humane, charitable men. Philo Carpenter is going to blot out that set of men by the use of some of his money, aided by the labors of Mrs. De Geer's competitor, a son of President Blanchard, and by the fanatical teachings of the crazy Cynosure. Why, either of the three Funks that belong to Shirley Lodge could buy Philo out and hardly know that they had paid out any money. A nice time in crushing out!

Another Caning.

R. W. Bro. Gilbert W. Barnard, one of the Grand Examiners, for sticking to Ashlar Lodge, has been most thoroughly caned by some of its members; it had a large gold head, finely wrought and elegantly inscribed. Grevious as such affairs are, yet there are not a few who would like to experience a similar infliction.

We are in receipt of the proceedings of the first meeting of the American Association for the cure of inebriates held in New York, Nov. 29 and 30, 1870. Dr. P. J. Wardner, formerly of this city, but now Superintendent Washingtonian Home, Chicago, was a conspicuous member. Willard Parker, M. D., Binghamton, N. Y., presided.

W. Bro. Maynard, Master of Bluff City Lodge, at Council Bluff, Iowa, was surprised on New Year's eve, with a solid silver jewel, from which was suspended a gold trowel. Hon. B. F. Montgomery presides in chapter, and a council is being organized.

We shall be from home fully one half of our time, for many months to come, and when from home, shall be so continuously, of which notice will be given in The Trowel in advance. We intend to be at home from the 5th of every month until the 17th.

Judge Hugh McCurdy, of Corunna, Mich., is the new Grand High Priest in that jurisdiction. We know how to sympathize in his affliction.

England has 1,250 lodges, 380 Royal Arch Chapters, 120 Mark lodges, 110 Encampments K. T., 40 conclaves Red Cross, and 34 Rose Croix chapters.

Rev. J. S. Hanna's article in January Trowel is copied into the New York Dispatch with remarks of decided commendation.

Bro. Rounseville's article on the "Political Influences of Freemasonry," is copied into the Freemason's Magazine, London.

The Odd Fellows have six Encampments, twenty-two lodges and two Rebecca lodges in Chicago.

Eastern Star.

On the 17th day of January we constituted Coronation Chapter No. 45, at Towanda, McLean county. Bro. Dr. E. Holderness, W. P.; Mrs. Minnie Holderness, W. M.; Mrs. Sarah A. Henderson, A. M. The degrees were conferred on sixteen brethren and ten ladies. This chapter has talent, worth and wealth.

On the 19th day of January, we issued a charter for Hermon Chapter No. 46, at Hillsboro. W. Bro. Isaac H. Shimer, W. P.; Mrs. Augusta D. Marshall, W. M.; Mrs. Eveline C. Harris, A. M. On the 4th day of January, twenty brethren and fifteen ladies were present at the conferring of degrees. It is not possible for this chapter to fail.

On the 26th day of January we constituted Ransom Chapter No. 47, at Richmond, McHenry county. W. Bro. Geo. P. Wodell, W. P.; Mrs. Mary Cotting, W. M.; Mrs. Mary Jane Ransom, A. M. Bro. Wodell succeeds the lamented Bro. Ransom as W. M.; Mrs. Cotting is the worthy companion of the venerable Bro. C. G. Cotting, and Mrs. Ransom is the widow of our late brother, for whom the chapter is named. We conferred the degrees on twenty-eight brethren and twenty-four ladies.

On the 28th day of January we constituted Golden Rule Chapter No. 48, at Palatine, Cook county. M. E. Comp. N. P. Keyes, W. P.; Mrs. Susan Wyles, W. M.; Miss Emma Sutherland, A. M.; Bro. Keyes is the able H. P. of Palatine Chapter; Mrs. Wyles is the accomplished wife of Bro. R. W. Wyles, J. W. We conferred the degrees on twenty-nine brethren and eighteen ladies.

On the 1st day of February we constituted Orient Chapter No. 49, at Dundee, Kane county. P. D. H. Goff, W. P.; Mrs. Lavansia Hibbard, W. M.; Mrs. Mary Andrews, A. M. We conferred the degrees on eighteen brethren and twelve ladies.

On the 2d day of February we visited Queen Esther Chapter No. 2, at Elgin, and gave instructions. Bro. M. N. Frederick, W. P.; Mrs. W. H. Batchelor, W. M. This is a very fine chapter.

On the 3d day of February we constituted Amity Chapter No. 50, at Turner Junction, DuPage county. W. Bro. John H. Lakey, W. P.; Mrs. Julia Lakey, W. M; Mrs. Mary K. Bradley, A. M. Bro. Lakey is the first W. M. of Amity Lodge, and has railroad matters under his supervision at this point. He is well assisted and supported. The degrees were conferred upon twelve brethren and fourteen ladies.

On the 4th day of February we constituted Morning Light Chapter No. 51, at Aurora. Hon. and W. Bro. James Walker, Mayor of the city, W. P.; Mrs. Bertha Henock, W. M.; Mrs. Jane A. Walker, A. M. The degrees were conferred upon twenty-four brethren and twelve ladies. The make up is excellent, and the officers selected ensure success.

On the 9th day of February we issued charters as follows:

To Wyoming Chapter No. 52, at Wyoming, Stark county, Rev. John W. Agard, Grand Chaplain, W. P.; Sarah Otman, W. M.; and Emeline S. Eggleston, A. M.

To Metamora Chapter No. 53, at Metamora, Woodford county. Rev. James M. Berry, W. P.; Mrs. Sidney Whitmire, W. M.; Mrs. Melissa Whitmire, A. M.

To Mayo Chapter No. 54, at Newton, Jasper county. Bro. O. Morrell, W. P.; Mrs. T. J. Martin, W. M.: Mrs. Martha J. Brown, A. M.

To Willow Hill Chapter No. 55, at Willow Hill, Jasper county. Bro. W. H. Eidson, W. P.; Mrs. Martha Pera, W. M.; and Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart. A. M.

Visits, Calls, Travels.

Shirley.—This place is the first station south of Bloomington, on the C., A. & St. L. R. R., and is immediately north of the princely Funk estate, now divided among seven sons, who live on their respective shares and "dwell together in unity." George, the eldest, is in the Legislature. La Fayette, now S. W., with his brothers, Isaac and Peter, are members of Shirley Lodge. The town is new and small, but a large business is done in cattle by the Funks and their neighbors. The Christian persuasion has a good house, and a flouring mill is in operation which cost $25,000.

On the 16th of January we found the trees from Atlanta north, bending, breaking and broken, lines down, orchards in ruins, and shrubbery destroyed from the effects of the sleet upon them; untold damage to forest, fruit and horticulture is the inevitable result. W. Bro. James F. Boulware, Master of Shirley Lodge No. 542, met us at the depot and conducted us to his fine farm-home, where we found genuine Kentucky hospitality. He came eighteen years ago, with his mother and wife, from Madison county, Kentucky, and has done his share towards developing the resources of McLean, and as a reward, lives in rural comfort and security. The mother is now eighty-five years old and bids fair for several years more, while the Kentucky lady dispenses the honors of the house with dignity and grace. The lodge was chartered in 1867, has comfortable quarters, well furnished, and now numbers about twenty. Including three brethren from Heyworth, we had an audience of twenty or more, and talked of matters Masonic. After the meeting we were kindly entertained by Bro. A. H. Nelson until the arrival of the train.

Towanda. — A station eight miles from Bloomington, northward, on the C., A. & St. L. Population, 550. Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist meeting-houses, large school-house, and a shipping place for cattle. Breth. Cyrus and Nelson Jones, are noted dealers in blooded stock, together with several others in the vicinity. Not a forty-acre tract anywhere near is now open ground. Bro. Cyrus Jones, W. M., has again gone to Florida to winter. His farm, near town embraces more than 600 acres, and his brother, Nelson, has a farm quite as large. Upon our arrival on the 17th, we found our old correspondent, Dr. Holderness, waiting to receive us. At his house we found a genteel lady and agreeable hostess, and with a good practice and plenty of friends life is prosperous and happy. In the evening we met the lodge, Bro. Frank M. Jones, our efficient agent and the S. W., in the chair. He is brother to Cyrus and Nelson, and is one of the influential men in the county. Towanda Lodge No. 542 was chartered in 1867, and now numbers twenty-seven members. We are now quite well acquainted with the lodges at McLean, Shirley, Towanda, Lexington and Chenoa, all on one line of road in McLean county, and all but the last would come under the term rural, and we seriously question whether a single church organization in the State can present a higher average of character than either of them. And we do not intend by this in any sense to depreciate the character or usefulness of any church or persuasion whatever. But our view presents two important facts; that the people where these lodges are, are fair in character, and that the lodges select sound and fit material. We gave some instruction with a short talk, and left a good lodge and pleasant hall to make ourself useful elsewhere.

Pontiac.—All along the road and in the towns the work of King Frost is terrible. It is peculiarly so in Pontiac. Tops of large forest trees are broken to pieces, many thrifty trees are broken or bent to the ground, and shining crystal covers everything. In 1835 Livingston county had less than 250 people, and Pontiac was then the county seat. Now Pontiac, with no forced growth, has a population of 2,000, and the county, 32,000. Last season our brethren of Pontiac Lodge No. 294, suffered the loss of their hall, charter, furniture and fixtures by fire. On the same spot a fire-proof building is erected, and they are occupying an unfinished hall, which, when complete and suitably arranged, will be difficult to excel. W. Bro. H. H. Hill is the new W. M., and he enters upon his work with every prospect of success. He is County Superintendent of Schools. We were with the brethren all day, and gave them such teachings and encouragement as we were able. The city is governed by Bro. B. F. Culver, Mayor. Bro. Byron Phelps is County Clerk, and Bro. Aaron Weider, County Treasurer, both members of 351, at Fairbury. Bro. J. E. Morrow, of 294, is Circuit Clerk. Five church-houses, a large school-house, two flouring mills and a woolen mill. The town is situated on the Big Vermilion river, which empties into the Illinois river at La Salle. Our friends who visit Pontiac will find good fare at the "Secor House."

Aurora.—By the C. & A., Central and C., B. & Q., via Normal and Mendota, we reached Aurora at 2:30 P. M., Saturday, January 21, in less than fifteen hours, five hours of which were spent in repose and refreshment at the convenient and well-kept Normal House. Aurora is forty miles from Chicago, on the C. B. & Q. Railway, and is situated on both sides of the Fox river, with an island of considerable size, on which is located the Post Office, Court House and Masonic Hall. Fox River is noted for picturesque scenery and beautiful localities. Aurora is like an amphitheater, and requires some examination to realize all its advantages and beauty. Its water power and railroad shops are its leading features, but by no means all. The principal shops of the C., B. & Q. Railway are located here, and 1,400 men are employed in them. On the pay-day in January more than $80,000 was paid here. The population of the city exceeds 12,000. Hon. James Walker, P. M., H. P. and Past Commander of Templars, is Mayor. He is also the Master Mechanic of the iron department in the railroad shops. Withal he is one of Nature's noblemen. Jerusalem Temple Lodge No. 91 was chartered at Shawneetown in 1850. It now numbers over 200 members. W. Bro. Samuel Hoyles is the present W. M. Aurora Lodge No. 254 was chartered in 1859. Its members exceed 100, and both lodges meet in a magnificent hall, spacious, well proportioned, well furnished and conveniently arranged for symbolic, capitular, cryptic and Templar work. The Catholics have three churches; Episcopalians, one; Lutherans, one; Methodists, three; Presbyterians, one; Congregationalists, two; Universalists, one; and Baptists, two; four substantial churches are in process of erection. The Young Men's Christian Association is building an edifice to cost $10,000. President Joy of the C., B. & Q. has donated the Society $1,000 for a library. Aurora excels in schools; the Jennings Seminary, named in honor of a lady who paid the debts of the institution, is five stories high, and is open for both sexes. There are high schools on both sides of the river, besides one known as the Brady School, and several large edifices. Among specialties in business are one iron foundry, three extensive carriage factories, silver-plating factory, three flouring mills, a woolen mill, cheese factory, sash and blind factories and a large trade in pork, wool and building rock. The C., B. & Q. Railroad has its main line here from Chicago to Galesburg and its round house will hold one hundred engines. It also has a branch known as the Fox River Valley Railroad, which extends from Aurora, via Ottawa, to Streator; and another branch complete from Aurora to Rochelle, Ogle county, which is to extend onward to the Mississippi, and also branch northward, via Oregon, to Rockford. The route is now being surveyed to Joliet. At the lodge-room we met Father Burr Winton, the first S. W. of Jerusalem Temple, who, in his old age, is the neat and pleasant Tyler for all the bodies. On Sunday we listened to Rev. Bro. W. D. Clark, the son of the talented and lamented first Pastor of the church of which we are a member. "To be spiritually minded, is life and peace," is a rich theme, and handled it was with power and eloquence. At his house we found a modest, beautiful wife, attractive daughter, and two bright boys; two daughters away, one married, and the third generation in being. Pleasant social converse, a return to our good hotel, the Aurora House, where we spent the evening with several brethren.

Batavia.—Population, 3,600. Situated on both banks of Fox River, and abounds in beautiful residences, the most conspicuous of which is that of Bro. John Van Nortwick, formerly President of the C., B. & Q. Railroad. Batavia Lodge No. 404 has more than 100 members, of which W. Bro. Frank P. Crandon, Clerk of the County Court, is the gentlemanly and popular Master, and Hon. J. W. Eddy, State Senator, is a member. The membership is excellent, and the lodge room, with rooms and furniture, is a credit to the lodge. Large paper mill; wagon and carriage factory, 150 feet long, employs seventy-five men; two factories for wind-mills and corn-grinders; Catholic, Congregationalist, Methodist, Baptist, Christian, German and Colored Methodist churches; large school-house, east side; larger west, and finished inside like parlors. A very important feature is the limestone, from which large quantities of lime is manufactured, and some portions of the quarries are suitable for cement. The quantity of stone sent in every direction is amazing. Some has been sent to Denver City. All the public buildings, factories, and many of the shops and dwellings, are built of this beautiful stone. The Revere House, on the west side, kept by Bro. Smith, formerly a member of Golconda Lodge 131, and the first W. M. of this lodge, is the gentlemanly landlord, who knows the meaning of "Mine Host" and "Our Guest." Lastly, but not least, this is the residence of the incorruptible, pure old Mason, Hon. Samuel D. Lockwood, Attorney General of this State before 1824, and from that time until 1848, a Judge of the Supreme Court, and in 1847, a member of the Constitutional Convention from Morgan county. Upon his motion Almighty God was recognized in the Constitution of 1847. After ceasing to be judge, he removed to Batavia, and now more than eighty years old, he walks every day three-fourths of a mile to the post office, and is passing serenely along to his earthly end.

At Aurora and Batavia we had good audiences and willing listeners. Bro. A. N. Merril was the outgoing Master at Batavia, and Bro. Theophilus Porter in No. 90, at Aurora. They retire with honor.

Turner Junction.—We were warmly welcomed by several brothers in waiting, and most hospitably entertained by Dr. Joseph McConnell and his matronly lady at their tasty and home-like residence, on the elevated plateau overlooking the Valley of Fox River. The Doctor is a cousin of the late Hon. Murray McConnell, and is an accomplished gentleman of the old school. In the evening the beautiful and convenient lodge-room of Amity Lodge No. 472 was filled, and we witnessed a correct and well-rendered conferring of the third degree, after which we "freed our mind." W. Bro. F. F. Loveland is now in his second term, and he is earnestly supported by W. Bro. J. H. Laky, former Master, and by his officers. The town has 1,000 people, and the country about is well settled. There are four meeting-houses, a large school-house, with three grades; the town is the station where trains diverge for Dixon, Galena, Richmond and Aurora; it has a large cheese factory, repair shops, and about $10,000 is paid out here by the C. & N. W. R. W. Co., monthly. Large quantities of corn, beef, pork, milk, cheese and butter are sent from this station. The lodge was chartered in 1866, is very harmonious, free from debt and has sixty members.

Clintonville.—We arrived here on the morning of the 25th, and were met by W. Bro. T. W. Tefft, W. M., and several brethren, and were conducted at once to the lodge-room, and from thence to the residence of Bro. Haglow, where a sumptuous dinner awaited several keen appetites, sharpened by the bracing air of this wintry region. Then the handsome daughter gave us all a rich treat of music, and thence to the lodge-room, where work, instruction and speech followed. Not content, Bro. A. W. Harding introduced us to his family and we found the daughter of Gen. McClure, formerly of Elgin, as hostess, with her beautiful daughter, son and daughter-in-law, happy and entertaining. Bro. Harding has been station-agent here for ten years, and his residence overlooking Fox River, and its scenery is enough to tempt one to "covet." Two flouring mills, tannery, foundry, paper mill, two good school-houses and one meeting-house. The lodge has a good room, is well officered, and has thirty members. Population, 600.

Richmond.—By the cars to Richmond, under the direction of that jewel of a brother and gentleman, H. A. Newcomb, Conductor, we arrived at Richmond about nine o'clock, where were met by Bro. Geo. P. Wodell, W. M., our good friend, Bro. C. G. Cotting, and several other brethren, and were conducted to the lodge-room, for general introduction. As before, we were again the guests of Father Cotting, wife and daughter, at their choice residence, on the bank of the beautiful Nippersink. As in duty bound, we waited upon and condoled with the widow of our late distinguished and lamented brother Alonzo Ransom. Then to the lodge-room to impart instruction. In the afternoon twenty-eight brethren and twenty-four ladies received the degrees of the Eastern Star, and Ransom Chapter No. 47, was formed. A talk and adieu in the evening; a nice supper at the hotel, entertainment by Bro. Wodell and lady, a night of repose and early departure on the 27th. Richmond has 700 people, three churches, carriage manufactory, large house for school, with three grades, the largest cheese factory in the county, and is the terminus of Fox River Valley R. R. This is the residence of that sterling gentleman, Hon. W. A. McConnell, member of the Legislature.

McHenry.—This is a splendid location, situate upon Fox River and along a large creek which empties into it, both streams furnishing fine mill power. From the depot, one finds a town there; over the hill, on the creek, is another, and over another hill on the Fox is another, so that the town is about one mile long, upon two spurs running back from the river. It was the first county seat, and has a population of about 1,200, and is the centre of a large business and much wealth. McHenry Lodge No. 158 has fifty members, and McHenry Chapter has 35; both together have a splendid newly furnished hall, and they are in good condition. This was the residence of Hon. A. H. Nixon, once a member of both branches of the General Assembly. In honorable repute here, lives Hon. George Gage, in comfortable circumstances, formerly Senator and member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847. Four churches, one planing mill, one machine shop, one plow and wagon factory, at which the Bishop plow is extensively manufactured. A school-house, which cost $6,000.

Palatine.—Bro. Russell W. Wyles, Junior Warden of 314, and Passenger Agent of the Michigan Central, Illinois Central and St. Louis & Chicago through lines, resides here, and was in waiting for us. We found a beautiful and attractive home, an intelligent and accomplished lady, and three beautiful children, all happy and content. Our brother is a generous, gentlemanly business man.

We met a large number of brethren and ladies, and formed Golden Rule Chapter No. 48, E. S. In the evening the lodge-room was full. We were gratified to meet our brother J. H. Pahlman, who, past sixty, is still vigorous and hearty. Palatine Lodge No. 314 has 50 members, and is prosperous. W. Bro. H. C. Batterson presides. Comp. N. P. Keyes presides over Palatine Chapter.

The town is situate on the C. & N. W. R. W. on the route from Chicago via Woodstock to Madison, Wisconsin; has 700 population, two churches, a school-house which cost $10,000, and a school which attracts many residents. It has four grades. Several Chicago business men reside here. The situation is beautiful, and the country around is rich and thickly settled. This is a large milk station.

Nunda.—This is the crossing of the railroad from Elgin to Richmond, along the valley of Fox River, and the road from Chicago to Madison, Wis., and is known among railroad men as Crystal Lake Crossing. Both belong to the C. & N. W. This point is elevated and sightly, and is situate but a short distance from Crystal Lake and the town of the same name. It has but recently commenced to improve, but is now growing, and Warner's good hotel improves its condition. On the 30th January we were made a welcome guest by O. Mansfield, Esq., and found comfort and good cheer at his dwelling. The wife and daughter make the home attractive, and our excellent brother is the Senior Warden of Nunda Lodge No. 169. The lodge convened after dinner, and the W. M., Bro. John H. Palmer, introduced us to the lodge in an eloquent address, attended by all the honors. Bro. Palmer is a superior man, and only lacks opportunity to develope into a strong man in Masonry or in the State. His charitable disposition and careful prudence are well balanced, and well cultivated.

For some time the lodge was without any fixed home, and then suffered by fire. In the midst of much disagreement, we located the lodge at Nunda, where it has a fine hall, and is gathering up its working tools again. This is one of the places where anti-Masonry holds its seat. We met a band of brethren that day that will never be driven, separated, or cowed by any force that may be arrayed against them. The armor of silence, secrecy, and caution is well girt on, and steady is the word along the line. Having learned that the principal founder of the lodge, R. W. Bro. J. R. Mack was quite sick, we went out four miles to his house with Bro. Palmer, accompanied by several brethren. We found him very ill, and in a bad condition, but cheerful, resigned, and as clear-headed and conversational as ever. He spoke freely of his South American trip and Rocky Mountain adventures, and in his remarks about the Masonic bodies at McHenry and Woodstock, and especially at Nunda, he exhibited considerable emotion. In speaking of a desire to pry into the future, he remarked that our Common Father knew best how to deal with his children, and that of all the aphorisms in the Great Light, none were truer, or more true to nature than this: "Take no thought for the morrow." And then what a treat it was to hear him apply this to the general and special conditions of men, instancing, among others, this: that if a father was to know three days beforehand the precise moment that his child would die, his brain would be crazed, while by the gradual approach of death, the mind became prepared, and to a certain extent reconciled. We left him feeling comfortable, and with hope of a speedy and permanent recovery.

Algonquin.—W. Bro. James Philp, the Master of Algonquin Lodge No. 256, met us at the cars and took us to his pleasant home, where we were welcomed by his matronly wife, daughter, son, and a family inmate, Bro. W. H. Hill. Bro. Philp and wife are natives of England, and by dint of skill, hard labor, and economy, are now wealthy, with a fine library and good tastes, and with their children settled and settling around them, are prepared at the noon of life to enjoy the fruits of their labor. Here, too, we met Col. Henry, formerly of Washington county, N. Y., now nearing seventy years of age, who was excluded from the church because he was an "adhering Freemason." With a certificate stating the fact, he presented himself to a church of the same order at Troy, and was unanimously accepted. He speaks with uncommon energy and vim of the trials and persecutions he endured in the tornado of 1827.

Algonquin Lodge has had 64 members at various times; has 28 now, and is growing. We have met no lodge where the members were so well posted. For beautiful scenery and pleasant landscapes, no part of Illinois can surpass Fox River. And, to our mind none are equal to this in landscape or variety, and few surpass it in natural advantages. The railroad touches Fox River here for the first time after leaving McHenry, and this is also the junction of the stream issuing from Crystal Lake with the river. The creek has a fall of thirty-two feet in one mile, and the river is dammed for milling and manufacturing purposes, furnishing a large water power. The town has about 300 people; three flouring mills and a carriage manufactory. Twenty-five farms supply milk, and a car is loaded every morning for Chicago. On the premises of Bro. Philp is a mineral spring which discharges at all seasons an even stream, cold in summer, of the same temperature in winter, and never freezes. It is highly impregnated with iron, and is beginning to attract attention. Two churches and a $6,000 school-house.

Dundee, February 1.—This is where the Rev. J. L. Barlow refused to administer the ordinance of baptism to Bro. Augustus Johnson, after having been accepted by the Baptist Church, unless he would renounce Freemasonry. This brother is now twenty-eight years old, has a fair education, and came to this country from Sweden seventeen years ago, and most of the time since he has resided at or near Dundee, and is a skillful workman at his trade. His character before presenting himself for church membership was good in all respects. The church would not recede; neither would Mr. Barlow; it would seem that in a petulant state of mind he resigned; it was instantly accepted. Because worthy Bro. Johnson would not renounce, and because the church took Mr. Barlow at his word, he assumes to be a martyr. Of one thing let Mr. Barlow and all like him be fully persuaded; NO MASON HONESTLY PROFESSING CONVERSION WILL RENOUNCE, UNTIL HE HAS BACKSLIDDEN, and to such an extent that his last state is worse than the first. Dundee is the largest milk station in Illinois. A very large car is loaded here every day, and much is sent to the butter factory at Elgin. The town has 1,200 people, six churches and a large flouring mill. Carpenterville is almost a part of Dundee, and has a cotton factory, foundry and flouring mill. The water power is owned by Hon. Mr. Carpenter, now a member of the Legislature. Dundee Lodge No. 190, was organized in 1856. W. Bro. Vining presided over it from 1858 until 1862. W. Bro. W. W. Norton is the present Master. Like most of the Fox River towns, Dundee is on both sides of the river, and is a handsome site.

Elgin, Feb. 2.—We gave quite a notice of Elgin a year since, especially of the watch factory. Ottawa, at the junction of Fox river with the Illinois, is the largest, Aurora second, and Elgin the third town in size on Fox river. The population exceeds 7,000. Here the C. & N. W. Railway road diverges, one to Richmond, up Fox river, and the other to Freeport, and thence by Central to Galena. The water power is excellent, and under good husbandry and control. The Northern Insane Asylum is near by on the west side, and the watch factory on the east, and in the city are two foundries, a woolen factory, milk condensing factory, fruit and vegatable packing factory, agricultural implement shop, cotton batting mill, four wagon and carriage shops, three graded schools, a college, nine church buildings, and near at hand are agricultural fair grounds.

Elgin Lodge 117, was formed in 1852; W. Bro. T. E. Lawrence is the present W. M., and the lodge numbers 100 members. Monitor Lodge 522, was organized in 1867; W. Bro. N. J. Bloomfield is W. M. Membership 89. L. L. Munn Chapter has 61 members; G. H. Daniels H. P. Cryptic Council has 20 members; H. B. Pierce, Master.

Bethel Commandery has 30 members; S. A. French Com. Queen Esther Chapter E. S. has 45 members.

All the bodies except Elgin Lodge meet in a spacious and beautiful hall; it is expected that all will meet there soon.

The place has many excellent and tasty buildings, and shows decided evidences of thrift, growth and power.

In the evening we met the members of both lodges in Monitor Lodge, and witnessed the conferring of the first degree by Bro. Bloomfield. He is Master of his work.

Turner, Feb. 3—A short tarry, and the guest of Bro. Alfred Cantelo, and his companion, where we found rest, refreshment and contentment.

Wheaton.—The same evening we were the guest of W. Bro. Melvin Smith and his young and intelligent wife. We were here shown an hour-glass which has been in Bro. Smith's family for more than 200 years.

Wheaton has 1,000 people, a new court house, and three churches. The lodge has over 80 members, and will stand. Such men as the Vallette's, Dr. Waterman and Bro. Smith cannot be crushed out. Blood, merit and ability will rule.

This is the site of Wheaton college. J. Blanchard, D. D., is President, and Messrs. Webster, Bent, Lumry, Whipple and Baker are professors. It has 100 pupils of both sexes.

We utterly repudiate all the free-love and divorce theories of our strong-minded women. The moral sense of all who believe in the Bible revolts at the idea, as monstrous and criminal. If women sincerely desire a share in the control of public affairs, a voice in shaping the laws which affect them and their children, they can surely do nothing so certain to defeat their wishes as to lend countenance to the wild and undisciplined vagaries of those women who would disintegrate HOME, and who shamelessly mock at the commandments of God. What woman needs is thorough training and practical education in the realities and actualities of life, so that she may guard against the evils of too early or unsuitable engagements and marriages, provide for her own needs, and in a spirit of personal independence and self-respect, thoughtfully accept her own situation, and when accepted, make the most of it. It cannot possibly be more dangerous to men to ignore the truth than for women, and the sterner sex have the advantage of more strength and vitality. Let women think.

WE expect to be in Murrayville, Tuesday, Feb. 14; Manchester, Wednesday, Feb. 15; Whitehall, Thursday, Feb. 16; Carrolton, Friday, Feb. 17; Kane, Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 18 and 19; Jerseyville, Feb. 20; Alton and Upper Alton, Tuesday and Wednesday, Feb. 21 and 22; Bethalto, Thursday, Feb. 23; Bunker Hill, Friday, Feb. 24; Gillespie, Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 25 and 26; Litchfield, Monday, Feb. 27; Butler, Tuesday, Feb. 28; Irving, Wednesday, March 1; Nokomis, Thursday, March 2; Shelbyville, Friday, March 3.

ONE would surmise, from reading the reports of Grand Masters and Committees on Correspondence, and hearing speeches from leading Masons, that a great deal of bad material is continually finding its way into our temple. Any bad material, however small in quantity, is too much; doubtless there is considerable, but in proportion to the whole body of Craftsmen, the amount is small, and growing less in proportional quantity every year. The ballot is fearlessly cast, and will be more fearlessly and conscientiously used in the future. While a ballot maliciously cast against a good man is a criminal act, yet the consequences are far less disastrous to Masonry, than a ballot charitably cast for a bad or useless candidate. Vote yes or no conscientiously.

Installation of Officers.

The officers of Palatine Chapter 117, R. A. M., were installed on Dec. 27th, 1870, by Comp. Henry Turner, Past High Priest, and assisted by Comp. J. O. Dickinson, as Grand Marshal of Corinthian Chapter 69, Chicago. The officers installed were, Comp. N. P. Keyes, H. P.; R. W. Wyles, King; H. C. Bateman, Scribe; F. S. Filbert, C. H.; H. M. Serick, P. S.; C. L. Whitcomb, R. A. C.; H. Webster, Chas. Cherry, M. Blum, G. M. of the Veils; A. Drotzkowki, Treasurer. F. J. Filbert, Sec. A. J. Bennett, Tyler. A very pleasant time in general was had by the members.

The officers of Palatine Lodge, No. 314, were installed by Bro. J. H. Pahlman, Past Master, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 4th, 1871. H. C. Batterman, W. M.; S. L. Keith, S. W.; R. W. Wyles, Jr. W.; F. J. Filbert, Sec. May the lodge prosper the coming year. All the officers elect are energetic men and Masons, not only in word, bnt in deed.

IN preparing the notes of Grand Lodge matters, the death rate of onr Grand Masters attracted our attention. The average of life is 30 years. Very few men are elected Grand Masters before that age, and the average at the time of election may be set down at 45, and at the time of death at 55. Past Grand Master Jonas and Helm outlived the allotted three score and ten. Dunlap, Warren, and Anderson lived far beyond the average; Hibbard died young; Herrick, Morse, Hobbs and Blair averaged 55.

Father Lusk must be near 80; Breth. Lavely, Gorin, Pickett and ourself will average 60; Bro. Buck is about 55, and Bro. Cregier is hardly 40.

THE Grand Lodge A. F. and A. M. for the State of New Jersey met on Thursday at Trenton.

The following officers were elected: W. E. Price, G. M.; W. W. Goodwin, D. G. M.; Nathan Haines, S. G. W.; W. B. Bentley, J. G. W.; W. R. Clapp, G. Treas.; Jas. H. Hough, G. Sec.; W. D. Ruton, D. G. Sec.; Rev. Henry Vehslage, G. Chaplain; T. N. Bentley, S. G. D.; H. Wells, J. G. D.; G. B. Edwards, G. Marshal; W. H. Page, G. St. B.; S. A. Burkhardt, G. Sw. B.; C. C. Chapman, G. P.; Amos Howell, G. Tyler; Wm. Meade, G. Lecturer. Eight new lodges were chartered.

IN our student days we knew Naphtili Shaw, of Bradford, Vt. He initiated Father C. G. Cotitng, in Charity Lodge, No. 35, at Newbury, Vt., Nov. 14, 1825, and raised him to the sublime degree of a Master Mason, Feb. 13, 1826. Bro. Cotting's father was a Baptist preacher in Rutland county, and wrote several notable comments upon the prophecies, and was a sharp controversialist.

THERE are now two working lodges in the port of Niphon Japan, one called Yokohama Lodge No. 1092, English Register, and the other O Tentosama Lodge, No. 1263. The membership of these two lodges is about three hundred, with a good attendance at each meeting.

The Engineer.

Ah! whoever thinks of the bold engineer,
As he stands by the throttle of steel,
And spurs on his steed to its maddened career,
In its thundering and ponderous reel!
Like a soldier begrimed in battle's dark strife,
And brave to the cannon's hot breath.
He, too, plunges on with his long train of life,
Unmindful of danger or death!
Through the daylight,
Into the night,
Dark, dark,
He knows no affright,
O'er ridges
And bridges,
Decayed or strong,
Like a mythic god he rushes along!
Who thinks of the bold engineer?

So true to his post like a statue he stands,
With his eyes fixed fast on afar;
Our own precious lives he holds in his hands,
Our wealth we give to his care.
For good must he be, the bold engineer,
As he dashes from village to town,
And brings us all safe, 'midst a smile or a tear,
To the forms so dearly our own!
Onward he goes—
His whistle he blows—
Deep, deep,
Through high-drifted snows
With crossings
And tossings,
In heat and in rain,
O'er the glittering track he pulls the long train,
All hail to the bold engineer.

I love the brave man, though accidents come,
With their heart-rending anguish and woe;
Still foremost he rides, to whatever doom,
Like the foam on a vessel's bold prow,
And he sweeps on like the wind through the land,
Away from "sweet home" and its charms,
For the sake of the "loved ones" and wife, may thy hand,
O God, protect him from harm!
On doth he ride,
No danger betide,
Swift, swift!
With bridegroom and bride—
The tallest,
The smallest,
The rich and the poor,
All follow his path, o'er river and moor,
Long life to the bold engineer.

A Brave Girl.

There are not many brave girls about in these days, let the girls say what they please to the contrary. We have been watching to see how they manævre, and this is the conclusion to which we have come: Many of them are real cowards—they are afraid to keep on the right side of truth. They may not be afraid of the dark, nor the dogs and spiders, but they are afraid to do what they think is right.

There was Hattie Stone, a bright-eyed, intelligent, sprightly, lovable creature, sitting by her mother, who was trimming her winter bonnet with gay ribbons and beautiful feathers, when Nellie Larkin, one of her playmates, entered.

"Is that your bonnet?" inquired Nellie.

"Yes," replied Nellie. "Isn't it pretty?"

"It is very pretty, indeed, I think," answered Nellie. "Mine is a poor looking thing beside that."

"Are you not going to have a new one?"

"No; mother says my old one must answer this winter, with a little repairing, and I think it will, myself."

"You will be the only girl in the meeting-house with an old bonnet on," said Hattie, "and that will make you feel badly."

"No, it will not make me feel badly at all," said Nellie. "I like your new bonnet very much, and at the same time I am contented with my old one."

"Well, I should be afraid that people would laugh at me when everybody else had new bonnets," responded Hattie. "I want to look as well as the rest."

"Mother says it is cowardly to be afraid of what people will say about us, if we are doing what we think is right."

"Then there are a great many cowards in the world," said Hattie, "and I suppose I am one. But you mean to be brave and wear your old bonnet," and Hattie smiled as she said it, for she evidently meant to ridicule Nellie's idea of bravery.

"I don't think it is necessary to be very brave to wear a last year's bonnet," replied Nellie. "I am sure that it is not a great cross to me, although I don't like to be laughed at any better than you do. Mother says she can't afford a better one, and that is enough for me to know, to be satisfied with what I have."

Now, Nellie really did not know that she was a brave girl in deciding to wear the bonnet that she had worn for a year. But she was the bravest girl in the neighborhood. Hattie—poor little mincing coward—was afraid somebody would laugh at her, if she did not have a bonnet as gay as a peacock's tail, and be in the height of fashion. She had not courage to say, "Let others think what they please, I shall do what mother thinks best." Poor, weak thing! Suppose everybody else should take it into their heads to go without bonnets, she of course, would not dare to do otherwise, and she would go bareheaded. How much nobler is Nellie, who dares to follow her mother's counsels, though she may not appear quite so fashionable. Yes, she is the genuine brave girl, unlike thousands who always stop and ask: "What will Mrs. A. or Jemima B. say about me if I do thus and so?" not having courage to do right, even lest some one laugh or sneer.—Mirror.

The Blasphemous Crow.

At a certain cross-road in the State of Alabama stood a small grocery or whisky-shop, where "busthed" and "chain lightning" were dealt out to the thirsty unwashed at five cents a drink, or twenty-five cents a quart.

The presiding genius of this institution was one Bill Sykes, who, among various pets had a domesticated crow, black as the ace of spdaes. This crow had learned, among other things to repeat quite plainly, the words "damn you," which he, of course, heard, frequently in the grocery. During the prevalence of a knock-down-and-drag-out fight, one day, however, the crow was frightened from home, and flew off to the woods, never to return.

About three miles from the grocery was a settlement meeting-house—an old tumble down affair, only used on certain occasions when a circuit, rider came that way. Into this building went the crow, taking peaceable possession; and two days thereafter the church was thrown open to preaching, and a large crowd assembled, among whom was a very old lady, who was compelled to use crutches in walking, who took her seat in the front pew, and was soon absorbed in the eloquence of the preacher. The reverend gentleman had scarcely got under full headway, and commenced thundering his anthemas at all grades of sinners, when a hoarse, croaking voice from above uttered the ominous words: "Damn you!"

The preacher and congregation looked aghast at such profanity, and each peered into his neighbor's face in vain to detect some sign of guilt. Quiet being at length restored, however, the sermon proceeded, but ere ten minutes elapsed the ominous "damn you!" again electrified the audience, and just as the preacher cast his eye upward to search for the delinquent, the crow flew down from his perch, and lighting on the Bible, calmly surveyed the terrified crowd and gave another doleful croak: "Damn you!"

The effect was electrical. Giving one startling and terrified glance at the intruder the preacher sprang from the window, carrying the sash, glass, and all with him, and set off at a break-neck pace through the woods, closely followed by his horror-stricken congregation, who had piled out of the building pell-mell after him. In the general scramble the old lady with the crutches had been knocked down in the church, where she lay, unable to rise; and on observing her, the crow, who was after something to eat, flew down beside her, and looking up very knowingly, croaked out:

"Damn you."

"Yes and damn you, too! I had nothing to do with getting up this old Methodist meeting, and you know it."

The poor old woman had mistaken the crow for the devil, and concluded, if possible, to propitiate his Satanic Majesty by denying all complicity in that affair. The world is full of just such people.—Mirror.

A Lesson of Perseverance.

One of the corporations of this city, being in want of a boy in their mill, a piece of paper was tacked on one of the posts in a prominent place, so that the boys could see it as they passed. The paper read, "Boy wanted—call at the office to-morrow morning." At the time indicated, a host of boys were in waiting at the gate. All were admitted, but the overseer was a little perplexed as to the best way of choosing one from so many, and said he, "Boys, I only want one, and here are a great many; how shall I choose?" After thinking a moment, he invited them all into the yard, and driving a nail into one of the large trees, and making a short stick, told them that the boy who could hit the nail with the stick, standing at a short distance from the tree, should have the place. The boys all tried hard, and after three trials each, signally failed to hit the nail. The boys were told to come again next morning, and this time, when the gate was opened, there was but one boy; who, after being admitted, picked up the stick, and throwing at the nail, struck it every time.

"How is this?" said the overseer, "what have you been doing?" And the boy, looking up with tears in his eyes said, 'You see, sir, I have a poor old mother, and I am a poor boy; I have no father, sir; and I thought I should like to get the place, and so help her all I can; and, after going home yesterday, I drove a nail into the barn, and have been trying to hit it ever since, and I have come down this morning to try again.'

The boy was admitted to the place. Many years have passed since then, and now that boy is a prosperous and wealthy man, and at the time of the accident at the Pemberton Mills he was the first to step forward with a gift of one thousand dollars to relieve the sufferers. His success came by his perseverance.

The Parson's Joke.—A clergyman being rather addicted to practice joking, was once dining at a country inn. It was his custom to carry on his journey a small phial of pungent cayenne; and at dinner one of the party asked him for a "pinch or two of red salt." It was imparted without a word of caution. The potent pepper was not long in making the fellow's acquaintance. His face became scarlet; the tonsils of his throat began to swell; his eyes brimmed with tears; and he arose in an agony of distress, and "roared like the great brindle bull in his cattle yard at home." He caught at the parson's suggestion, "water," and almost drained a stone jug which stood upon a side-table replenished with cold water. As soon as he could speak, he said to his rural neighbor:

"Jedediah, for the land's sake, does my mouth blaze?"

"No, Hiram, it don't but it smokes."

The fiery victim of the clerical joke strode in front of the parson, with "indignation in his aspect," and said: "Do you know, mister, that I took you for a parson?"

"I am indeed an humble member of the cloth," was the reply.

"Oh! you be, be you? And do you think it anyhow consistent with your calling to travel about the country in this way, carrying hellfire in your breeches pocket."

Slurs on Women.

At a recent dinner in New York, at which no ladies were present, a man, in responding to the toast "Woman," dwelt almost solely on the frailty of the sex, claiming that the best of them were little better than the worst, the chief difference being in their surroundings.

At the conclusion of the speech, a gentleman present rose and said: "I trust the gentleman in the application of his remarks refers to his own mother and sisters, not ours."

The effect of this just and timely rebuke was overwhelming; and the maligner of woman was covered with shame and confusion.

This incident serves an excellent purpose in prefacing a few words on this subject.

Of all the evils prevalent among men, we know of none more blighting in its moral effect than the tendency to speak slightly of the virtue of woman. Nor is there anything in which young men are so thoroughly mistaken as in the low estimate they form of the integrity of woman—not of their own mothers and sisters, thank God, but of others, who, they forget, are somebody else's mothers and sisters.

Let young men remember that their chief happiness in life depends on their faith in women. No worldly wisdom, no misanthropic philosophy, no generalization can cover or weaken this fundamental truth. It stands like the record of God himself—for it is nothing less than this—and should put an everlasting seal upon lips that are wont to speak slightingly of women.—Interior.

Good Counsel.

We commend the following to all Commanders and Templars.—ED. TROWEL.

OFFICE OF GRAND COMMANDERY OF WISCONSIN.
MILWAUKEE, January 28th, 1871.

"My Dear Sir Knight:

"As we are commencing another 'year of Pilgrimage,' let us start with the determination to so handle the great possibilities it shall place within our power, that at its close we may be able to write its history in 'fairest lines.'

"The restriction upon advancement, by requiring a year's probation between the chapter and commandery, having been removed, it is reasonable to expect there will be an unusual number of applicants for the 'honors and rewards that await the valiant Templar,' and it behooves us to exercise increased diligence in guarding against 'imposters.' It is ever a momentous question to distinguish between the worthy and the unworthy; and especially so in discriminating between those, whose belief in the fundamental truths of Christianity is a settled conviction, and those who care not a straw for any religion, but are willing to say they prefer the Christian system to any other, rather than not be admitted to our asylum, considering it but a 'part of the play,' having no relation to actual life.

"We have more than enough of such among us already, and it is high time to close the doors against any whose character is not a sufficient guaranty that they mean what they profess, in order to pass the pickets and get within our lines.

"Deeming the present an auspicious moment to call attention to these vital matters, I have taken advantage thereof to suggest that we should ascertain beforehand the honest sentiments of those who undertake the "pilgrimage" toward our asylum, there to unite with an 'Institution founded upon the Christian religion, and the practice of the Christian virtues.'

"The most effectual way to ascertain these important facts is to appoint the right kind of men upon the committees, to whom the petitions are referred, those who will faithfully and fearlessly execute the duties of the trust reposed in them, with an 'eye single' to the welfare and high character of the Institution.

"In a majority of cases, it is safe to say, committees exercise no vigilance at all; or, if they do, have not the moral courage to report adversely upon any candidate's claim, for fear of offending some one who may be interested in securing the election of a favorite. We may feel a deep interest in the advancement of our particular friends and associates. I like a true devotion to one's friends; that is according to the spirit of true Knighthood; yet we should recollect that all men are liable to err in their estimates of the qualities requisite to any particular station, and that right here is a society whose foundation consists in a pure and exalted motive, and that it is for the true interest of all in its fellowship not to vary its standard to suit those who may wish to take advantage of its benefits; but to require in them conformity thereto as a condition precedent to conferring it privileges upon any one.

"By reference to my report to the Grand Commandery at its last conclave you will learn my views relative to the general method of conducting our affairs, and the principles which should govern us. I have deemed it best to add these thoughts to those there expressed, and which were so kindly received, hoping that they may be as graciously accepted, and be incorporated into the working of our affairs.

"All which is courteously and fraternally commended to your consideration,

"A. V. H. CARPENTER,
"Grand Commander.

MASONIC TROWEL.—This excellent Masonic paper is published at Springfield, Ill. by H. G. Reynolds, Jr., with H. G. Reynolds, Sr., as editor. The latter is well known to members of the Order all over the United States. THE TROWEL is a good paper, in every respect, and the Mason who does not have it in his family neglects an opportunity of instilling a high regard for the Institution in that family. We regard THE TROWEL as one of our most readable exchanges. Canton Register.

John Oakheart and Son.

BY DION BOURCICAULT.

John Oakheart and Son are Baltic merchants. Young John entered his father's office as a clerk, at sixty pounds a year, of which he paid his mother forty for board, lodging and washing, and clothed himself with the odd twenty. Do not imagine that Mr. Oakheart's establishment required this assistance. The old gentleman desired to make his son feel independent—he was a man, he earned his own livelihood, and he should feel that he supported himself. At twenty-five years of age young Oakheart marries, receiving with his wife a moderate sum of money. He wants to purchase a share in his father's business; they cannot come to terms. Young John can make a better bargain with a rival house in the trade. The old man hesitates; he likes the sound of John Oakheart and Son, but business is business. Had his son married a penniless girl, the father would have given him what he now refuses to sell; but now, business is business, and, as a calculation, he can't do it. So young John becomes a chief partner in a rival firm to that which must one day be his, and trades against the old man whose only sin is to lay up wealth for his son.

Every day at four o'clock, leaning against a particular corner on 'Change, stands the elder merchant, his hands deeply sunk into his dog's-eared pockets. A young city man approaches; they exchange a quiet and careless nod.

"Feel inclined to discount for £1,200 at long date?"

"What security?" asks the old man.

"Turkish '54."

"Any names?"

"My own, only; it's a private matter, and has nothing to do with our house," replied the younger. "I will give you four per cent."

"I should want more than that, as money goes—say 4½."

"The brokers ask only 4½," replies the young man.

"Then give it." And they separate with an indifferent nod. That was father and son.

Every Sunday young John and his wife dine at Russel square in the same house where old Oakheart has lived for thirty years. His name has been cleaned out of the brass plate on the door. This house John still looks upon and speaks of as his house. All the associations of his childhood are there—every piece of furniture is an old friend—every object is sacred in his eyes, from his own picture, taken at four years old, with its chubby face and fat legs, to the smoke-dried picture of Gen. Abercrombie. They form the architecture of that temple of his heart—his home.

After dinner the ladies have retired. The crimson curtains are comfortably closed. The crackling fire glows with satisfaction, and old John pushes the bottle across to his son, for if old John has a weakness it is for tawny port.

"Jack, my boy," says he, "what do you want with £1,200?"

"Well, sir," replies young John, "there is a piece of ground next to my villa at Brixton, and they threaten to build upon it; if so, they will spoil our view. Emily," meaning his wife, "has often begged me to buy it and enclose it in our garden. Next Wednesday is her birthday, and I wish to gratify her with a surprise; but I have reconsidered the matter—I ought not to afford it—so I have given it up."

"Quite right, Jack," responded the old man; "it would have been a piece of extravagance," and the subject drops.

Next Wednesday, being Emily's birthday, the old people dine with the young folks. Just before dinner, old John takes his daughter-in-law aside, and places in her hand a parchment—it is the deed of the little plot of ground she coveted. He stops her thanks with a kiss, and hurries away. Ere the ladies retire, Emily finds time to whisper the secret to her husband. And the father and son are alone. Watch the old man's eyes fixed on the fire, for he has detected this piece of affectionate treachery, and is almost ashamed of his act, because he does not know how to receive his thanks. For a few moments a deep, gentle feeling broods upon the young man's heart; he has no words—it is a prayer syllabled in emotion that makes his lips tremble; he lays his hands upon his father's arm and their eyes meet.

"Tut, Jack, sir! pooh, sir! it must all come to you some day—God bless you, my boy, and make you as happy at my age as I am now." In silence the souls of those men embrace.

But what is that seraph that gathers them beneath her outspread angel wings? I have seen her at the fireside, fluttering like a dove from bosom to bosom. I have seen her link distant hearts parted by the whole world—she is the true genius of the Anglo-Saxon family—and her name is Home.

A Nut That Burglars Cannot Crack.

A stranger in Threadneedle street, standing in the narrow thoroughfare, shortly before ten o'clock in the morning, would have his curiosity aroused by the number of well dressed men whom he would see entering a silversmith's shop, and in a few minutes reappearing with small Japan boxes under their arms. If by further chance it so happened he was at the same spot between five and six o'clock in the evening, he would probably observe the same young men return to deposit the same Japan boxes on the counter of the same shop. The explanation is simple—the boxes, which contain the unbanked securities and cash of merchants and brokers, are locked up for the night in the silversmith's strong room, built in an excavation of sand rock far below the surface of the street, and upon which falls, when closed up for the night, a considerable flow of water. The merchants and brokers pay a rent for the use of this secure depository; and, acting no doubt upon this idea, a Mr. Streeter, an extensive jeweler, intends to give the wealthy possessors of costly jewels the opportunity of using his "Chatwood safe," with its hydro-pneumatic envelope and patent water-level guage. This safe stands on the floor of his shop, and is open to day-light. It rests upon a foundation of many details, and of sufficient solidity to support more than ten times sixty tons, the weight of the safe itself, which is encased in concrete, embedded in which is a water chamber connected with an apparatus and air tubes to give timely warning of sinister assaults. Besides this security, the safe is burglar-proof, engineer-proof, gun-powder proof, chemical-proof, miner-proof, and expert proof. It cannot be fused, melted, wedged, or bored, nor can the lock of the door, which weighs six tons, be picked or tampered with by the most skillful manipulator without bringing down on himself a detector. The key consists of four parts, each in the possession of different persons, so that danger is averted in that direction; while, supposing that the whole key be lost, the wards of the lock admit of no fewer than two thousand variations, and a new key could be made that would render the old one perfectly useless. Granting, however, the possibility of successfully breaking into the safe, it would require sixty hours to accomplish the feat; and, as before stated, the first blow, nay the merest scratch of the operator, would at once be shown by the index of a patent water-guage lever. The inventor is relieved of a good deal of anxiety in the protection the safe affords for his own valuable stock, and already many wealthy clients have secured space in it for the safe keeping of their jewels and title deeds.

A Brow-Beater Beaten.

A dropper-in tells us the following about a distinguished criminal lawyer of the Massachusetts bar, whose success, very marked, has been in a great degree owing to his rough manner in which he has dealt with witnesses. He once, however, met his match. He has the misfortune to be cross-eyed, and in addressing a jury, as they could not tell where he was looking, it was said by malicious ones that he got all round them without their knowing it.

In the instance under notice, the witness was one of the free and easy ones, of the class denominated as "vagabonds" in the English law—an actor, or utility man—and his testimony was of considerable importance to the case. He was therefore put on the stand.

"What is your business?" asked the lawyer.

"A cormorant," was the reply.

"A cormorant! what's that?"

"Why one that goes from place to place, devouring all he can get."

"Ah you call that being a cormorant, do you?" said the lawyer.

"Yes, sir."

"Very well, Mr. Cormorant, look at me and receive my questions as I shall give them to you, and give the answers to the jury in like manner."

The man turned towards him, and with nice professional power imitated his squint and manner exactly, and then to the jury with the same distortion of vision, returned his answer.

The jury smiled.

Another question was propounded and answered in the same way.

The jury grinned and simmered.

A third question was put with the same result.

The jury laughed outright.

"May it please your honor," said the annoyed counsellor, very red and angry, "I appeal to you, sir, to check this witness. By his grimaces and contortions he is disturbing the equanimity of the jury, and it is impossible to proceed."

The court replied that it could see no cause for complaint.

The counsellor, very red resumed his examination. The witness, as before, cocked his eye at the lawyer to receive his question, and then turning to the jury, with great gravity, but with awful obliquity of vision, gave his reply. Those twelve men broke down, upon this altogether. They lay back in their seats and crammed their handkerchiefs into their mouths, to keep from screaming.

The counsellor saw the position of things and with a flutter for a moment, he told the witness to sit down, who did so, giving, as he passed to his seat, a cock-eyed glance with one eye on the lawyer, and at the jury with the other.

The brow-beater was beaten.

St. Louis & Southeastern Railroad.

This new railroad, a division of which, 76 miles in length, was opened to business on the 10th of November last, gives to this city the control of a region larger, and far richer in natural resources, than all the so-called New England States, and is destined at no distant day to furnish a direct route to the Southeastern cotton States and the South Atlantic seaboard. The road was bugun in 1869, and 16 miles built; and in 1870, the 76 miles above alluded to, and 15 miles also in Gallatin county, were completed, extending from East St. Louis to Mt. Vernon to Shawneetown to Saline county line. The remainder of the line is being located this winter, bridging and ties are being prepared, and the entire line will be opened by the 1st of November, 1871. When the entire line and its extensions are are completed, they will afford the shortest and best possible routes between St. Louis, Louisville and Norfolk; St. Louis and Evansville; St. Louis, Shawneetown and Nashville; St. Louis and Savanah or Port Royal; St. Louis, Southeastern Illinois, Southern Indiana, Western Kentucky, Middle Tennessee, Georgia, North and South Carolina! The distance to Louisville by this route is 250 miles, fifty-two miles less than by the Ohio and Mississippi; to Evansville 100 miles, to Shawneetown 139 miles, to Nashville via Evansville 314, via Shawneetown 285 miles, or only 18 miles longer than an air line. The traffic of the road is very encouraging, both freight and passenger business steadily increasing, and every mile added to its length will add to its paying business.

A GOOD story is told of a guest at a prominent hotel, who, after ordering an elaborate repast, curiously scrutinized the diminutive proportions of the dishes which were set before him, and finally disposed of each at a single mouthful. Then, leaning back in his chair, he remarked to the waiter: "Your samples are all right—now bring on my dinner!"

Selected Poetry.

Our Lives.

"Our lives are rivers, gliding free
To that unfathomed, boundless sea,
The silent grave!
Thither all earthly pomp and boast
Roll, to be gathered up and lost
In one dark wave.

Thither the mighty torrents stray,
Thither the brook pursues its way,
And tinkling rill.
There all are equal. Side by side
The poor man and the son of pride
Lie calm and still.

This world is but the rugged road
Which leads us to the bright abode
Of peace above;
So let us choose that narrow way
Which leads no traveler's foot astray
From realms of love.

Our cradle is the starting place,
In life we run the onward race,
And reach the goal;
When, in the mansions of the blest,
Death leaves to its eternal rest
The weary soul.

Did we but use it as we ought,
This world would school each wandering tho't
To its high state;
Faith wing the soul beyond the sky,
Up to that better world on high,
For which we wait."

—Keystone.

Lines by a Lady.

Oh! why should woman, who so truly needs
Mankind's protection, and so much admires
The truly noble, feel ought of bitterness
Toward Masonry? Methinks no truthful heart
Can e'er be moved with unkind feelings toward
The sons of virtue, charity, and love.
How can I but admire the mystic band
When he? whom I revere and truly love,
Whose every act through a long life, which counts,
Now, fourscore years, has been so truly pure—
An honored member is? Oh! well I know,
The gray-haired pilgrim I delight to call
By the sweet appellation, father, ne'er
Would approbate with his whole heart and soul,
An undeserving Order. Oh! I've seen
His mild eye kindle, as I sang to him,
That rich and plaintive song of Scotland's Bard.
I learned it when a child, and loved it too;
But love it better now, that 'tis a source
Which yieldeth joy to those I dearly prize.

Oh! woman, wherefore seek to learn, or censure,
What we can never know? Enough for us
To see and share the fruits borne on the tree
Which e'er, to us, must be invisible.
Are we, the daughters of our mother, Eve,
More wise than she, that we should not transgress,
Were we permitted to advance within
The sanctum? No! Then let us be content,
To know that sickly soil nor stunted tree
Can bear the fruits of CHARITY and LOVE.

Peace.

From the German of Paul Flemming.

Live not in regretting,
With fretting;
Be still!
What God shall say
Do thou obey,
O Will.

Do thou, without ranging
Or changing
Find rest;
If God ordains,
Then that remains,
The best.

Away flies thy sorrow
To-morrow;
And He
Who gives to all
Give also shall
To thee.

ANGUS MCPHERSON.

How to do the Work.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

It is not every good Mason that is a good officer. He may be devoted to the lodge, and exemplify the principles of the Institution in practical life, and yet be perfectly unfit to preside in the East. In the choice of officers this fact is too often overlooked. We may go still further and say that a Mason may be familiar with the entire work, and be able to perform it without missing a word, or misplacing a letter, and yet he may be unfit for that responsible station.

The work of Masonry is emphatically of a dramatic cast. He who goes through the whole formula with the same intonations; the same pitch of voice; the same rapidity, fails to give it the power and force that legitimately belong to it. A monotonous, as well as a spiritless delivery, mars the beauty of the ceremony, detracts from its value, and in too many instances entirely fails to impress the candidate with the importance and beauty of the ceremonies.

In order to perform the work of the lodge well and effectively, the officers must not only understand, but they must feel it. They must not only know it, but they must lose their identity in the character which they represent. Think for a moment what a deep and lasting impression would be made upon the candidate, did every officer enter into the spirit of the ceremony, and exhibit fully and powerfully the characters that appear in the drama. Could this be done, there would be no complaint of a want of interest in the lodge meetings. Every heart would throb with the warm and benign principles of the Institution, and life and energy be infused into the whole system. This fact may be applied to the whole system of Masonry. It is as applicable to the higher, as to the lower degrees.

We have among us such an exposition of the fact for which we contend, that we cannot refrain from using it. The ceremonies of the order of Knights Templar are of the most solemn character. They are also pathetic, appealing to the sympathy of the human heart, well performed, and the charges feelingly delivered; their beauty, and the salutary impression they make, cannot be surpassed. And of all parts of this sublime ceremony, that performed by the Prelate is the best.

We are acquainted with two Prelates, who, each in his sphere is considered as nearly perfect. One delivers his charges and enunciates the lectures with the utmost precision. Not a word is misplaced; not an inflection offends the ear; not a discordant sound is heard. To a sonorous voice is added a commanding presence, and a perfectly easy and graceful carriage; the effect is astonishing. The asylum is always as silent as the house of death. Not a foot-fall is heard; not a whisper is pronounced. All stand in the attitude of listening admiration. But is the work done well? It is as beautiful as a statue by Power, and as cold! It is grand, but heartless. It is faultless, but without warmth. The candidate admires, but he does not love the institution. He is struck with wonder as was the queen of Sheba when she was brought to behold the glories of the temple, and that is all.

Can it be said that this is the fulfillment of the highest design of the Templar order. Does this perfect worker in the service of the temple come up to our idea of what that service should be? It fails, in our opinion, in the highest point of excellence. It instructs the head, but it does not warm the heart. No sympathy is kindled in the breast of the candidate. He is no better fitted for the duties of life than he was before the ceremony was performed. He has seen the beautiful proportions of the statue, but his heart does no more throb responsive with the great heart of humanity, than if he had looked upon a beautiful creation of the artist. This is one good officer. This effect is the product of that perfection in work of which he is the type. We acknowledge that this is better—far better than the ordinary performance of the work of the Templar order. But to us, it is not the highest excellence attainable. The creation should have a heart as well as a head. There should be a soul as well as life. There should be warm blood, as well as overpowering beauty.

We are acquainted with another officer whose style and method are almost diametrically opposite to that which we have portrayed. He professes no knowledge of elocution. He lays no claim to exactitude and correctness. He does not always pronounce his words according to the standard authorities. He sometimes hesitates for words to express his thought and feeling. As an orator he is probably a failure, if judged by the rules of the schools. His inflections are not always just or pleasing. And yet this man has a perfect control of the heart and emotions of his candidate. If he does not cause him to wonder and be astonished, he draws him to him by the cords of a common sympathy.

It is no uncommon occurrence to see the cheeks of the aged prelate bedewed with tears, and fully as frequently have we seen the candidate affected by the glorious truths so plainly enunciated to such an extent that utterance was impossible, while the knightly ranks wept in sympathy. In this manner the affections have been warmed and strengthened by the ceremonies, and the candidate goes forth to perform the duties of life with renewed determination—with warm sympathy for the suffering of the race, and strong resolutions to abide by the maxims of kindness and sympathy that have been rehearsed to him. This officer feels the truth of every word he utters, and to such an extent that he rarely fails to impress the same feeling upon the candidate.

There is no necessity that we should take it upon ourselves to say which of these two, the most perfect specimens of their respective schools, which we know, is the better officer. But if there be any moral to be drawn from these pictures, it is that a better than either would be found if the traits of character above delineated, could be concentrated in one person.

Though few persons could attain to this excellence, yet, should every one exert himself to that end, there can be no question that the standard of official character would be greatly elevated, the Fraternity be immensely benefitted, and Masonry, from the time of this reformation, would become a power for virtue and morality, for justice and truth, that it has never yet been.

In the light of these remarks, it is obviously the duty of members of lodges to choose their most capable brethren for offices; and the officers, when elected, should do their utmost to do well the work which the brethren have confided to their care.

THE Craft at Logansport, Indiana, are about to erect a spacious and elegant Masonic edifice.

TO THE GLORY OF THE GRAND ARCHITECT OF THE UNIVERSE.

From the East of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, A., F. and A. M.

To the Masters, Wardens and Brethren of all Regular Lodges of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons in the State of Illinois:

WORSHIFUL AND DEAR BRETHREN—The magnitude of our jurisdiction, both in extent of territory and number of Lodges, render the pleasure of an official visit to each Lodge impracticable. [illegible] therefore obliged to avail myself of the present medium of communication in order to address you upon matters [illegible] special and general interest.

The intelligence of the total destruction by fire of the archives of the Grand Lodge has already been communicated to you by the Grand Secretary, and doubtless the matter is one of universal regret. By this disastrous event, everything of value belonging to the Craft of Illinois became a prey to the relentless flames.

In 1850 the Grand Lodge met with a like disaster. The property recently destroyed was, therefore, the labor and accumulation of twenty years. Many valuable documents can never be replaced. The data for reconstructing the financial accounts and Masonic records must come from the several Lodges. I therefore evoke a prompt and zealous co-operation of the Craft, to assist in establishing order out of the present confusion.

Among the property destroyed were 1000 copies of printed Proceedings of the last session of the Grand Lodge. This unlooked for contingency will deprive the Lodges of their full quota of copies. Fortunately, however, a sufficient number of copies remained in the hands of the printer to supply each Lodge with two copies. It is therefore deemed best not to incur the heavy expense of replacing those destroyed.

Notwithstanding the unfortunate event alluded to, the Craft of Illinois have abundant reason to be thankful to our common Father for the manifold blessings and comforts vouchsafed to them.

I tender you my hearty congratulations upon the degree of harmony and prosperity enjoyed by the Lodges throughout our jurisdiction, and pray that nothing may occur to interrupt a continuance of your peaceful labors.

It may be well for every brother to ask himself how much of the general prosperity of the lodge is due to his individual effort. Do you attend all the regular meetings of your lodge? Have you been present with voice or vote at one-half or even one-quarter of them? or do you take part in the anual Communication only? If you are of the latter number you are convicted of a want of proper zeal, or else your cable-tow is indeed limited.

While the brethren will, of course, consult their own inclination and convenience in this matter, yet I would fraternally impress upon them the importance of attending as often as their duties will permit, not only as an index of appreciation of Masonry and respect for their Lodge, but, by their presence, encourage and assist the Master, and other officers in the agreeable labors, and assume a share of the important and responsible duty of guarding the "outer door," that none but the worthy may enter. This is the safeguard and protection of our Institution, which, in a great measure is in the hands of the whose duties are alike responsible and important. The former being primary and self-constituted, should exercise their privilege with the utmost care, for the good of Masonry, and not as a favor to the applicant. I regard it as a dangerous practice, inconsistent with propriety, and contrary to the spirit of the law, to recommend a man for the honors of Masonry unless we know him personally, have some knowledge of his disposition, habits and general character, and believe he is every way worthy to become a Mason.

THE MEETINGS OF THE LODGE

Those who are charged with the duty of investigating the character of applicants, hold positions of distinction. They are the inspectors to examine the material wherewith to add wisdom, strength and beauty to the Temple. Be not careless, therefore, in the discharge of this high trust, but let the candidate understand that his character is subject to a close scrutiny, and that friendship cannot bias your action. If there be a doubt in regard to his fitness, remember your lodge is entitled to the benefit of it. A fearless discharge of this duty may subject the committee to the frowns of the rejected and his friends, but faithfulness will command the plaudits of every just craftsman.

In addition to the usual monitorial questions, the law demands that a candidate must unequivocally declare his belief in God, the Creator and Ruler of the Universe; that he has been a resident of the State of Illinois, at least one year, that his residence is within the territorial jurisdiction of the Lodge petitioned, and that he has never applied to or been rejected by a Lodge of Masons. I would recommend that these questions be propounded by the committee to whom the petition is referred, as well as by the proper officer at the lodge. Special attention is called to Sec. 26 and 36, G. L. By-Laws.

So much has been said and written in regard to

that it ought to be well understood, but as it is one of the most important questions with which a Masonic lodge has to deal, and is sometimes the cause of much discord, it will not be amiss to call attention [illegible] it. It may be asked why this, more than any other question should disturb the harmony of a Lodge? There can be but one answer. It is because the law governing the ballot has been violated, either wilfully or through ignorance. The law is expressed in two simple comprehensive words, viz.: Inviolable Secrecy. These words have but one meaning, and any attempt to twist, turn or torture them into any other than a literal interpretation should subject the offender to discipline.

The secrecy of the ballot is not governed by the law of this or that Grand Lodge—it is a landmark—hence an unalterable and universal law of Masonry; real ignorance upon the subject must, therefore, be an exception, and a willful violation of the secrecy of the ballot should be met with prompt punishment.

All remarks or discussions in the lodge upon the merits of a candidate is calculated to impair the secrecy of the ballot, and is therefore unlawful.

It is unlawful to inquire, or seek by any means to know how a brother voted; it is equally a violation of law in the lodge or out of it, for any brother to disclose the character of his ballot, (unless it be for the purpose set forth in Sec. 42). Whether it be white or black, great injustice may be done with both. However, a conscientious use of the latter will not seriously injure Masonry, while a careless and indiscriminate employment of the former may work great mischief.

It is improper to ballot for more than one applicant at the same time, as it is liable to create confusion among the members, and is unjust to the applicants.

Sec. 50 of G. L. By-Laws must be strictly obeyed; when a ballot has been declared it cannot be reconsidered except as provided by Sec. 42. Any brother desiring to avail himself of the privilege of this Sec. must make it known in open Lodge.

Brethren, the ballot is placed in your hands as a sacred trust; in the exercise of it be just to your lodge, and just to the applicant; you are responsible only to your conscience and to God.

OBJECTIONS

by a member to the initiation of a candidate lodged with the W. M., even after election, is binding and must be respected, nor can the reasons for such objections be demanded. If the objections are not withdrawn within six months, the petition fee should be returned to the applicant.

Objections to advancement to the second or third degree will be governed by Sec. 45, G. L. By-Laws.

When a candidate for either the second or third degree is rejected by ballot, the brother may renew his application at the next or any subsequent regular meeting of the lodge; in either case he will be entitled to enjoy the privileges of the lodge, when open on the degree to which he has attained.

It has come to my knowledge that it is the practice in a number of lodges, in cases of non-affiliates applying for membership, to receive their demits as sufficient evidence of their being Master Masons. I fraternally warn the brethren that such a course is highly improper, and a direct violation of the regulation hereinafter referred to, as well as the 15th installation charge. And I hereby enjoin upon all Masters and Wardens of lodges to see to it, that a petitioner for membership is lawfully vouched for before balloting.

When a petition for affiliation is rejected by a Lodge, the applicant can re-petition the same or any other lodge, whenever and as often as he may choose.

When a brother avails himself of the

PRIVILEGE OF VISITATION

he should be subjected to the test, laid down in one of the old charges—

"Which direct that you are cautiously to examine him in such method as prudence shall direct you, that you may not be imposed upon by an ignorant, false pretender, and beware of giving him any hints of knowledge. But if you find him to be a true and genuine brother, it matters not of what country, sect or opinion he may be, you are to respect him accordingly."

A strange brother is one that cannot be lawfully vouched for as a Master Mason, although otherwise well known. All avouchments, whether by the Tyler or others, must be made within the lodge to the presiding officer.

I would recommend that in addition to the usual formula of examining a strange brother, that he be required to affirm that the lodge in which he received the degrees, and of which he is at the time a member, is working under and by authority of the Grand Lodge of the State or Jurisdiction in which said lodge may be located.

ALL REGULAR LODGES

recognized as such, within the bounds of the United States or British America, are held by authority of a duly recognized Grand Lodge, exercising Masonic jurisdiction over the State, Territory, Dominion or District in which it may be located.

The sovereignty of the Grand Lodge of Illinois over Ancient Craft Masonry within this State, is acknowledged and respected by the highest Masonic authority throughout the Continent of America. Hence the existence of any lodge within the limits of Illinois, without the authority of our Grand Lodge or the Grand Master, is unlawful, and all such lodges, and the persons claiming to be members thereof, are held to be clandestine, and cannot therefore be recognized as Masons by the regular lodges or brethren owing allegiance to the Grand Lodge of Illinois.

From certain information which has come to my knowledge, I deem it proper to say that the recent repeal of Sec. 81 and 82 Grand Lodge By-Laws do not in any manner change the status of unlawful lodges or their adherents, nor is the repeal of these sections to be regarded by the brethren as a license to hold Masonic intercourse with persons whom the Grand Lodge declare to be irregular and clandestine.

The full and absolute sovereignty of our Grand Lodge over Ancient Craft Masonry in Illinois, is a fundamental principle of Masonic government, essential to its dignity, and which must be maintained and unequivocally observed.

The custom of applying for

to initiate applicants in less time than the law prescribes, is calculated to deprive the members of a lodge of a fair opportunity to investigate the character of an applicant—a practice which I do not sanction. While I do not doubt the prerogative of the Grand Master to set aside the forms of law in cases of the kind, yet the necessity for the exercise of this power can seldom or never occur. However, when a clear case of emergency arises and is fully stated, I will authorize the passing and raising of a brother in less time than the law allows.

THE PHYSICAL QUALIFICATIONS

of a candidate for Masonry is important, and must be governed by Sec. 40 Grand Lodge By-Laws. I have been applied to frequently for authority to confer the degrees upon gentlemen whose mental and moral qualifications were of a high order, but physically they could not stand the test as provided for in the law referred to, which is not a mere local regulation, but a landmark. It is obvious, therefore, that the regulation cannot be set aside by the Grand Master, but must be conscientiously obeyed. The question is one of which the recommending and investigating committees should not lose sight, as it may frequently save a gentleman the mortification of being rejected.

I do not deem it just to cast a negative ballot on account of a physical disability alone, hence when there is none other, a lodge by unanimous vote and a full statement of the facts may be relieved of the force of Sec. 37, G. L. By-Laws, by virtue of a dispensation from the Grand Master.

In the formation of

NEW LODGES

I desire to call attention to Sec. 13 and Reg. 1, Grand Lodge By-Laws. Petitioners who are unaffiliated will be required to send with the petition their demits, and all others must send certificates of good standing in their respective lodges. The latter brethren should promptly notify their lodge when they become charter members of a new Lodge.

Much confusion may be avoided at

by a proper observance of the law governing the same.

Every lodge should elect and install officers annually, at the time prescribed by the By-Laws. If for good reasons the time passes without an election, the same should be held as soon thereafter as possible by special authority of the Grand Master. No brother can be installed as Master unless he has been previously regularly installed as Warden of a lodge, nor until he has been invested with the "secrets of the chair," except by dispensation, and not then unless the Past Wardens and others who are eligible, shall join in request for such dispensation. (Officers of lodges U. D. are of course not subject to the foregoing regulations.)

No officer of a Masonic lodge can be properly installed by proxy, nor should the installation ceremonies proceed in the absence of the Master elect.

There is more or less trouble arising from a violation of the law fixing the of lodges. Nothing can be plainer than Section 36 Grand Lodge By-Laws. The words "nearer to another" lodge occurring therein do not mean by the nearest traveled road, but should be understood literally. It may sometimes happen that a strict observance of this law will interfere with the comfort and convenience of a candidate. In such cases a statement of facts, and a petition to the lodge having jurisdiction will save trouble, and if there are no objections to the applicant it would be but an act of fraternal courtesy to consider the circumstances and grant the request of a sister lodge. In cities or towns where two or more lodges are located, territorial jurisdiction is concurrent.

At the annual communication of 1869 the Grand Lodge adopted the work which is now

THE STANDARD WORK OF ILLINOIS.

In order that the same may be properly disseminated and thereby thoroughly established, there should be abundant facilities for the lodges to acquire it. I have therefore appointed Examiners with authority to test the qualifications of those who desire to become Grand Lecturers. Commissions will be issued to brethren to lecture upon recommendation of one or more of the Examiners, or by presenting to me a former commission.

Whenever a sufficient number of lodges or brethren desire, and will make application, I will organize a school of instruction in their midst in which they may qualify themselves for the duties of the lodge or as preceptors of the Craft.

No brother can lawfully instruct lodges in this jurisdiction as Grand Lecturer in the work of Ancient Craft Masonry without written authority from me.

A word to

THE WORSHIPFUL MASTER.

You are entrusted with powers and prerogatives of great importance, and so far as the lodge is concerned, are well-nigh absolute. While it is demanded by every consideration of right and justice, that these powers should be exercised with the most scrupulous regard for the rights of the members, yet a failure on the part of the Master to maintain discipline and harmony in the lodge is as culpable as the abuse of power. A generous and cautious mind will discover the "golden mean" between these extremes, which will command the respect and affection of the brethren, and insure peace, happiness and prosperity.

Freemasonry is cosmopolitan in the fullest sense of the term; therefore, no discussion of a political or sectarian character should be tolerated within its precincts.

Let the brother remember that our lodges are consecrated to good deeds. Forget not the solemn vows taken at the altar of Masonry. Let us thoughtfully guard our actions and keep watch and ward over every expression which may create ill-feeling or disturb the harmony of our lodges. It may be that few, if any, of our lodges need to be reminded of the matters herein referred to, still it is well occasionally to bring to the surface that which we unintentionally permit to sink from the mind, and thereby render us neglectful of the duties we owe to each other and to our beneficent Institution.

Let the foregoing communication be read in full at the first regular communication of the lodge after it has been received.

Given under my hand and seal, at Chicago, this 31st day of March, A. D. 1871, A. L. 5871.

DEWITT C. CREGIER,
Grand Master.

DECISIONS—BY THE GRAND MASTER.

1. Applications for demits must be made in writing, at a regular communication of the lodge, and may be granted, for good reasons, at a subsequent regular meeting, by a majority vote of members present, and compliance with Section 56.

2. When a petition from a non-affiliated Mason for membership is rejected, it may be recieved by any other lodge without the consent of the rejecting lodge.

3. The removal of E. A. or F. C. to a distant State or Territory, does not affect the jurisdictional rights of the lodge in which they may have been initiated.

4. Whenever E. A. or F. C. have been duly elected to advance, and fail to come forward for a period of one year or more, their character should again be subjected to investigation by committee. A new ballot is not necessary. If reported or otherwise declared unworthy, charges should be preferred.

5. Lodges are not required to give notice to neighboring lodges of the rejection of E. A. or F. C.

6. "Written notice and fair trial," (Section 60), of a brother for non-payment of dues, is due, and timely notice of the amount, an official demand for the same, and subsequent notice to appear at the lodge and show cause, etc. The official records and accounts of the Secretary are sufficient evidence against a delinquent.

7. Charges cannot be withdrawn after the accused pleads guilty thereto.

8. Charges and counter-charges may be received at the same time. The lodge will decide which shall have precedence.

9. A suspended Mason may be tried upon new charges, and expelled.

10. A brother objecting to the initiation or advancing of a candidate in any lodge except his own, should give his reasons therefor. The W. M. or lodge should decide as to their validity.

11. When an applicant has been unanimously elected by a lodge, and afterwards objected to by a member, he should not be recorded nor published as rejected.

12. When a petition is received and referred, and it is subsequently found that the candidate does not reside within territorial jurisdiction of lodge, the committee should report the facts, in which case, Section 37 is operative, by force of Section 36. The petition and fee therefor, should be returned without balloting.

13. A suspended Mason is not liable for lodge or Grand Lodge dues during term of suspension.

14. Every brother raised in a lodge is expected to become a member thereof. If by-laws are not convenient to sign, it should not debar him the rights of membership. If he refuse to sign when called upon, his rights as a member should cease.

15. When two or more negative ballots appear against a candidate, the W. M. cannot order a new ballot, under the provisions of Section 42, unless a corresponding number of brethren declare as therein set forth.

16. A brother who commits suicide does not thereby affect the claims of his widow or orphans upon the Fraternity.

17. A W. M. nor the Wardens of a lodge cannot resign or demit during the term for which they are installed.

18. Officers of a lodge must be installed as often as re-elected.

19. A summons need not be signed by the Master, but requires the seal of the lodge, and the signature of the Secretary.

NOTE.—All sections referred to, are Grand Lodge by-laws.

Communications.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.,
February 24th, 1871.

Editor Trowel:

It affords me much pleasure of communicating to your excellent paper the proceedings of the forty-first annual Communication of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of Florida, which was held in this city last week, commencing on Tuesday the 14th inst., and continuing three days. The session was harmonious and well attended. Much business of interest and importance to the Craft was transacted, fraternal harmony prevails; There was a number of by-laws introduced, changing the constitution, (which lie over one year,) lopping off the dead-heads that nearly all the subordinate lodges of this grand jurisdiction are more or less encumbered with. A by-law was passed prohibiting the Deputy Grand Master from holding the position of W. M. in a subordinate lodge. Other by-laws were passed of more or less interest to the Craft. I saw the 1st, 2d and 3d degrees exemplified by a committee appointed for the purpose. I think the interest of the Craft would be greatly improved by the appointment of Grand Lecturers, and they alone should exemplify the degrees in grand lodge so the work would be made, and kept uniform throughout the whole jurisdiction. The grand officers elect for the ensuing year, are Samuel Pasco, of Monticello, M. W. G. M; W. B. Taylor, of Live Oak, D. G. M.; Chas. F. Hiers, of Leavyville, S. G. W.; H. W. Long, of Ocala, J. G. W.; T. Preston Tatum, of Tallahasse, G. Treasurer; Dewitt C. Dawkins, of Jacksonville, G. Secretary; Rev. John Penny, G. Chaplain; F. J. Wheaton of Jacksonville, G. Orator; J. L. Taylor, of Tallahassee, S. G. D.; —— Junior Grand Deacon, E. F. Gilbert, of Jacksonville, and —— Grand Stewards, David Jones G. Tyler. The District D. G. Masters are, for the Eastern District, W. A. McLean, of Jacksonville; Middle District, A. J. Lee, of Madison; Western District, B. G. Alderman, of Marianna; Southern District, F. A. Branch, of Tampa. The M. W. G. Master delivered a very able address, replete with beautiful and touching incidents during the late war. The day following the close of Grand Lodge the members in a body, with their wives, daughters and invited guests, (among which was your humble correspondent,) went aboard the fine steamer "Darlington" for an excursion up the St. John's River to Green Cove Springs, and returning in the evening, after spending the day in the most splendid manner possible, without an accident to mar the feelings of any one, and all seemed to enjoy themselves hugely. The day was delightful; the wind blowing a fresh breeze, lent a charm that was truly magnificent in this delightful warm climate. Jacksonville is a beautiful town, situated on the St. John's River, twenty miles above its mouth, being, in fact, the principal commercial city of the state, and is growing very rapidly. It already spreads over quite a territory, containing a number of very fine hotels, the principal of which are the St. James and the United States, and a large number of good private boarding houses, which are at present filled with invalids and visitors from the north. Still there are not as many visitors in Florida this winter as were here last winter. This is certainly a delightful climate, and many avail themselves of its benefits.

Fraternal Sympathy.

The following communication and proceedings are so similar to many which we have received, that we publish it for the whole, and in lieu of all others. Our heart has been made to rejoice and our whole soul has been full of thankfulness, as our brethren have lifted the clouds of gloom from our vision. May none of them ever know want or lack for friends. And we fervently pray the "Great Father" to bless them all.

DECATUR, Illinois, March 6, 1871.

At a regular meeting of Macon Lodge No. 8, A., F. and A. Masons, held at their hall, March 4th, A. D. 1871, A. L. 5871, the following, amongst other proceedings, were had:

"Resolved, That Macon Lodge No. 8 donate the sum of twenty-five dollars to M. W. Bro. H. G. Reynolds, P. G. M., and that a committee of three be appointed, of which the W. M. shall be the chairman, to prepare a letter expressing our sympathy with our M. W. brother in his misfortune, brought upon him by the recent fire in Springfield."

The following brethren were appointed said committee: G. W. Bright, J. R. Gorin and N. L. Krone.

H. G. Reynolds, P. G. M., Springfield, Illinois:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: We the committee in compliance with the resolution above, for ourselves, and in behalf of the members of old Macon Lodge No. 8, hereby tender to you our heartfelt sympathy for you in the sad misfortune which has befallen you in having, in a few short hours, the foundation of your earthly support swept away by the devouring flames; but these sudden reverses are calculated to draw the Christian closer to Him from whose teachings he may derive comfort and consolation even under the most adverse circumstances of life, and who has said, "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

It is in these hours of darkness when we seem to be left alone and friendless, that in looking up we behold the Saviour of mankind looking lovingly down upon us saying:

Though the days be dark with trouble,
And thy heart be filled with fear,
Yet there's one that sees thee ever,
And will hold thee near and dear.

Every day's experience reminds us of the uncertainty of all earthly things, and brings to our minds the truth of the saying: "Riches take to themselves wings and fly away."

But remembering the teachings of Him who taught as never man taught: "Lay up for yourselves treasures in Heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." The Christian is enabled to rise above the impure atmosphere of earth and breathe the pure atmosphere of Heaven, and hope springs up, and bright and glorious visions of the future are presented to the mind, and the soul breaks forth in peans of praise to Almighty God for the glorious prospect of enjoying rest when the troubles of this life are o'er.

Ought not the heart to swell with emotions of gratitude to the Great Architect of the Universe when we remember that amidst the darkest gloom, under the severest afflictions, when we feel that scarcely a human soul on earth beats in sympathy with ours, that one has been provided, one to whom we may go, to whom we can unburden our hearts, and who lends a listening ear to the cries of the distressed ones of earth. We know in whom you trust, and that your Saviour sympathizes with you in your misfortune and the darkness which surrounds you; but you not only have his sympathy, we are happy to say, for there are hundreds of brethren throughout this great State whose hearts are beating in sympathy for you, and are ready to lend a helping hand in this your hour of distress, to assist you to rise, "Phœnix-like" from the ashes. We are happy to express our sympathy in a substantial way by enclosing herein a draft for twenty-five dollars, which we hope and trust will be only one of many hundreds of like amounts.

Besides this we are procuring subscribers for THE TROWEL, which we hope will reach fifty in number, and as many more as possible.

With sentiments of high regards and the hope that you may soon be on your feet again, we are

Truly and fraternally yours,
G. W. BRIGHT, W. M.,
J. R. GORIN,
N. L. KRONE,
Committee.

WE welcome the Masonic Jewel, published by our old friend, Bro. A. J. Wheeler, at Memphis, Tennessee. It is a good paper.

Rev. Dr. Anderson.

The following sketch of the celebrated composer of the first published English Constitutions, will be found worthy of perusal and preservation. It was contributed to the London Freemason by Bro. Chalmers I. Paton:

There is no name of greater celebrity in connection with the history of Freemasonry than that of the Rev. Brother James Anderson, D. D., the author of the "Constitutions of Freemasons," which ever since its publication, now almost one hundred and forty years ago, has been deemed by Freemasons in general an extremely valuable, and, indeed, a standard work of the highest authority on all questions concerning the laws and usages of the Craft. Dr. Anderson is also held in grateful remembrance by Freemasons throughout the whole world for the active part he took along with Dr. Desaguliers and others in the revival of Freemasonry in England in the beginning of the seventeenth century, when, from a very low and declining state, it was raised almost at once to great and previously unexampled prosperity, and began to extend itself over the whole world, its prosperity increasing and its extension becoming rapidly wider from year to year, till now the members of the Order are to be reckoned by tens of thousands, and its lodges are to be found in every civilized country. The readers of The Freemason, it may well be supposed, must desire some information concerning one whose name has long been familiar to them all, and cannot but still be often brought promptly before them. The information which we possess concerning the life of Dr. Anderson is, unfortunately, more scanty than that which biographical dictionaries and other such works afford concerning many of his contemporaries far less eminent. Perhaps the publication of the present very brief biographical sketch may induce some readers to direct their attention to the subject, and to seek for information in quarters of which the author has no knowledge, by which a desideratum in Masonic literature would be supplied.

Dr. Anderson was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in the latter part of the seventeenth century, but the exact date of his birth is unknown. Nor do we know his parentage; but he was the brother—whether elder or younger is also unknown, but probably the elder, if we may judge from the dates of the publication of their respective works—of Adam Anderson, who was for forty years a clerk in the South Sea House in London, and finally rose to a high office in the service of the South Sea Company. The brothers seem to have possessed similar talents, and it would be hard to say which of them most excelled in ability for learned researches. Dr. Anderson is distinguished as an author, not only by his work already mentioned, "The Constitutions of Freemasons," but by another great work, evidently the fruit of much labor, entitled "Royal Genealogies; or, the Genealogical Tables of Emperors, Kings, and Princes from Adam to these times," which was published at London, in 1732, in one large folio volume. His brother, Adam Anderson, was the author of the first work of any importance on the Commercial History of England—"An Historical and Chronological Deduction of the Origin of Commerce, from the Earliest Accounts to the Present Time, containing a History of the Large Commercial Interests of the British Empire"—which was published in two volumes, folio, at London, in 1764, and is still of great value as a book of reference, being as remarkable for accuracy as for fullness of information on the subject of which it treats.

Dr. Anderson was educated at Aberdeen, and after passing through the usual curriculum of arts, either in King's College or in Mareschal College—although of which of them he was an alumnus is not known—he went on to the study of theology, and received a license as a probationer or preacher of the Church of Scotland, probably from the presbytery of Aberdeen. Of his early life nothing further is recorded in any work which has come under the notice of the present writer; but in 1710 he became minister of a Presbyterian congregation in Swallow street, London, in connection with the Church of Scotland, and from Swallow street he and his congregation removed, in 1734, to another meeting-house in Lisle street, Leicester fields.

Of his life in London, little more is known beside these few facts, except that he lived in a house opposite to St. James church, Piccadilly; that like many others at the same date, he lost a considerable part of his property by rash speculations in the South Sea scheme; and that probably from his dignified appearance and manner, he was often familiarly, although disrespectfully, spoken of among the Presbyterians in London as "Bishop" Anderson. He died on 23d May, 1739.

Meagre as is the information which we possess concerning Dr. Anderson's life, there is enough of it to make the notion very improbable, which is essential to the maintenance of the 1717 theory, that he was guilty of deception, along with Desaguliers and others, in imposing upon the world a newly-devised system of Freemasonry as of great antiquity. It is not on slight grounds that such a charge should be brought against one who has been long in his grave, but who was certainly respected while he lived, and who held for many years the office of a minister of the Gospel. How much Dr. Anderson was respected, how highly his talents and learning were appreciated in his own day, may in some measure be inferred from the list of subscribers to his work on "Royal Genealogies," which begins with the name of His Royal Highness William Augustus, Duke of Cumberland, the second name being that of Argyle and Greenwich, and the list including the names of many other noblemen and persons of distinction. That Dr. Anderson, although a dissenting minister, was respected even by dignitaries of the Church of England, appears from the occurrence of the names of some of them, as of the Right Rev. Dr. Chandler, Lord Bishop of Durham, in this list of subscribers.

The character of the man may be judged also by his works. Nearly every Freemason knows that in his Constitutions of Freemasonry there is nothing but what tends to the encouragement of virtue, and to imagine the author of that work guilty of willful and systematic deception, is to do violence to the laws of our own mental constitution, and to the feelings which must often, in some measure, control, and most beneficially control, our judgments.

There is little, of course, in the work on Royal Genealogies from which any idea of the character of its author can be derived, except as to the patient laboriousness with which he must have prosecuted his studies; but in the dedication, which is to "The most High Puissant and most Illustrious Prince, Frederick Lewis, Prince of Great Britain, Prince of Wales, Prince and Stuart of Scotland," &c., &c., we find a few sentences which may, perhaps, be deemed indicative of the morals and religious sentiments of their author. He speaks of his being led, "in compiling this work, to admire and set forth the startling miracles of the Divine Wisdom and Providence in propagating the various nations of the earth from one common parentage, and in strengthening this original relation by subsequent ties and renewals of consanguinity, and in making both the union and dispersion of mankind, the rise and fall of empires, the virtues, and even the vices, of rulers, with all the different vicissitudes and seeming inconsistencies of human affairs subservient to the steady prosecution of one regular plan of unerring wisdom and goodness, to the exact accomplishment of the predictions of the Old and New Testament, and to the gradual dispersion of the light of true religion into the remotest corners of the earth." Again, he tells the youthful Prince that the study of history is fitted to put him in mind "that the stability of families, and the welfare of kingdoms, next under the blessing of God, depend on the wisdom, the application and personal virtues of princes." Was the man who wrote this, it may be asked, a likely man to prosecute a scheme of imposture? Is he to be lightly suspected of such baseness? Those who pretend to honor him as one of the original authors of modern Freemasonry, are really guilty of traducing him, and, in oriental phrase, defiling his grave.

Select Competent Officers and there will be Light in the Lodge.

Within the body of the lodge, Masonic instruction, beyond the knowledge of the ritual, is becoming an exceedingly scarce article. As the applicants increase, it gradually diminishes, until, in too many jurisdictions we could name, it is whittled down to the little end of nothing. "The literature of Freemasonry," said the enlightened Most Worshipful brother, the Rev. J. N. McJilton, of Mayland, some ten years ago, "presents a theme for consideration, which claims the interest of every intelligent craftsman," and yet, the Masters of our lodges, who ought to be fully impressed with the importance of this fact, either entirely neglect it, or take such a limited view of it as to make the attempt to convey information ridiulous. Some there are, within our own knowledge, we regret to say it, who seem to consider that their time is too precious to be employed other than in repeating, like parrots, the prescribed ritual, or, as it is called in some jurisdictions, "Standard Work," in the lodge, the real intent and meaning whereof they hardly comprehend; and others, again, who are absolutely too lazy and indolent to devote one evening in the month, or even in three months, to illustrating the symbols of the society, teaching lessons of morality, or, in fact, communicating that information which every initiate is entitled to, and ought to have a knowledge of.

In a brochure now before us, and whose author visited many lodges in the city of New York, prior to 1850-51, he said, in writing to the representative of the Grand Lodge of New York, near the Grand Lodge of Saxony, "in all the lodges I have visited, I have observed, to use a mild phrase, such a lack of comprehension of the mission of Masonry, that I have witnessed the meetings with astonishment, and turned away from them in sadness and utter disappointment."

This picture, true, then, is not too highly colored for present application. The truth is, our lodges are given too much to forms, which are nothing but the types of purposes and principles, which latter are the body and soul of Masonry; and the officers consider, as a general thing, that being able to perform the ceremonies of initiation and advancement according to the prescribed ritual, which, almost yearly, is somewhat remodeled, and being letter perfect in the catechism of the same, is all that is required, and that it is of little consequence, even that these ceremonies should be repeated otherwise than with rapidity, and without any emotional expresssion whatever.

This state of facts cannot be denied; indeed, it is deplored by members of the Craft who expect something more than a motley mixture of scriptural texts, moral sentiment, prayers, legends without any historical basis, and puerile definition, which are at variance with the culture of this enlightened age, and with the aesthetic sense of educated men, lacking unity of argument; and causing searchers of real light to gradually cease their attendance for more congenial pursuits. And yet, the latter are the very persons, in a great measure, to blame by such neglect of duty, which they consented to perform. The remedy is in their own hands, and if they will but do their part, and demand at the hands of their fellow members that justice should be done, the majority will be found willing to second their efforts, and by the selection of competent and zealous Masters, and other officers, gradually, but surely, accomplish the great object.

It is an outrage, a gross wrong, and an insult to the Fraternity to elect brethren to office who are incompetent to discharge all their duties. No language can be too strong to censure or condemn a practise so injurious in its effects, not only to the lodge, but to the Craft, generally; for it is the election of such representatives to the Grand Lodge which leads, in that body, to nine-tenths of the senseless and frivolous debates which occupy its time, at the expense of its funds. The ritual they know as a school-boy does his lesson; but of the history, jurisprudence, or philosophy of Masonry, they are in a state of blissful (to them) ignorance. As the season of the year has now arrived when members of lodges will be called upon to select officers for the year to come, we would fraternally call their attention to the responsibilities which rest upon them, of making such a choice as will reflect credit upon themselves, their lodges, and the Masonic society.

Let them bear in mind this one fact that, next to opening the doors of the lodge to the unworthy, more discredit has been brought upon the Institution by the election of officers ignorant of their duties than by aught else; let them determine not to be influenced by friendship to favor any brother, or by the dangerous doctrine of rotation in office, but to be guided solely by the competency of those they elevate.

Let our advice be followed, and the increased respectability of the lodge will be apparent, inasmuch as its position and standard is determined by the intelligence of its officers. Above all things, let every member of a lodge discountenance office-seeking. Elect none to office, high or low, who resort to the tricks of the politician to obtain Masonic position. The office should seek the Mason, and not the Mason the office. This should never be forgotten, and it would be well if every lodge in the world had incorporated in its by-laws a section similar to the following, which is on the statutes of Mistletoe Lodge, No. 647, of Brooklyn, New York:—

"Any member who may be found electioneering for himself to any office in the lodge, will thereby be rendered ineligible to office, and (when the charge is established) the fact shall be placed upon the record, which shall fix his disability for five years; nor can it be removed after that period, except by a vote of the lodge."—Pomeroy's Democrat.

A Masonic Allegory.

The most conclusive proof of the antiquity of Freemasonry, and of its Oriental origin, is the fact that its teachings are exclusively enforced by means of symbols, allegories and legends. The earliest learning of the world was purely symbolical; the first Great Light of Masonry is full of sublime parables; and we, as "Sons of Light," adhere both to the wisdom of the ancients, and their immemorial and impressive manner of communicating that wisdom, by means of emblematic parallels and an individual personification of the leading events of the Solomonic era. The lessons of Freemasonry will need to be inculcated as long as the air we breathe is tainted with the contagion of death, and until we are raised to that higher life, where Time shall be no more, and death shall be swallowed up in victory.

He who has been raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, can gather a richness and fulness of knowledge from many an event in history, and many a parable in literature, that is lost to one who has never been initiated into Masonic mysteries. He has learned not merely the secrets of the Craft, but possesses to a degree a key to the arcana of universal Nature. He constantly sees and hears, in the world of action and thought, works and words which suggest to him a wealth of instruction, that to the ordinary mind are without peculiar significance. Let us illustrate.

One of the most beautiful of Krummacher's parables, is that of the creation of the Caterpillar. We may render it thus: When the parents of the human race had been banished from Eden for their transgression, and the gentle Abel had yielded up his life under the heavy hand of his brother, the angel of death came to Jehovah and said, "The fiat of death has gone forth over the earth; grant me to create some beings for ministers of destruction." Jehovah consented. Then the angel of the Lord descended and gave to the lion his terrible claws and bloodthirsty jaw; and immediately vultures screamed in the air, seeking to prey upon dead carcasses, and the venom-swelled viper lurked in the crevices of the rock. Thoughtfully the angel of destruction entered the garden of Eden, and saw Mirza, the beloved and mourning sister of Abel, growing flowers and trees. Everywhere there was peace, innocence, cooling shade, and pleasant fragrance. He hesitated for a moment. "Must I cause new grief to the gentle sufferer?" said he. "Be it so! Even from grief joy bloometh. Here also mortality must have its minister." He lowereth his rod, and from the dust which he touched issued a voracious caterpillar. Just then Seth drew near, and would have killed it, saying, "are not all creatures subject to us, and have we not dominion over them?" "But it is better," said Mirza, "to practice mercy and loving-kindness than violence. Let it live!" And she made an enclosure round the caterpillar, and gave it, morning and night, more leaves and flowers than it could eat.

When the heavenly messenger saw this, he was deeply moved, and said: "Man has not altogether lost the image of his Maker. He is able to bestow charity on an enemy, and to render good for evil." Pausing a moment, he continued, "It is meet that the good should receive the beautiful," and touching the worm with his rod, he endowed it with the miraculous power of building its own sepulchre. The next morning when Mirza came to look at it, she thought it asleep. Then she went to gather flowers and leaves, for Mirza had grown to love the creature by doing it good; and all nature was dear to her heart since Abel walked with her no more. Returning again, she saw the chrysalis bright and fair as a silvery cloud. She stood amazed, saying, "Behold what a creature I have bred! Now it is dead, lying in a wonderful tomb. Who knows whether it may not come forth to life again."

Adam, her father, said, "Who can expound this?" And they carried the chrysalis into their habitation—as an emblem of Abel, the first who died on earth. When they were assembled one morning, speaking with mournful hearts of death, suddenly a gentle rustling was heard, and the chrysalis moved. Next its silvery grave burst, and, lo! a living creature emerged out of the narrow shell, trembling in the soft air, and unfolding a double pair of wings. These, outstretched, were as blue as sapphire, or the vault of heaven, and upon them the new-born creature fluttered, over the balmy and blooming trees. Holy joy and admiration filled the hearts of the first mortals, and they remembered Abel, the first of the dead. They then heard the voice of the angel of death, saying, "Behold, life cometh forth from death, and days are converted into eternity. It is given to the pure mind and unto childlike faith to see truth in an emblem." From that day Mirza mourned no more for Abel, and the human race thought thenceforth of death with joyful hope.

What food for reflection there is in this charming allegory! How imbued is it with the loftiest spirit of Masonry! How it reflects and illustrates the teachings of our sublime degree!

If it be the mission of Masonry to inculcate and enforce this lofty teaching, which is the foundation doctrine of the Great Light which rests upon the Masonic altar, what manner of men ought the brethren to be? Our lives must reflect and exemplify our doctrines, or else the lives themselves will be bare chrysalises—empty shells—to be cast among the rubbish by the Chief Overseer above, when we come to carry the work of our lives before Him for inspection.—Keystone.

Earl De Grey and Oliver Cromwell.

Earl De Grey and Ripon, one of the English Commissioners at Washington, has the blood of Oliver Cromwell in his veins. The statement comes to us from a trustworthy informant—a stanch admirer of the Lord Protector, as "protection" was then understood—who, having occasion to call at the house of Earl De Grey, saw a handsome picture of Oliver Cromwell in a conspicuous position. The visitor having expressed his surprise at what he saw, his lordship explained the relationship.

The fact is suggestive. Little more than two centuries ago, at a distance of time less than the connected links of the lives of three successive octogenarians, the people of England persecuted, fined and trampled under foot by the authorities of those days, were leaving, first for Holland and then for the land which is now our own, in such crowds and with so much wealth that the court became alarmed, and on the first of May, 1637, passed an ordinance forbidding emigration. At that time eight ships, designed to sail with passengers who intended to cross the Atlantic, were lying in the Thames. It is said in the biographies of Oliver Cromwell that he and three others—Pym, Hampdem and Hazelrig—who afterwards became his coadjutors and made their names memorable, were on one or more of these vessels. Some members of Cromwell's family did emigrate, and their descendents are to be found in various parts of the Union.

At the time of the prohibition Cromwell was thirty-eight years old. Nine years before he had made his first speech in Parliament, but ever since, he had lived the life of a quiet and meditative but observant farmer, whose house was noted as a great resort for those who were persecuted by the unscrupulous tyranny of the king and his followers. Scorning to yield to the injustice of the times, he and his chosen friends had resolved to seek a refuge in a Western wilderness, where, according to their own views, they "might at least worship their God in freedom," and aid in the establishment and promotion of a government founded on principles of liberty and justice.

The infatuated king and his court in thus denying peaceful egress from their dominions kept at home their own destroyers and practically insisted on the future revolution. Had they not passed the ordinance of May 1, 1637, Milton, who was afterwards secretary to Cromwell, might have remained "inglorious;" and Earl De Grey, instead of being today one of the commissioners appointed by the government of Great Britain to arrange terms with that of the United States, would, if he had existed at all, have been an American citizen of ancient New England descent, as we measure such things in our new country, and might to-day have been employed on the same commission, but under the stars and stripes instead of the meteor flag of England.—*N. The Silent Tongue.

The Masonic merits of "The Silent Tongue" are well expressed in our lectures, and ought to be understood by every brother. We will enlarge upon them.

The art of silence, if it be not one of the fine, is certainly one of the useful arts. It is an art attained by few. How seldom do we meet with a man who speaks only when he ought to speak, and says only what he ought to say?

That the Bible enjoins its attainment is most manifest. It commands us to make a door and bar for the mouth. It declares if a man bridleth not his tongue, his religion is vain.

The attainment of this art will enable us to avoid saying foolish things. We often speak without reflection, and, of consequence, foolish thoughts, or expressions destitute of thought, are uttered. Possessed of the art of silence, we shall not speak of that which ought not to be spoken.

Again, it will enable us to avoid saying hurtful things. Since we are placed in the world to do good, and since the indorsement of speech is one of our greatest means of influence, it is most unseemly for us to utter that which should do injury. He whose business it is to root out tares should not scatter their seed.

It will enable us to govern our feelings and direct our trains of thought. He who gives expression to his feelings increases their strength. He who gives expression to anger, for example, increases its power over him. He who gives utterance to improper thoughts will increase their number.

It will increase our influence with our fellow-men. "A fool uttereth all his mind, but a wise man keepeth it until afterward." Gravity and reserve are associated with wisdom. Even an affected gravity is sometimes effective—the true art of silence ever. We can be useful only as we are influential.—Tisdall, in Pomeroy's Democrat.

Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

At the quarterly meeting of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, held at Boston on the 8th of March, the M. W. Grand Master, William Sewall Gardner, made the following announcement:

"I have the honor to inform Grand Lodge that the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, M. W. Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons of England, has been sent by his sovereign on a mission of peace to the United States of America, that he has arrived in this country, and is now at Washington in the performance of his high duties.

"From 1733 to 1777, a period of forty-four years, the Craft in Massachusetts owed fealty and allegiance to the Grand Master of England. The Grand Lodge of Massachusetts is closely allied in the past with the Grand Lodge of England. From 1733 to this time, none of the distinguished predecessors of the present Grand Master have visited this country while in office, except the Duke of Sussex, who, in 1826, traveled in the Canadas. The opportunity is now presented of exhibiting our Masonic esteem and regard of our mother Grand Lodge by courtesies shown to the Illustrious Chief of the English Craft, now among us in the interests of peace.

"The Freemason, published at London under the special sanction of the Grand Master, noting his departure for America, said:

"'It cannot be doubted that the true-hearted Freemasons of the States will readily come forward to greet the Grand Master of England with genuine enthusiasm upon his auspicious visit to their shores, and the influence of such an event will be felt in the land long after our Most Worshipful Brother's return to England; an influence for good, a remembrance which will cement, let us trust for ever, the union of two free and mighty nations.'

"I recommend that a committee be appointed, authorized to extend on behalf of our Grand Lodge such courtesies and attentions to the M. W. Grand Master of England, as may be consistent with the dignity and ancient renown of the oldest Grand Lodge upon the Continent of America."

Upon the recommendation of the Grand Master, the following committee was appointed and invested with full powers in the premises: Charles Levi Woodbury, Rt. W. Deputy Grand Master; Winslow Lewis, Rt. W. Past Grand Master; John T. Heard, Rt. W. Past Grand Master; Charles R. Train, Rt. W. Past Deputy Grand Master; Marshal P. Wilder, Rt. W. Past Deputy Grand Master; Gerius D. Nickerson, Rt. W. Past Deputy Grand Master; William Sutton, Rt. W. Past Grand Warden; Samuel C. Lawrence, Rt. W. Past Grand Warden; Charles W. Moore, Rt. W. Corresponding Grand Secretary.

Baltimore.

As many eyes are being turned toward the Monumental City in anticipation of the coming meeting there, of the National Masonic bodies, the following from a circular issued by the Grand Commandery of Maryland will be of interest:

Headquarters Grand Commandery,
Masonic Knights Templar of the State of Maryland.
Baltimore, 1871.

At a special conclave of the Grand Commandery, held Wednesday, March 1st, the following preambles and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The Grand Encampment of the United States have selected the city of Baltimore for their Eighteenth Triennial Convocation, to be held on Tuesday, September 20th, next. And

Whereas, Knightly courtesy and hospitality require that they should be suitably received and entertained during their sojourn by the Sir Knights of Maryland; therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed on invitations and hotel accommodations, whose duty it shall be at as early a date as possible, to invite the commanderies generally throughout the United States to be present upon said occasion, and make suitable arrangements for hotel accommodation.

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed, of whom the Grand Commander shall be the Chairman, on General Arrangements; and the said committee is hereby empowered to arrange the whole programme for the contemplated celebration.

Now therefore be it known, That in pursuance of the foregoing, I have appointed the following named Knights members of said committees:

COMMITTEE ON COLLECTIONS.

Sir Wm. H. Neilson, Chairman; Sir Woodward Abrahams, Treasurer; Sirs E. H. Moon, Wm. T. Adreon, E. B. Royston, Harry W. Marston, N. Hynson Jennings, Lewis Turner, Jr., Jacob E. Krebs, Emanuel Corbett, Byron H. Holmes, Geo. R. Coffroth, A. E. Warner, J. Faris Moore, Benjamin W. Jenkins.

COMMITTEE ON INVITATIONS AND HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS.

Sirs Edward T. Schultz, Richard D. Murphy, Byron H. Holmes.

COMMITTEE OF GENERAL ARRANGEMENTS.

Sirs Charles H. Mann, Francis Lincoln, Edward T. Schultz, Michael Miller, Emanuel Corbett.

Charles H. Mann,
Grand Commander.

P. G. M. Mordecai Myers.—Mordecai Myers, a Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, and Past Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter of New York, died at Schenectady, the 20th day of January, at the advanced age of ninety-five years. He served with distinction in the war of 1812, as Captain in the Thirteenth Infantry, the same regiment in which General Wool served. He was the last surviving member.

Suspensions, Expulsions, Restorations, and Re-instatements.

The effect of a suspension while in force, is the same as in case of expulsion. In most jurisdictions, a definite suspension may be for years, a day, or any period which a Masonic body may decide upon. In Illinois, the Grand Lodge has limited the maximum to one year. A definite suspension declares that something unmasonic has been done, and the quality or degree of unmasonic conduct is indicated by the duration of the suspension, which, where it is definite, is a punishment. This, in most cases, is a severer measure than indefinite suspension, because it is fixed, measured and determinate, and when declared, cannot be revoked or modified by the body passing the sentence. When the term expires, the wrong is expiated, the punishment ended, and legally, the offending brother is an offender no longer. Thenceforth his standing is good, and his rights, privileges, and benefits the same as if he had not been suspended.

We question very seriously, the wisdom of limiting the maximum time of definite suspension. It seems to us to be taking power from the lodges to determine the best and appropriate penalty—like depreciating this manner of punishment—like a desire to encourage expulsion, and to remove the offender beyond the control of his lodge. Indefinite suspension may be terminated at the pleasure of the lodge, and is a penalty tempered with mercy. It is an invitation to the erring brother to reform, to repair damages, and to reinstate himself in the confidence and affections of his brethren. They have not released their hold upon him, nor their power over him. He cannot return without their consent. The duration of indefinite suspension depends almost altogether upon the action of the offending brother. The inducement is to reform, and penitence and reformation appeal forcibly to the heart of every true brother. It is in all appropriate cases, the preferable penalty. It is not a measure of harshness or ill-will. Expulsion is Masonic death. It is degradation. It removes the offender beyond the control of the lodge. Nor can the Grand Lodge restore of its own power. Its effect upon the offender is simply terrible. It should be used only in extreme cases. Either grade of punishment requires a two-thirds vote to convict and sentence. The vote on conviction is taken first, and the penalty is fixed afterwards. Definite suspension being limited, requires no action from the suspending body; that was settled when the sentence was passed.

Restoration is not necessarily reinstatement. In cases of indefinite suspension it requires a two-thirds vote to reinstate, and as membership is not terminated by suspension, but simply hung up, so when the brother is restored to all the rights and benefits of Masonry, he is reinstated a member of his lodge. In Illinois before a Master Mason expelled can be restored, he must have the recommendation of his lodge to the Grand Lodge. Here comes the marked distinction between restoration and reinstatement. By a vote of two-thirds he can be recommended to the Grand Lodge for restoration to all the rights and benefits of Masonry; but it takes the unanimous vote of the lodge to recommend to re-instatement as a member.

Let it be borne in mind that the condition of a Master Mason is his condition in all the grades above. If suspended in his lodge he is suspended in his chapter, council, commandery and consistory. If expelled, he is expelled there too. If restored to the rights and benefits of Masonry only, that will be his status above. Look well to this, brethren. One obstinate brother can inflict serious injury upon a repentant brother, trying to do well, and longing for the companionship of brothers, companions and knights. Do not expel for anything but grevious offenses; do not expel where there is hope of reformation; the heavy hand of justice need not necessarily be the hand of banishment or death.

Destruction and Reconstruction.

At midnight, February 22-23, the double four-story building on South Fth street in this city in which was situated the offices of the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge and Grand Recorder R. and S. Masters, with their valuable libraries and rare accumulations—the State Bindery, occupying the entire third story, and THE TROWEL office, occupying the entire fourth floor, was discovered to be on fire. The character of the building and the inflammable nature of its contents enabled the fire to seize the entire third and fourth stories almost instantly, and the heavy machinery and material in them rendered it dangerous to attempt to save anything from the second floor. Its only occupant barely escaped.

This fire also rendered the old Masonic Hall utterly untenantable, and all the lodges suffered severely. The building north was also ruined.

Several attempts had been made to have the property of the Grand Lodge insured, but the most valuable portions was of such a character that agents would place no valuation on them. The property in THE TROWEL office on the fourth floor, may be fairly stated at the following sums:

Printing office and its proper appendages,	$9,000
Editor's Law and Theological library, -	1,000
His Masonic library, including important reference books, - - - -	1,000
His miscellaneous library - - -	1,200
Printing stock, blanks and goods on hand,	1,500
Masonic clothing and valuables - -	300
Making a total of - - - - - -	$14,000

We do not pretend that they would realize any such sum. They were not worth anywhere near that sum to anyone but ourself, or some one situated as we were. But they were worth in cash $10,000, had cost us more than $20,000, and were worth to us the full sum of $14,000.

In regard to insurance.—When our business room was kept on the first floor, our son had an insurance for $5,000. When the Grand Lodge closed in October last, the whole business had been transferred to the fourth story, and we then resumed our old position as part owner and publisher. Our insurance was reduced to $3,000. Our indebtedness was fully $8,000, and much of it very pressing. To keep business up and meet urgent demands, we mortgaged the office and transferred our policies as further security. Subsequently the health of our son failed, and it became necessary for him to retire. His interest was transferred to us. To prevent a sale, and with the hope of ultimate recovery, we sold the printing office, really worth $9,000, and with it went insurance. So at the fire, we stood as follows:

Loss, - - - - - - - - - -	$14,0000
Debts, - - - - - - - - -	8,000
Good-will, - - - - - - - -	3,000
Total, - - - - - - - - - -	$25,000
Insurance, - - - - - - - -	3,000
Balance, - - - - - - - - -	$22,000

In other words, we were left with $5,000 debts, and nothing to pay with, and the insurance being held for indebtedness, left us nothing to begin with. What is good-will? In court phrase, business facilities and circulation. At this present writing, (April 26), we are in possession of a new office in which we can do most of the work we wish except the press-work on THE TROWEL, which we must hire done. THE TROWEL will go on and all that our poor ability can do to make it acceptable will be cheerfully given.

Important Favors.

We tender our earnest thanks to R. W. Bro. Geo. Frank Gouley, editor of the Freemason (St. Louis), for a nearly complete file of THE TROWEL, and for other favors. To R. W. Bro. T. S. Parvin, Grand Secretary of Iowa, for a complete copy of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Iowa, mostly bound. To R. W. Bro. W. S. Combs, Grand Secretary of Minnesota, for a complete copy of the proceedings of Minnesota, bound. To R. W. Bro. John D. Caldwell, Grand Secretary of Ohio, and recording officer of the National Grand Bodies, for nearly complete copies proceedings of Grand Lodge, mostly bound; for complete copies of the proceedings of the Grand Chapter, Grand Council and Grand Commandery of Ohio, and for copies of proceedings of the national grand bodies. To R. W. Bro. Wm. T. Palmer, Grand Secretary and Grand Recorder of Wisconsin, for copies proceedings of the several grand bodies in that State. To R. W. Bro. F. G. Tisdal, editor Masonic department Pomeroy's Democrat, New York, for first and second volumes of TROWEL. To R. W. Bro. John Dove, Grand Secretary grand bodies in Virginia, for copies of proceedings of grand bodies in that State. To R. W. Bro. John Thomson, Grand Secretary of Pennsylvania, for Proceedings of Grand Chapter. To R. W. Bro. Alexander Abell, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge, and E. Comp. Lawrence Owen, Grand Secretary Grand Chapter California, for proceedings of their respective bodies. To R. W. Bro. Edward C. Parmaloe, Grand Secretary of Colorado, for complete copies of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge. To the Grand Secretaries of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, Kentucky, Kansas, Nebraska, Michigan, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and to M. W. Bro. W. D. Blocher, of Arkansas, for the latest published proceedings of their respective Grand Lodges, and to R. W. Bro. John M. Bramwell, Grand Secretary and Grand Recorder of Indiana, for complete and mostly bound copies of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery of that State. We know of several Grand Secretaries and Grand Recorders, and other brethren, who are making up valuable packages for our use.

Breth. J. H. Eminger, of Wenona, and D. W. Thomsôn, of Fulton, have sent us late copies of THE TROWEL, which come in good time, and for which they have our warm thanks.

We had a complete copy of the Magazine (Boston) bound; over twenty volumes of the Review, several volumes of the Voice, Freemason (St. Louis), Evergreen, Mystic Star, Monthly, Record of Western India, Magazine (London), National Freemason and papers of former times including the Quarterly Review, bound, and copies of all our Masonic exchanges, ready for binding. Our loss in this particular we estimate at not less than $600.

We had upwards of one hundred volumes of proceedings of various grand bodies bound, including all the old troubles in New York and Louisiana, and a vast number ready for the binder, which were worth at least $600 more. Every examination we make satisfies us that our estimate placed in another article of $1,200 is by far too low for our Masonic library. It could not be replaced for $2,000.

We now fraternally solicit from our cotemporary editors and publishers, and those who have been so; from Grand Secretaries and Grand Recorders, and other well-disposed brethren, to furnish us complete copies of their publications, and of proceedings of Grand Lodges, Chapters, Councils, Commanderies and Consistories, and of the proceedings of the various national bodies of the A. and A. Rite.

We came near forgetting our Ill. Bro. Sickels, Secretary General of the Supreme Council, who is entitled to our grateful remembrance for his speedy answer to our request for proceedings.

We want such copies of THE TROWEL as our brethren can spare.

Murder.

Our respected fellow-citizen, Hon. Sharon Tyndale, was most brutally waylaid, assaulted and shot by some unknown person, near his own residence in this city, on the morning of Saturday, April 29. He left his house at one o'clock to take the two o'clock train for St. Louis, and after leaving his lot was murdered before he left the block on which he lived. The deceased was an amiable, kind-hearted gentleman, a P. M. of St. Paul's Lodge in this city, and leaves a wife and several children to mourn his untimely end. The details have been furnished by the daily press, so that further remark is unnecessary here. He was conveyed to Belleville, where he was buried by the Masonic Fraternity. The deceased had long resided in St. Clair county, where he held several offices, and in 1864, he was elected Secretary of State.

Apologetic, Excusatory and Promissory.

Our readers, correspondents, friends and brethren will doubtless look for much in this number, and have expected answers to letters, which they do not as yet see. Brethren and friends, bear with us. If we do not do what you have a right to expect in due time, we will reach you as soon as we can. We have much to do, and have but little help. Please remember that our right hand, Harman, is gone. We do not think so readily, nor work so fast as we used to do. We must have more sleep and rest. Once we could converse and write or do business at one and the same time. It is so no longer. But we are a good worker yet, and will dig out of our confusion and rubbish by and by.

Encyclical Letter.

We fraternally invite the attention of the Craft Universal to the very able and appropriate address of the M. W. Grand Master, Bro. D. C. Cregier, to the brethren in this State. It is worthy of him, and of the distinguished body over which he has the honor to preside. His suggestions are needful and his warnings timely. Let them be studied and heeded.

Off to Europe.

Our good and genial fellow-laborer, W. Bro. John C. W. Bailey, editor of the Voice of Masonry, starts from New York about the 3d of June for the "Auld Countrie." We sincerely hope he may have a pleasant excursion, and return to us fresh, bran new, and as "good as ever."

Railroad Advertisements.

We should have inserted advertisements for the Chicago & Alton, Springfield & Illinois Southeastern, and the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroads, but certain matter necessary to set them up properly, is wanting; they will appear in our next.

LITERARY NOTICES.

THE LAKESIDE MONTHLY for March is excellent. We think it excels Harper, and it is certainly creditable to the Lakeside Publishing Company, to Chicago, to Illinois, and to the Great West. 108 and 110 Dearborn street, Chicago. $4 per annum.

PETER'S MUSICAL MONTHLY for April sustains its previous excellent reputation. 599 Broadway, New York. $3 per annum.

THE YOUNG PILOT for April is a success. Girls and boys of all ages will find a great variety of humorous, instructive and attractive reading. Send ten cents and get a specimen copy. Address the Young Pilot Publishing Company, Chicago. $1 per annum.

THE FIRESIDE FRIEND is made up of excellent literary matter, such as short tales, brief stories and capital department articles; just suited to housekeepers and such as have a spare moment now and then to read. R. Leonidas Hamilton, 420 Fourth avenue, New York. $2 yearly.

HOME AND HEALTH.—This is a new candidate for public favor, published by W. R. DePuy & Bro., 805 Broadway, New York, at $1.50 per annum. The number for April has excellent articles in relation to teeth, bathing, babies, tight lacing, &c.

THE COMING WOMAN'S MAGAZINE, by Mrs. Maria E. DeGeer, P. O. drawer 5998, Chicago, at $1 per annum, is another claimant for the favor of the people. It is published in the interest of women's rights, temperance, and for general literature. Mrs. DeGeer is a hard worker in behalf of temperance organizations, likes a tilt with the Blanchards on the rostrum, and can take her own part everywhere.

THE PRESS is published by Horton & Leonard, at 108 and 110 Randolph street, Chicago, quarterly, at fifty cents per annum. It would richly pay any one to have it as well for its good reading matter as its unexcelled elegance and arrangement as a specimen of the printing art. Printers and publishers will find this work useful for its mechanical style and for its important advertisements and editorial information—the latter in regard to common matters not found elsewhere. Those wanting books or large jobs printed will find Messrs. Horton & Leonard to be most worthy and reliable gentlemen and business men. By all means visit and look in upon their press room.

THE ART REVIEW, by E. H. Trafton, 115 Madison street, Chicago, is published bi-monthly, at $1.50 per annum. The patrons and lovers of art and science, most attractively illustrated and described, will find this work acceptable.

THE FIRE.—While absent, the offices of the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge, and of the Grand Recorder, R. and S. Masters, with all their valuable, and in many cases, priceless contents, were destroyed by fire in the night of the 22d and 23d of February. We feel this loss as keenly as we do our own, for its inestimable library was collected by our hands, and the arrangement of the office was mainly our work. All is gone? No. Honor, harmony, courage, principles and general prosperity among the Craft are left. Re-construction can be mainly accomplished by patience, toil and persistence. To this end, let every brother aid.

Wants.

We are in need of the June, July, August, and September numbers, Volume 4, 1864, and of the January, February, March, April, May, June, July, August, and September numbers, Volume 5, 1865, MASONIC TROWEL.

Proceedings of Grand Lodge, Grand Chapter, Grand Council, and Grand Commandery of Illinois from the commencement; we want proceedings of Grand Bodies of all sorts not yet received, and any printed matter relating to Masonry, and Masonic or anti-Masonic transactions, from everywhere.

We have before us a book printed for the Chicago Taylor Printing Press Company, by Messrs. Rounds & James, 46 State street, in the best style of the printer's art. These gentlemen are engaged in printing and binding, and furnish printers and binders with complete outfits from a five hundred up to a twenty-five thousand dollar establishment. It is an old, reputable and substantial house, and we commend them most cordially to our friends.

Our well-beloved M. W. Bro. John W. Simons having broken up housekeeping since the death of his wife, has advertised his extensive library of miscellaneous books, pamphlets and magazines for sale. The catalogue contains nearly every valuable work now in print and many out of print which are almost indispensable to every Masonic student, author or editor. For terms, address Masonic Publishing Company, 626 Broadway, New York.

A. AND A. RITE—Chicago.—The members of the Scottish Rite will everywhere be greatly rejoiced to learn that the several bodies in that city have united. Ill. Bro. G. W. Barnard, 32°, presides over the Lodge of Perfection, and Ill. Bro. G. R. Smith, 33°, presides over the Consistory. We will thank some brother to send us entire lists of officers with times of meeting.

F. P. Robinson,

Formerly of Belvidere and a member of Belvidere Lodge, in this State, was in Cameron, Mo., last November, and left there for Iowa; he stopped at Ottumwa with a sick companion some time, and his last letter to his wife was written from that place. He was afterwards at Belle Plaines, Iowa, with some relatives; they write that they thought him slightly deranged, but as he said he was going home, they thought it best not to pay attention to it. He has not been heard from since he left there. He is about average size, dark hair and eyes, fair and clear complexion, and his whiskers are slightly tinged with red. Respectful in manner and careful of his words. It is feared that some accident or casualty has befallen him, and any information concerning him will be gratefully received by his wife, Mrs. F. P. Robinson, at Lamb, Venango county, Pennsylvania. We hope that our cotemporaries will notice this.

New Hartford Lodge No. 453.

Dr. Scepter Smith, of New Hartford, Pike county, Illinois, writes us under date of March 20, that the notice in regard to him, purporting to be signed by the Master and Secretary of the lodge, is unjust and untrue. Of this matter we know nothing, and we have not the document to refer to, it having been burned. If injustice has been done Dr. Smith by such publication, or if the same be a forgery, as he intimates pretty strongly, the officers of the lodge should see the matter put to rights. As we said before, we know nothing about the man or the matter published, but we presume the communication was under seal, as we long since made it a rule that nothing affecting the character of anyone should be admitted to our columns unless duly certified under seal.

Meetings of Grand Bodies.

The Grand Lodge of Indiana will meet at Indianapolis, Tuesday, May 23d inst. The Grand Lodge of Wisconsin will meet at Milwaukee, Tuesday, June 13th. The Grand Lodge of New York will meet in New York city, Tuesday, June 6th. The Grand Lodge of Iowa will meet at Davenport, Tuesday, June 6th.

AGENTS WANTED.

General agents are wanted by the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company, of New York, for the following fields, or portions thereof: State of Wisconsin, State of Minnesota, State of Indiana, City of Chicago and Northern Illinois.

Gentlemen of position, integrity and ability, desiring to negotiate for either of the above districts, are invited to address the officers of the Company, No. 141 Broadway, New York City.

Applicants should state the details of their experience in Life Insurance, if any, and give such particulars as will save unnecessary delay in correspondence.

Publication of Expulsions, Suspensions, Obituary Notices, and Impositions.

We have had no little experience in these matters. In this number we publish one expulsion and two sets of obituary resolutions. We now say unequivocally, that hereafter, no suspensions, expulsions, or restorations will be published in The Trowel. Some of these publications may have been useful, but as a whole, the evil is three-fold greater than the good. Oftentimes, sentences of expulsion are inflicted where it should be suspension, and when the feeling attending such a sentence has cooled down, regret follows, and the offender, who should be punished somewhat, is restored before he should be. One extreme begets another. When such notices are sent us, we cannot know the circumstances surrounding the case, and relying upon the judgment and candor of our brethren, we insert their notice, sometimes to find ourself imposed upon, and more frequently to our regret. Suspensions never should be published, and if our brethren will reflect, they will see that nine-tenths of such notices are sent in haste, and when passion had too much control of the mind.

In regard to obituary resolutions, we remark that it is natural and even creditable to the humane and brotherly feelings of members to wish to do justice and honor to the memory of a brother, and to give evidence of such feelings in in every laudable way. But an editor is to consider fitness and propriety in the management of his columns; take Illinois for a sample: there are 650 lodges in the State; the deaths will average annually one, perhaps two to a lodge. A set of resolutions, such as a lodge ought to pass, from each lodge, would leave no room for aught else.

We desire our brethren to send us notices of the marriage of a brother, or of the daughter of a brother, in or about this form:

"Married, at H——, by Rev. ——, Bro. N. M., to Miss O. P., daughter of Bro. Q. R."

In cases of death we want our brethren, in all cases to send us notice, whenever it is for a brother, his wife or child, in about this form:

"Died, at A., March 13, Bro. B. C., a member of Isham Lodge No. 10, aged 37 years."

If a brother is or has been an officer it is well to mention it. If there are any peculiar circumstances mention them briefly.

In regard to impostors and impositions it is difficult to fix a rule. A great deal of good has been done in publishing them, but the harm is by no means inconsiderable. None will be published unless certified to under seal, and we reserve to ourself the right to decide upon the propriety of publication in every instance.

In conclusion, we wish to please our brethren, do justice to all, and to make enemies of none. To avoid all cause for ill-feeling, and with no sort of disposition to be censorious, we take this early occasion to state our rule, so that all may have due notice and may govern themselves accordingly.

The Chicago Specimen.

We have before us the quarterly publication of the Chicago Specimen, issued by Messrs. Marder, Luse & Co., of the Chicago Type Foundry, who, in addition to a large business in manufacturing type, are extensively engaged in stereotyping, electrotyping and in the sale of a large variety of printing presses, cutting machines and all sorts and varieties of job type, inks and printers' furnishing goods. Their business relations are extensive, and the house is reliable.

Quite Lucky.

Our Rev. Bro. H. A. M. Henderson, of Frankfort, Kentucky, Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge, and Junior Editor Kentucky Freemason, has been nominated for Superintendent of Public Instruction in that State. Bro. Henderson is a scholar, a genius and an able man, and would succeed in the trade of keeping the young ideas shooting.

The Hurricane.—The terrible tornado which so devastated the shore part of East St. Louis and carried such ruin in its track utterly destroyed the hall of Fayette Lodge No. 107, at Fayette, Green county, on the R., R. I. & St. L. R. R. We trust that our brethren will assist them to rebuild.

Good Health—Comes in for May in good time. The volume commences with the June number. Fathers, matrons, bachelors, and traveling men should have it. By Alexander Moore, 11 Bromfield street, Boston: $2 yearly.

The Tyndale Burial.

Our good brother B. J. Vancourt, W. M. of the lodge at O'Fallon, presided over the Masonic burial services of W. Bro. Sharon Tyndale at Belleville.

The Proceedings of the Grand Chapter and Grand Commandery of Illinois will have audience in our next. Thanks to M. E. Comp. Miles for copies.

The Legislature.

Gov. Palmer has issued his proclamation, convening the two Houses of the General Assembly, on Wednesday, May 24th, inst.

Comments of the Press.

We cannot give expression to the extent of our regret on learning, that on the 22d of February last, the library of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, numbering 1,659 volumes, together with the library of M. W. P. G. M. H. G. Reynolds, and the Trowel establishment, of which he was editor and proprietor, were consumed by fire at Springfield.

This is a dreadful and irreparable loss, to not only our esteemed friend and Ill. brother, but to the whole Fraternity of the State, and they have our entire and heartfelt sympathies.—Pom. Dem.

The Masonic Hall building, at Springfield, Illinois, was destroyed by fire February 23. The Grand Lodge library, records, reports, and many valuable papers, jewels, etc., belonging to Grand and subordinate lodges, were destroyed. The office of the Masonic Trowel was also consumed. The loss is of such a character that it can never be estimated or replaced. Every Mason will grieve at the misfortune.—Jewel.

We heard early last week what we hoped was not true, but of which we now have full confirmation, that on the 23d of February there took place in Springfield, Illinois, a most destructive fire, the most disastrous that has occurred for many years. The fire started in a portion of a building occupied by H. W. Rokker, book-binder, and spread rapidly to the other floors, one of which was occupied by M. W. Bro. H. G. Reynolds as a printing office and the publishing office of the Masonic Trowel. The third floor was occupied as a Masonic Lodge room by various orders in the city. The office of R. W. Bro. O. H. Miner, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, was also in the building. The building was wholly destroyed, and the losses of the above parties was almost total. The jewels belonging to the Masonic lodges were mostly saved, but the furniture, clothing, and much of the regalia were lost. All the records and documents belonging to the Grand Lodge, together with their large and valuable library, numbering near 2,000 volumes, were destroyed. Nothing in the Grand Secretary's office was saved. We deeply sympathize with M. W. Bro. Reynolds in his severe loss. Bro. Reynolds is sixty years of age, and it must seem hard to have taken from him in a moment what he has by unremitting energy been years in accumulating. We presume the brethren in Illinois will make up the loss to Bro. Reynolds by giving him an increase of business when he gets started again, and enlarging the subscription list of his truly excellent Masonic paper, the Trowel. Let this be a warning to other Grand Lodges who have not fire-proof quarters for their archives. An opportunity is offered the G. L. of Illinois of replacing in part their library by purchasing the library of M. W. Bro. John W. Simons, of this city. It is one of the most complete and valuable Masonic libraries, and Bro. S. offers it for sale.—Cosmopolitan.

On the morning of February 23d, the city of Springfield, Illinois, was visited by a destructive fire, which resulted disastrously to the Masonic Fraternity at that place.

From a telegraph dispatch to the Republican of this city, we gather the following facts: The Masonic Hall building was owned by a stock company. The third story was occupied by four lodges, who lost everything except a few jewels in a damaged condition. The furniture, clothing, etc., were lost, and upon which there was no insurance. Loss $3,000.

The loss to the Grand Lodge, whose Grand Secretary occupied the building, is irreparable, as the library was one of the very finest in this country, and can never be fully replaced at any price. All the official letters, returns, reports, documents, etc., were involved in one general destruction, Next to this building was occupied by Bro. Reynolds, publisher of the Trowel, whose loss is put at $6,000. But, like the Grand Secretary, he lost a valuable private library, which is something that cannot be estimated by dollars and cents. In this great calamity the Grand Lodge and our Bro. Reynolds has our sincere sympathies, and we here promise to do all we can to repair their heavy loss.

If Bro. R. has not saved a duplicate file of his paper apart from the library in his office, we will be able to furnish him our own, which is almost perfect from its commencement. We will also furnish nearly a complete file of our own journal for his future library.

To the Grand Secretary, we tender a set of all the duplicates of proceedings of various Grand Lodges in our possession, which have been sent to the Freemason since its commencement.

We anticipate that this accident will necessarily delay the next issue of the Trowel, and those of its readers who see this notice will appreciate the cause, and make due allowances.—Freemason, St. Louis.

This loss, great under any circumstances, falls peculiarly hard on G. M. H. G. Reynolds, who is now 60 years of age, with a dependent family and no means of support. Bro. R. does not solicit direct donations, but asks that each Lodge, in addition to its present list, send forward IMMEDIATELY, a sum equal to ten subscribers, at $1 25 each. We have no doubt his circular will be promptly and liberally responded to by Masons on this coast. His requests are not unreasonable—and his heart should be made to leap for joy in this hour of sore pecuniary affliction.—Corvallis Gazette.

We learn with the most sincere regret that on the 23d ult., there took place in Springfield, Ill., the most disastrous fire which has occurred there for many years. The fire started in a portion of the building occupied by H. W. Rokker, bookbinder, and spread rapidly to the other floors, one of which was occupied by H. G. Reynolds, as a printing office, and the publishing house of the Masonic Trowel. The third floor was occupied as a Masonic lodge room, by various orders in the city. The office of O. H. Miner, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge, was also in the building. The loss of the parties above mentioned was almost total. The jewels belonging to the Masonic lodges were mostly saved, but the furniture, clothing, and much of the regalia, were lost. All the records and documents belonging to the Grand Lodge, together with their large and very valuable library, all in the Secretary's office, were destroyed. Nothing was saved. We especially sympathize with M. W. Bro. Reynolds in this severe loss and interruption of his business, but doubt not the brethren will make it good to him by increased patronage. While we regret the loss of the Grand Lodge documents, we feel that they at least ought not to have been exposed to the danger of a loss by fire. We shall be happy, nevertheless, to assist in making up the documents so far as in our power.—Dispatch.

We are pained to hear of the misfortunes of our worthy Brother H. G. Reynolds, of the Masonic Trowel. A recent devastating fire at Springfield burned the Trowel office, and we understand that Bro. Reynolds is a heavy loser. We tender him our heartfelt sympathies, and trust the numerous Craft in Illinois whom he has served so long and so well will remember Bro. Reynolds in his hour of adversity.—Mich F. M.

It is with extreme regret that we have to record the recent fire at Springfield, by which P. G. M., H. G. Reynolds' office was consumed, publisher of the Trowel, and also all the archives of the Grand Lodge, for the past twenty years.

This is a sad calamity for Bro. Reynolds and also for the Grand Lodge of this State. It is a matter of surprise as well as regret that such valuable documents were permitted to be unsheltered by the protection of a fire-proof safe. —Voice.

We learn with much regret, that on the 22d of February last, the library of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, numbering 1,659 volumes, together with the library of M. W. P. G. M. H. G. Reynolds, and The Trowel establishment, of which he was editor and proprietor, was totally destroyed by fire, at Springfield. We are sorry for the loss of the valuable library, but more sorry for the loss sustained by our venerable brother of The Trowel. We hope The Trowel will rise, Phœnix-like, from the ashes, for it is an able worker in the Masonic field.—Mirror.

The printing and publishing office of The Masonic Trowel, together with the Masonic lodge-room, in Springfield, Illinois, were destroyed by fire, February 23d. All the records and documents belonging to the Grand Lodge, together with their tools and very valuable library, all in the Secretary's office, were also destroyed. Nothing was saved.—Loomis' Journal.

Our brethren everywhere will learn with deep regret that the office of the Masonic Trowel, at Springfield, Illinois, was recently destroyed by fire, together with the office of the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of that State. And they will also learn with equal regret, that all the records and documents belonging to the Grand Lodge, with its large and very valuable library, deposited in the Grand Secretary's office, were likewise destroyed. Nothing was saved. The subordinate lodge-room in the building, with its furniture, clothing, and regalia fared the same fate. The jewels of this lodge only were saved. The loss to the Grand Lodge will to a great extent be irreparable. The labor of years in laying the foundation of one of the best libraries of our Grand Lodges, has been in a night swept away. The loss may indeed to some extent be repaired, but we fear the records of the Grand Lodge will prove a more serious disaster. Our beloved and distinguished Bro. H. G. Reynolds, Past Grand Secretary and Past Grand Master, who had but recently, in consequence of the illness of his son, re-assumed the publication of The Trowel, will receive the sincere sympathy of his brethren throughout the country. Bro. O. H. Miner, the present Grand Secretary, but recently connected with the office, whatever his losses in other respects may be, will necessarily participate largely in the calamity. To him we also tender our sympathies and regrets.—Freemasons' Magazine.

Parsee, Jew and Christian.

A Jew entered a Parsee temple, and beheld the sacred fire. "What," said he to the priest, "Do you worship fire?"

"Not the fire," answered the priest, "it is to us an emblem of the sun, and of his genial heat."

"Do you worship the sun as your God?" asked the Jew. "Know ye not that this luminary also is but a work of that Almighty Creator?"

"We know it," replied the priest; "but the uncultivated man requires a sensible sign, in order to form a conception of the Most High. And is not the sun the incomprehensible source of light, an image of that invisible being who blesses and preserves all things?"

"Do your people, then," rejoined the Israelite, "distinguish the type from the original? They call the sun their god: descending even from this to a baser object, they kneel before an earthly flame! Ye amuse the outward, but blind the inward eye; and while ye hold to them the earthly, ye draw from the heavenly light! 'Thou shalt not make unto thyself any graven image or any likeness.'"

"How do you designate the Supreme Being?" asked the Parsee.

"We call him Jehovah Adonai, that is, the Lord who is, who was, and who will be," answered the Jew.

"Your appellation is grand and sublime," said the Parsee; "but it is awful, too."

A Christian then drew nigh, and said: "We call him Father."

The Pagan and the Jew looked at each other, and said:

"Here is at once an image and a reality, it is the word of the heart."

Therefore they all raised their eyes to heaven, and said, with reverence and love, "Our Father!" and they took each by the hand, and all three called one another BROTHERS.

A Good Thing.—Our attention has been called to a book for children published by J. S. Goodman & Co., of Chicago, Ill., to be sold by agents only, entitled, "Bright Side Stories," Gems of Beauty in Prose, Poetry and Picture. It is a magnificent collection of juvenile literature. Under the guise of pleasant stories—just long enough to hold the attention of the young reader to the end, as much information is gained as would require weeks of hard study, from ordinary text-books.

These beautiful "gems" of prose, poetry and picture, have been gathered with a discriminating hand, and no child can read them without becoming wiser, better and happier.

We cannot doubt that both publishers and agents will reap a rich harvest, as every parent will welcome such mental and moral food for their children, and agents will find that parents are more ready to purchase good books for their children than for themselves.

Tribute of Respect.

Delavan, Illinois, April 15, 1871.

At a special meeting of H. G. Reynolds Chapter No. 43, of the Eastern Star, Adoptive Masonry, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty Ruler of the Universe to remove from among us one of our most worthy members, Sarah J., wife of Bro. John Warne; therefore,

Resolved, That in her death we mourn the loss of a faithful and loving sister and a ready and efficient helper in our cause.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved husband and daughter in their irreparable loss, and will tender to them all the consolation in our power.

Resolved, That in this dispensation of an all-wise Providence we see another manifestation of the uncertainty of human life, and recognize another warning to prepare ourselves for the summons that awaits all.

Resolved, That the above preamble and resolutions be placed upon the records of H. G. Reynolds Chapter No. 43; a copy be sent to the bereaved husband; a copy to H. G. Reynolds, of The Masonic Trowel; and a copy to each of our Delavan papers for publication.

Mrs. J. A. Mason,
Mrs. C. W. Few,
Miss M. E. Thurber,
Committee.

By Lima Lodge No. 135.

Whereas, It has pleased the Great Dispenser of events to call from labor in the subordinate lodge, our much loved brother, John W. Leeper, by the solemn and impressive providence of death, who has gone, we trust, to partake of the divine refreshments in that all-perfect Lodge above, whose Master is the King of Saints; therefore,

Resolved, That in his death society has lost a worthy member, the church a consistent Christian, his family a kind husband and affectionate parent, the lodge a worthy member whom, during his intercourse with us, we have regarded as a just and upright man, thus constituting himself worthy of our highest esteem as a true Mason and sincere friend.

Resolved, That while we are thus made to sorrow, it becomes us to bow in meek submission to the power that has made this breach in our ranks; and by it we are impressively reminded of the injunction, "Be ye also ready."

Resolved, That in view of the irreparable loss which they have sustained, we tender our sincere condolence to the afflicted family, relatives and friends of the deceased.

Resolved, That in token of respect for the deceased, we wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Smith Johnson,
Wm. A. Abrams,
J. W. Shaw,

Mystery.—In loveliness of form, or of moral character, or of the material creation, that which is most veiled is most beautiful. The mysteries of the heart and nature are the delight of the intellect, the soul and the eyes. It seems as if the Creator had drawn a shadow over whatever he has made most delicate and most divine too, by its secrecy, heighten our aspirations after it, and to soften its lustre from our gaze, in the same manner as he has placed lids over our eyes to temper the light when its impression is too great upon them. Valleys are the mysteries of landscapes; the more we long to penetrate them, the more they try to wind and bury and hide themselves. Mist is to mountains what illusion is to love—it elevates them. Mystery hovers over everything here below, and solemnizes everything to the eyes and to the heart.—Freemason.

A Word to Boys.—Truth is one of the rarest virtues. Many a youth has been lost to society by allowing falsehood to tarnish his character and foolishly throw truth away. Honesty, frankness, generosity, virtue—blessed traits! Be these yours, my boys, we shall not fear. You are watched by your elders. Men who are looking for clerks and apprentices, have their eyes on you. If you are profane, vulgar, saloon going, they will not choose you. If you are upright, steady and industrious, before long you will find good places, kind masters, and the rospect of a useful life before you.

Romantic Story.

A Gallant Journalist and a Grateful Widow—Grand Masonic Wedding Reception.

In the fall of 1869, William Young and his wife Emily came to the United States, and for a while remained in New York, afterward removing to Bloomfield, New Jersey. Fancying the West would be a better place to succeed in, they went there in the summer of 1870. While employed in Cincinnati, Ohio, William left home to mail a letter, and was never again seen by his wife, who, left alone in a strange city and land, 5,000 miles from her friends, knew nothing as the best course she should adopt, except to go to the house of a married sister, then in Missouri; for under the supposition that she had been deserted by her husband, Mrs. Young found almost every hand turned against her in Cincinnati.

The lonely wife, therefore, went to Missouri, and found there a younger sister, the married one having gone to a new home in Tennessee. While in Missouri, she found in her trunk the certificate of her husband's connection with the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows in England, and this having been seen by one who knew its value, the matter was referred to the lodge in the place, which took the case in hand, and raised funds enough to send her to St. Louis, with a letter to the Missouri Grand Secretary, E. M. Sloane, who, calling the lodges of that city together, raised enough money to send her to New York, with a letter to Grand Secretary C. V. Clark. The want of regular communication with English Odd-Fellows prevented Grand Secretary Clark from rendering that assistance which had forwarded the lonely woman from the west to the east, and while the Grand Secretary was puzzling as to the best course to be adopted, Bro. J. K. Larke visited the Grand Secretary's office, and offered to undertake the difficult task of visiting the lodges in person and to raise the money necessary to send the lonely woman back to the old country, where she had a child still living. In less than three weeks after visiting a number of lodges of Odd-Fellows, and also with the kind assistance of several sympathizing Masons, Mrs. Young started by the steamer Minnesota from this port for Liverpool, thence to her home. On arriving there, she was no longer in distress, but had ample means to render her independent of even the aid of the lodge to which her husband had belonged. Definite information having been obtained that William Young had met with an untimely end, the widow, finding that Bro. Larke was a widower, resolved to overlook the fact that he had five children, and determined to return to New York for the purpose of joining her fortunes with his, and thus, as far as she could, show her gratitude for his assistance in sending her home at a time when it appeared that she was almost without friends. Gallantly facing the perils of a mid-winter voyage, she returned to New York, via Portland, arriving in this city on Washington's Birthday. Her grateful conduct in this matter so pleased the Sisters of Alpha Chapter No. 1, Order of the Eastern Star, that they resolved to celebrate that event by a wedding reception at the residence of Mrs. Vickers, Conductress of the Chapter, 33 King street. This event came off this afternoon, and was attended by the principal officers of the Masonic and Odd-Fellows' Fraternity, Most Worthy Sir Knight Charles V. Clark, Past Grand Master and present Secretary of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows, "giving away the bride." The marriage service was read by Illusrious Bro. and Rev. Sir Samuel J. Corneille, Prelate of Morton Commandery, No. 4, K. T., and among those present were Most Worthy Mrs. F. E. Johnston, Grand Matron of the Eastern Star Order, Hon. John A. Kennedy, M. W. Past Grand Sire of the United States I. O. O. F.; Most Excellent Dr. Jas. M. Austin, General Grand High Priest of the United States Royal Arch Masons; Eminent Sir R. Macon, Grand Recorder of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar, and Past Deputy Grand Master of the State of New York; Sir Geo. H. Smith, Past Grand Master I. O. O. F.; Hon. A. Lent, P. G. M. I. O. O. F.; Right Worshipful Reeves E. Selmes, D. G. M. Second Masonic District; Hon. and Right Worshipful Judge Koch, Grand Marshal, F. and A. M., and Right Worshipful John Boyd, Grand Steward of the Grand Lodge of New York, and a large number of prominent Masons and Odd-Fellows. Nearly one hundred ladies of the Order of the Eastern Star were present. Worthy Mrs. G. W. Dilks, Past Matron of Alpha Chapter No. 1, together with all the present officers of that Chapter.

The bride and bridegroom were in full evening dress. The husband, Illustrious Brother and Sir Knight Julian K. Larke is so well known in the Masonic Fraternity and Odd-Fellows' Order that it is needless to do more than mention his name among the brethren. He is also well known as having been years connected with the press of this city.

Masonic Halls.

The magnificent Temple in Philadelphia is rapidly approaching completion and will be, not only a pride to the city of "Brotherly Love," but of the whole nation. The Grand Hall being built in N. Y. City, is announced as being half completed, and it to will be a model of architectural grandeur and worthy of the Craft of that great city and State.

Wilmington, Delaware, is also erecting a fine hall, which it has needed for many years.

Atlanta, Ga., has just dedicated her grand temple, and thus throughout the land, the links of Masonic architecture are being added, until from ocean to ocean and from lakes to the gulf, we will have a chain of Masonic temples worthy the grandeur and mission of our noble Institution.

We cannot agree with our good brother of the Masonic Tidings, that fine halls should be discouraged, for fear of a "Masonic aristocracy." We might as well fear the aristocracy of human nature, because men would rather live in a comfortable home than in a cabin. It is a sure type of the advance of civilization, when we see people endeavoring to improve their social and habitable condition, and as it is with individuals, so it is with socities. There are many young and feeble lodges throughout the country who are financially unable to erect or obtain halls suitable for the mysteries, owing to the few members interested and the newness of the country, where the pure principles of the Institution are as much revered and practiced as anywhere, yet that is no argument or reason why, when they become stronger and better able, that they should not improve their lodge condition as fast as their means will allow, without a too heavy taxation upon individual members.

We hardly think, that even the poorest man will charge his neighbor with being an "aristocrat" simply because he washes his face or wears clean clothes; and so with lodges, we do not think any of them are unmasonic enough to begrudge seeing their sister lodges in good apparel and furniture. Bare floors, naked walls and dry goods boxes can be used under emergencies, and we sympathize deeply with lodges who are compelled to thus work for a time, and we rejoice greatly when we hear of their being able to go into comfortable quarters. We think every lodge-room should be a comfortable place to meet in and should be as well taken care of as is the best kind of a home. It is in fact the "Masonic Home," around whose alter gathers the worshipers of God in the bonds of Brotherly Love.—Freemason, St. Louis.

Masonic Duty.

A Mason is bound to consult the happiness and promote the interests of his brother; to avoid everything offensive to his feelings; to abstain from reproach, censure, and unjust suspicions; to warn him of the machinations of his enemies; to advise him of his enemies; to advise the welfare and reputation of his family; to protect the chastity of his house; to defend his life, property, and what is dearer to a man of honor, his character, against unjust attacks; to instill into his mind proper ideas of conduct in the department of life which he is called to fill; and let me add, to foster his schemes of interest and promotion, if compatible with the paramount duties a man owes to the community. If such are the obligations a man owes to his brother, they are especially the duties that one Freemason ought to perform to another. Our Order enjoins them as rules from which nothing can justify a deviation, and considers their infraction a violation of honor, conscience and religion, a prostitution of all that is deemed sacred and venerable among men. But Masonry does not confine the benignity of her precepts to her followers; it rises higher in the scale of honor, honesty, and good faith to all men; it espouses the cause of universal benevolence and virtue; it declares as unworthy of its partronage any violation of the laws of rectitude, and its votaries exemplify in their lives the truth of the remark that, although there be vicious men in the Fraternity, yet they are better than if they were not Masons.

British Columbia.

From a letter of a brother, corresponding with the Masonic Mirror, of San Francisco, we extract the following:

In British Columbia there are nine lodges of Master Masons, and one R. A. chapter; of these lodges four are in the city of Victoria. The aggregate number of members in good standing is 380. These lodges are not under the same jurisdiction; the most of them are under the Scottish jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Scotland. The balance are under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England. I have had the pleasure of visiting the Vancouver and Quadra Lodges here. They are under the Scottish Rite. The work is precisely the same as that which I learned in my own lodge in California. They do all their work in the third degree; but the lodges under the English Grand Lodge do their work in the first degree. I would impress upon every Mason who travels, that he should not forget to carry with him a certificate of his initiation, etc., particularly if he desires to work his way into an English Lodge; for they attach much importance to documents. To an American Mason, this seems too much like redtapeism, but it is a very prudent practice. Quadra lodge was formed three weeks ago; I was present at its first regular communication, and the newly installed officers were well up in their duties. "Quadra" was the former name of Vancouver Island—hence the name of this young lodge. The fees for the three degrees in it is $100, which is $25 higher than any other Lodge here. Bro. Heisterman is Secretary of Quadra Lodge, and is one of the progressive men of the Order. In this Lodge members are required to appear in full Masonic dress, and it has a very pleasing effect.

THE GRAND LODGE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

I may here tender my cordial thanks to Breth. Waite, Duck, Keyes, and Crump, of Vancouver Lodge, for the kind welcome they gave me to their lodge. I must give them credit for the close and careful "trial" I was subjected to at their hands. But this by the way, has little to do with the project of a Grand Lodge. On Saturday the 18th of March, a Convention of the Masters and Wardens of the lodges will be held in the Masonic Hall, in this city, for the purpose of forming a Grand Lodge of British Columbia. The brothers whose names I have mentioned in this letter, are among the energetic promoters of the desirable object of having a supreme authority close at home. All concerned are favorable to the project. England is too far away as a seat of government for almost any purpose. I have to close this letter; I wish all the brethren in California all manner of prosperity, and particularly those of my own lodge at Forbestown. Yours fraternally.

What does Masonry do for Men.

A prominent anti-Mason in Windham county, at a funeral of a poor man who was followed to the grave by hundreds of Masons, and as honorably buried as though he had been a king, said to the Marshal of Moriah Lodge that he could not understand it at all; that when a man so obscure died, being a church member, his brethren would not honor him in death as Masons honored their dead. The Marshal asked him if this man who was dead was not an honest man. "Yes," was the reply, "but still I cannot understand it." "Tell me," said the man, "what Masonry does for men who go in at its portals." The reply of the Marshal came promptly, and all of its words are golden, and each should have a setting of the purest diamonds, and be treasured and remembered forever: "Masonry seeks to make men what God designed they should be, without it." Such indeed is Masonry. It guides, directs and influences men to be good, and when he reaches the dark portal which, once having passed, he comes to us no more, it only asks, did he die an honest man? This being so, silently they gather around the bier, and grandly, as though he were of the mighty of the earth, they bury him out of sight. —Loomis' Musical and Masonic Journal.

Montague vs. Montacute.

Our readers will probably recollect that several years ago there was a discussion among the Masons of Massachusetts as to the proper name of their patron English Grand Master, and after whom one of their lodges is named. R. W. Bro. Chas. W. Moore, P. G. Secretary, took the side of Montacute, and others that of Montague, as being the proper name of the Grand Master of England in 1733, and the controversy waxed so interesting, until it was at last determined to settle the question by appointing a committee with M. W. Bro. John T. Heard, P. G. M., as chairman, and after giving the subject an historical research worthy of his reputation as a scholar, he at last submitted a report which does him great credit, and from which we find that Montague won the victory. As he truly says, historical dates was so imperfect owing to commingling of names, that it was with great difficulty that the facts could be arrived at, yet by following the line of genealogy he at last got the correct termination, and we persume that now the name of Montacute in the Grand Lodge Hall and on the Grand Lodge Register, will have to give place to the correct name of Montague, the Grand Master of 1733.—Freemason, St. Louis.

Headquarters.

We announce officially that the office of the Grand Secretary General of the Supreme Council, 33°, A. A. Rite for the Northern Jurisdiction of the U. S. A., has been removed from No. 432 Broome street, to No. 52 Bleecker street, New York City, where Ill. Bro. Daniel Sickels, the official aforesaid, will be happy to see his Masonic friends. Associated with him, in this "little church round the corner," are M. W. Bro. John W. Simons, and Ill. Bro. John Sheville, 33°, Deputy for New Jersey. This will, of course, make the "Masonic Furnishing Co." the headquarters of Freemasons of all grades, visiting this, or wanting anything from this great metropolis.—Pomeroy's Democrat.

Touch Not, Taste Not, Handle Not.

We are daily in receipt of letters asking information respecting certain circulars emanating from New York City, bearing Masonic emblems, or pretending to emanate from Masons, in which the most extraordinary inducements are held out to the members of the Craft, to secure an enormous prize on the investment of a merely nominal sum. We now state here, advisedly, that all such schemes are swindles, the authors of them swindlers, and that the use of Masonic emblems on any card or circular, should be quite sufficient to prove the unworthiness of those issuing the same.—Pomeroy's Democrat.

Miscellaneous Reading.

ACCURACY.—There was a young man once in the office of a western railway superintendent. He was occupying a position that four hundred boys in that city would have wished to get. It was honorable, and it "paid well," besides being in the line of promotion. How did he get it? Not by having a rich father, for he was the son of a laborer. The secret was, his beautiful accuracy. He began as an errand boy, and did his work accurately. His leisure time he used in perfecting his writing and arithmetic. After a while he learned to telegraph. At each step his employer commended his accuracy, and relied on what he did, because he was just right.

And it is thus with every occupation. The accurate boy is the favored one. Those who employ men do not wish to be on the constant look-out, as though they were rogues or fools. If a carpenter must stand at his journeyman's elbow to be sure that his work is done right, or if a cashier must run over his book-keeper's columns, he might as well do the work himself as employ another to do it in that way; and it is very certain that the employer will get rid of such an inaccurate workman as soon as he can.—President Tuttle.

A Reporter's Joke.

Mr. Thomas Gill, a veteran newspaper reporter, who died in Boston a week or two ago, was in his lifetime very fond of a joke. The Washington Chronicle gives an amusing instance of his drollery. The Hon. Robert Rantoul, jr., was delivering to an immense audience an oration at a celebration on Bunker Hill, in the course of which he described with great pathos and effect the famous battle which had occurred on the very spot where they were assembled. As he resumed his seat, Gill, who was seated near him, carelessly remarked, "My father was in that battle." Rantoul immediately sprang to his feet and announced this fact, whereupon there were vehement calls from the crowd for the son of the Revolutionary hero. Mr. Gill modestly rose, and after acknowledging the vociferous cheers which greeted him, quietly informed his hearers that it was true that his father was in the battle of Bunker Hill, but—he was fighting on the other side! The scene that followed "beggared description." Mr. Gill was an Englishman by birth, and one of the first professional reporters who came to America.

A BURLY LOOKING female of unmistakable Celtic origin, was recently arraigned before a New Orleans magistrate for some ordinary offense. While nature had munificently endowed her with health and physical strength, the question of good looks had been neglected in the haste with which she had been prepared for the world.

"What are you up here for?" inquired the magistrate.

"My beauty, I reckon."

"Your what?"

"My beauty."

"Are you certain of that?"

"Oh! Bedad there's no mistake!"

"Then I discharge you—you ain't guilty;" and the acquitted lady took her departure.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

True Charity.

Night kiss'd the young rose, and it sank to repose,
And the stars that shone forth watched its rest;
And the pure dew-drops hung on its beautiful stem,
Like jewels on a fair maiden's breast.
Then the bright morning came with its cool, dancing breeze,
And whispered unto the sweet flower;
And it woke in its beauty
Diffusing perfume o'er the bower.

But the firey sun-god came with the noon,
And his rays smote the delicate rose;
And it fainted away, 'neath the ardent breath,
Which each wearied traveler knows;
Fading and lovely it drooped to the dust,
But a tender consoler was nigh—
The breeze whilst engaged in his ariel flight,
Came tripping with joyousness by.

The breeze had been gamboling over the sea,
Had pushed on the homeward bound bark,
She had turned the old mill, she had found the tired brow,
Of the suff'rer whose lips seemed so dark;
She had swept by the side of the cottage and brook,
Over the hill and the flower-spangled dale,
She had sang through the foliage that waved on the trees,
Encircling the beautiful vale.

She had frisked in the bright curls of the innocent child,
As she passed on her joy-giving round!
And now as she tripp'd on her way she beheld
The poor rose lying faint on the ground,
She hastened to kiss it, tenderly bathed
Its forehead in soft cooling showers;
And her kind heart was glad, as she saw she had saved
The life of the sweetest of flowers.

The young rose revived, and in gratitude smiled;
But the breeze hurried quickly away—
Her love-task accomplished, she went on her course
Refreshing the still summer's day.
But soon she perceived a delicious perfume
Had been poured on her wings by the rose,
And she felt the delight which a generous heart
In performing a kind action knows.

Thus charity, e'en whilst we dwell upon earth
Unconsciously wins a reward—
We feel—as we strive in each labor of love,
'Tis duty we owe to the Lord.
Like the fragrant perfume of the delicate rose—
Each gift the benevolent have given
Will bring them the joy of a conscience at rest,
And call down the blessing of Heaven.

The Voyage in the Arm-Chair.

Oh, pa, dear papa! we've had such a fine game;
We played at a sail on the sea!
The old arm-chair made such a beautiful ship,
And it sailed—oh, as nice as could be!

We made Mary the captain, and Bob was the boy,
Who cried, "Ease her," "back her," and "slow;"
And Jane was the steersman who stands at the wheel,
And I watched the engine below."

We had for a passenger grandmamma's cat,
And, as Tom couldn't pay, he went free.
From the fireside we sailed at half-past two o'clock,
And we got to the sideboard at three.

But, oh! only think, dear papa, when half way,
Tom overboard jumped to the floor;
And though we cried out, "Tom, come back; don't be drowned,"
He galloped right out at the door.

But pa, dear papa, listen one moment more,
Till I tell you the end of our sail:
From the sideboard we went at five minutes past three,
And at four o'clock saw such a whale!

The whale was the sofa; and it, dear papa,
Is at least twice as large as our ship;
Our captain called out, "Turn the ship round about,
Oh I wish we had not come this trip!"

And we all cried, "Oh, yes; let us get away home
And hide in some corner quite snug;"
So we sailed for the fireside as quick as we could,
And we landed all safe on the rug.

Song of the Rose Croix.

BY REV. J. GIERLOW, 32°.

Waving their Banners high—
Snow-white Insignia of the Reign of Peace—
For which the LORD OF GLORY left to die
His Father's Salem—never more to cease—
They hail their great SHEKINA, who arose
From death, that Heaven might triumph o'er her foes!

Crying aloud, All hail!
Unto the Mighty! unto Him who reigns
At the right hand of God in Heaven! prevail,
Ye Mighty Ones! Jerusalem! thy stains
Are washed away! thou art as white as snow,
And shall remain on earth forever so!

All hail! all hail! arise,
Ye Legatees of Endless Life! shake Heaven
With clapping your white hands! he dies! he dies!
The Demon of the Earth! fierce Truth has riven
Him, as the Lightning rends the clouds in twain—
Never to vex, with blood, the earth again!

Aloud, ye Sons of Men!
Rejoice! rejoice! the Reign of Peace is come!
The SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS descends again,
With healing on His wings to take us home—
The ransomed of His love—the righteous given
To enter joyful with their Lord in Heaven!

A New Templar Ode.

ISCARIOT.

BY SIR S. T. CLARK, M. D.

Sir Knights attention! Sheathe your shining steel!
Doff helms, and at the pall-clad Trigon kneel,
And there remember Judas!

Eleven burning lights—one smothered flame
Left to proclaim the name, the sin, the shame
And fame, of fallen Judas!

The traitor Judas—who, for love of gold,
In days of old, his brother Jesus, sold—
The bold, but blinded Judas!

The burning world, the eye of Tyco spied.
Could hide itself in darkness when it died—
This was denied to Judas!

For while our Christ is God to fallen man,
On him the ban, he still must lead the van,
None can out-Judas Judas!

Then pledge me, Knights, beneath an arch of steel;
Seal me in five libations ne'er to feel
In woe or weal like Judas!

O Jesus, Master! from the mercy seat
Come down and meet us! we will kiss Thy feet
And not Thy cheek, like Judas!

Communications.

Dear Trowel:

Glad to see you out again. You've had a hard time of it. I don't know how you feel, but I must say you look better for it, and like that fabled bird of old you have risen from your ashes looking bran new. Your complexion is lighter, the color of your cheek is darker, giving you a ruddy, stronger, healthier appearance. In fact, dear TROWEL, I like your general appearance better than I did before.

And on opening you out you put me in mind of a big, fat oyster that will do a fellow good to take and inwardly digest.

That Rounseville is a heavy dog; I like his subjects; I like his style. He is so common-sense-like, none of your cloud-capped hitatitaisms, but good, wholesome exhortations that will do good. He puts me in mind of Dr. Mott, of Union College. It was said of him that he could probe a wound, remove a tumor or amputate a limb with such perfect ease and grace that for the time being the patient would almost forget that he was the subject being operated upon.

Following close in the wake, and in good keeping, is that article from Pomeroy's Democrat (from the themefull pen of Bro. Tisdall, I suppose), on the selection of competent officers to fill the stations in our lodges. That article ought to be read by every Mason in the State. It is worthy of being printed on half-sheets, framed and hung up in every lodge in the land, and be made part of the opening ceremony to have it read at every communication. It is as he says an outrage, a gross wrong and an insult to the Fraternity to elect brethren to office who are incompetent to discharge all their duties.

But above all I like the manly stand you have taken against the publication of expulsions and suspensions. I fear that the majority of such notices have been actuated by a spirit of revenge rather than as cautions to the Craft, and have very much the appearance of a savage desire to mutilate the body after it has paid the full penalty of the law. Again, how often is it the case that a brother has been unjustly expelled or suspended and he disgraced by having his name published in every Masonic paper in the State as a reprobate, and in less than three months the lodge have been compelled to revoke their unrighteous judgment, showing that it was the lodge that was reprobate, and not the brother.

There is much unwarranted publicity about some things in Masonry. There is much that is proclaimed upon the housetop that ought only to be whispered in the ear. There is that published in so-called Masonic journals that is purely private lodge matter. Whom we choose to receive into our lodges, or whom we choose to suspend or expel is not for the outside world to know. They are matters of lodge and Grand Lodge record and the private property of the Craft. You have taken the right stand and your action will be honored by the Craft at large.

But if you will allow me I would like to press this matter a little further.

Every once in a while I see in the Masonic journals what is termed an Encyclical Letter (whatever kind of a letter that may be), and addressed to the Masters, Wardens and brethren of all regular lodges of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons in the State of ——, treating of matters the most private, that can only pertain to the Craft (surely not to the world), and addressed to certain persons by their titles, and is therefore their private property, and the information therein contained for their especial benefit. Now by what right do these journalists, or even the Grand Master publish this private correspondence addressed to me as the Master of my lodge and which I am ordered to read in my lodge for the benefit of the Craft?

No right, sir; no right at all. When he sent that letter out it became my property; it was no longer his. If publicity is what is aimed at these letters might be published in the daily papers, and as they are said to be liberal to their contributors, something might have been added to the funds of the Grand Lodge.

It may be all right—I know that I am a little old fogy in these matters—but I do think that it looks a good deal like Bosh, Brazy, Buncum.

Think how the world looks at this:

To the Glory of the Grand Architect of the Universe.

From the Grand East of the Grand Lodge of Podunk.

Or as a Grand Master of one of the western States, who got so much Latin, Greek and Choctaw in that to this day some of the lodges don't know what it is.

I do think that a reformation is needed in this publishing matter, and reformation in Masonry always means going back—going back to the old landmarks, old customs and usages, and I am glad that you have determined to cut off one of the heads of this hydra.

If your success is commensurate with my desires and good wishes you need ask no more. TRAVELER.

Reception of the Earl de Grey, Grand Master of England, by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia.

We offer no apology for occupying so much space in our pages the present month, with the following interesting account of the magnificent reception given by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia to the Earl de Grey and other gentlemen of the British Commission. Aside from the interest which would naturally attach to a Masonic re-union of such magnitude, perhaps no occasion of a Masonic character has ever occurred in this country of equal importance in a historical and national point of view, the favorable consequences of which, Masonically at least, it would be difficult to over-estimate. It is a renewal of old friendships and fraternal relations—a reburnishing of the time-soiled chain which for a century and a half has united the Masonic brethren of England and America in a common bond of fraternal sympathy. It is a visit of the aged and honored mother to her children in a foreign land, and nobly have her children received and returned her parental greetings. It is a beautiful and impressive illustration of the oneness of our Institution, and of the benignant influences which, irrespective of nationalities, unite its members in one common brotherhood—rising above the petty jealousies and disparities of conventional life, and setting aside as foreign to its philanthropic purposes, all political differences and national animosities. Such an event has never before occurred in this country, and while it will furnish material for one of the brightest chapters in our national Masonic annals, the political historian will not fail to recognize it as an event worthy of a more popular record.

We can do our readers no better service, nor better accomplish the purpose which the duty imposes, than by laying before them the following account of the interesting ceremonies of reception as they occurred at Washington on the 10th of April, furnished by the correspondent of the New York Herald of the following day:

WASHINGTON, April 10, 1871.

Perhaps no event of a purely social nature has occurred in Washington for many years excelling in interest the reception this evening of Earl de Grey and Ripon, the Grand Master of Masons in England, who is temporarily sojourning here as the chief, on the part of Great Britain, of the Joint High Commission for the adjudication of the Alabama claims, and other questions between the United States and England. For the first time the Grand Master of England has visited this country, and the occasion has been taken advantage of by the brethren of the Mystic Tie to accord to him, as the representative of the Fraternity across the water, that recognition of fraternal feeling which is the pride of Masons from whatsoever quarter of Christendom they may hail. Following the unstinted hospitalities not many months since bestowed upon a scion of the English Royal Family, not only by President Grant and other officials here, but by the people generally, the present spontaneous expression on the part of all Masons in good standing in the capital toward the representative man of that Order in England may, perhaps, be considered to have a deep significance, and for the reason that as chief Commissioner coming into our midst bearing the olive branch, so that all differences between two kindred nations may be amicably adjusted, this present movement is in harmony with the era of good feeling which it is so desirable to establish on both sides of the Atlantic. One notable feature of the event is that it, unlike other public entertainments in this city, in being undimmed by a particle of sectional feeling or partisan prejudice. Men of all parties and from all portions of the country joined in this demonstration.

THE INVITATION.

Soon after the assembling of the Joint High Commission, steps were taken for a formal recognition by the Masons here of the Grand Master of England, and in accordance with resolutions of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, Grand Master C. F. Stansbury wrote the following letter to Earl de Grey:

OFFICE OF G. M. OF F. AND A. M.
OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
WASHINGTON, March 19, 1871.

MY LORD: In common with the Masonic Fraternity throughout the United States the Masons of this jurisdiction have learned with pleasure of your visit to our country, and are desirous of extending to you such a welcome as shall manifest not only their respect for you personally, but their honor for your high Masonic office and their fraternal regard for their English brethren of the Mystic Tie. As the representative of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, I shall do myself the honor of calling upon you, in my official character, to tender their friendly greeting at such time as you may be pleased to appoint to receive me.

I am, my lord, very respectfully,
Fraternally yours,
CHARLES F. STANSBURY.

The Right Honorable the Earl de Grey and Ripon,
Grand Master of Masons of England.

To the foregoing letter Lord Tenterden, on behalf of Earl de Grey, sent the following reply:

1,311 K STREET, March 21, 1871.

SIR AND BROTHER: In reply to your letter of the 18th inst., I am requested by Lord de Grey to state to you that he will be happy to receive you at half-past eleven o'clock next Thursday morning; or, should that day be inconvenient to you, on any other day you may prefer.

Yours, obediently and fraternally,
TENTERDEN, P. M. P. Z.

The Most Worshipful Brother C. F. Stansbury.

INVITATION TO ALL AMERICAN GRAND MASTERS.

In a personal interview Earl de Grey accepted the invitation, and Monday, April 10, was fixed as the day for the reception and banquet. Grand Masters throughout the United States were invited to participate in this pleasant international demonstration, as will be seen by the following letter:

GRAND LODGE OF F. AND A. M.,
OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
WASHINGTON, 1871.

To the M. W. Grand Master of Masons of the State of——:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, being desirous of extending a fraternal welcome to the Grand Master of Masons of England, request the honor of your presence at a banquet to be given to the Right Honorable the Earl de Grey and Ripon, M. W. Grand Master of England, at the Masonic Temple, in this city, on the evening of Monday, April 10, 1871.

The favor of an early response to this invitation is requested, that proper arrangements may be made for your reception.

CHAS. F. STANSBURY, G. M.,
R. B. DONALDSON, P. G. M.,
J. B. GIBBS, G. S. W.,
NOBLE D. LARNER, G. S.,
A. G. MACKEY, P. G. S.,
E. B. BURY, W. M. No. 4,
L. D. WINE, W. M. No. 10.
Committee.

This was promptly responded to, and those who could not attend in person or by proxy, expressed their fraternal regrets. None but Masons in good standing were permitted to subscribe to or participate in the reception or banquet, and none such were denied admittance. The music in the lodge and at the banquet was supplied by a choir and a band composed exclusively of Masons.

OPENING PROCEEDINGS.

At six o'clock the Grand Lodge was opened in due form at the Masonic Temple, corner of Ninth and F streets, by the Most Worshipful C. F. Stansbury, Grand Master of the District of Columbia, who wore the apron and sash and used the gavel which formed a part of the Masonic insignia of Washington when he laid the corner-stone of the Capitol. The lodge was crowded by leading citizens and visiting brethren. The brethren appeared in black suits, white cravats, white gloves and Masonic aprons, together with their official insignia.

The scene was brilliant and striking, and was all the more imposing in the lofty and appropriately furnished lodge-room, crowded as it was by distinguished Senators and Representatives and leading citizens from various portions of the country. Styleman Le Strange, Esq., of the British Legation, of Westminster Keystone Lodge, London, and Lord Tenterden, Past Master of Harmony Lodge, England, arrived about seven o'clock. The latter was specially welcomed by the Grand Master. Soon afterwards Earl de Grey, Grand Master of England, was presented, and he was welcomed by the Grand Master of the District of Columbia, in the following words:

MOST WORSHIPFUL SIR: In the name of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, and speaking for the entire Craft in this jurisdiction, as well as for the many brethren from other jurisdictions who have united with us on this occasion, I tender you a hearty and cordial Masonic welcome. This is the first instance in the history of American Freemasonry in which an opportunity has been afforded to the Fraternity to extend Masonic hospitality to the Grand Master of Masons at once of our mother jurisdiction and our mother country; and we deem ourselves fortunate in being the first to have the privilege of expressing thus directly the cordial sentiments which, as Masons, we entertain for our brethren of England. We are glad to acknowledge, both personally and Masonically, the tie which binds us to the country from which our forefathers for the most part came; from which we received our original Masonic charters and instructions, and hence we have derived not only much of what is valuable in our system of public law and polity, but a common inheritance in a charming literature and a history illustrated by devotion to the rights of man and the principles of sound constitutional liberty. We trust that your sojourn in the United States may be agreeable to yourself and useful to the cause of peace, and that among the kindly recollections of your future life may remain the memory of the fraternal greetings of your Masonic brethren of America. You will now accept a seat in the Grand East.

EARL DE GREY'S ADDRESS.

After being seated the English Grand Master received the grand honors, and, rising, responded as follows:

MOST WORSHIPFUL SIR AND BRETHREN: I trust that you will permit me to return you my most grateful thanks for the very kind and fraternal welcome which you have given to me on this occasion. I assure you, sir, I esteem it a great honor to have been thus received by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia—an honor which I am well aware I owe not to my personal merits, but to the fact—the important and significant fact that I am the representative of the Grand Lodge of England—a Mason, however unworthy, whom they have been pleased to honor with the highest mark of their confidence. And, sir, I esteem it a most fortunate occasion—fortunate for me as an individual and fortunate for Masonry in both countries—that there should at length have taken place so close a union between Masonry in America, and Masonry in England as that you should now for the first time, as you tell me, receive within the walls of this important Grand Lodge the Grand Master of Englishmen. We all know that fraternity is the first principle of Masonry, and therefore it is, all must rejoice at everything which binds more closely together the Masons of different countries. I, sir, esteem myself very happy indeed to have had it in my power to attend here to-night. I shall carry away from this Grand Lodge a most grateful recollection of your kindness. I shall make it my duty to tell my brethren in England of the magnificent reception which has been accorded their Grand Master to-night, and I am confident I do not misinterpret the feelings with which they will receive that information, when I say they will, indeed, rejoice that the first step—I trust it is but a first step—should thus have been taken to closer and more intimate union between American and English Masons. (Applause). Upon which, for my part, I have always believed, and now believe more strongly, cannot be too close and fraternal. (Long continued applause).

END OF THE CEREMONIES.

After an anthem had been sung by the Washington Masonic choir Earl de Gray was presented to all the brethren present, when the Grand Lodge was closed.

AT THE BANQUET HALL.

After the reception those holding tickets for the banquet proceeded to the music hall, where the tables were spread, one occupying the head of the room, in the center of which sat Grand Master Stansbury, having on his right Earl de Grey, and on his left Lord Tenterden, Secretary of the High Commisson. Sir John A. Macdonald and Colonel Bernard of the High Commission were also invited, but were unable to attend because of prior engagements. They appeared, however, later in the evening.

GRAND OFFICERS PRESENT.

Among those present were the following officers: R. A. Lamberton, Grand Master of Pennsylvania; John H. B. Latrobe, Grand Master of Maryland; Noble D. Larner, Grand Secretary of the District of Columbia; Albert G. Mackey, 33°, Past Grand Secretary of South Carolina; Alex. H. Newcomb, Grand Master of Ohio; Styleman Le Strange, Esq., 33°, Secretary of the British Legation; P. H. Hoe, Past Deputy Grand Master of the District of Columbia; Ben Perley Poore, 33°; John T. Heard, Past Grand Master of Massachusetts; John R. Holbrook, Grand Master of New Hampshire; Rev. J. N. Coombs, Grand Chaplain of the District of Columbia; J. Daniels, Grand Visitor and Lecturer of the District of Columbia; Asa Smith, Grand Master of Connecticut; J. B. Will, Past Deputy Grand Master of the District of Columbia; Samuel Lawrence, Grand Master of Georgia; Hon. Jackson Orr, proxy for John Scott, Grand Master of Iowa; R. B. Donaldson, Past Grand Master of the District of Columbia, and George B. Clark, Deputy Grand Master of the District of Columbia. The side tables were supported by R. W. Senior Grand Warden and Junior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, J. B. Gibbs and J. L. Johnson.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

The following members of Congress were present: Senators Cameron, of Pennsylvania; Cragin, of New Hampshire; Edmunds, of Vermont; Lewis, of Virginia; Logan, of Illinois; Nye, of Nevada; Osborne, of Florida; Sawyer, of South Carolina; and Sprague, of Rhode Island; and Representatives Banks, of Massachusetts; Barry, of Mississippi; Burlington, of Massachusetts; Burchard, of Illinois; Butler, of Massachusetts; Caldwell, of Tennessee; Davis, of West Virginia; Duke, of Virginia; Dubose, of Georgia; Garfield, of Ohio; Harper, of North Carolina, heretofore of West Virginia; Holman, of Indiana; Kelley, of Pennsylvania; Kerr, of Indiana; Lamison, of Ohio; Leach, of North Carolina; Lewis, of Kentucky; McCormick, of Missouri; McKinney, of Ohio; McNeely, of Illinois; Manson, of Ohio; Merritt, of Idaho; Benjamin F. Meyer, of Pennsylvania; Leonard Myers, of Pennsylvania; Niblack, of Indiana; Packer, of Pennsylvania; Palmer, of Iowa; Rice, of Arkansas; Shanks, of Indiana; Stoughton, of Michigan; Terry, of Virginia; Waddell, of North Carolina; and Whitthorne, of Tennessee.

Speeches were delivered at the Banquet by several of the distinguished brethren present, but for which we have not room in our pages this month.

INVITATION FROM BALTIMORE.

It may not be considered out of place in this connection to add as an incident in the visit of our distinguished brother, that on the 12th of April an invitation was extended to him to attend a Grand Masonic Banquet and reception at Baltimore, but which he was unable to accept, for the reasons stated in the following note from Lord Tenterden, Secretary of the British Commission, for a copy of which we are indebted to the courtesy of the brother to whom it is addressed:

WASHINGTON, April 13, 1871.

Bro. John M. Miller, 33°, Chairman Committee:

I am requested by Lord de Grey to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday, and to express to you his regret that the pressure of other engagements renders him unable to take advantage of the friendly and fraternal invitation which you have tendered him in behalf of the Grand Orient of Baltimore.

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

TENTERDEN, P. M. P. Z.

—Magazine, Boston.

The General Grand Chapter.

Bro. Leon Hyneman, of Philadelphia, in the Keystone, of March 4th and 11th, discusses the General Grand Chapter, and takes the Grand Chapter of the State of Iowa to task, in the matter of rescinding the action of 1860, sundering relations with the General Grand Chapter. He sets out, in his first article, to prove that the national body "was not legally constituted," and that, therefore, no agreements made with it, or obligations entered into with it, are of binding force. And in his second article, of the 11th, he argues strongly against the wisdom and propriety of our Grand Chapter retracing its steps and resuming fealty.

We have no particular objection to his argument on the "legality" of the formation of the central body; nor do we consider that a question to be considered, outside of Pennsylvania and Virginia. The Grand Chapters of the United States, with a few exceptions formed the General Grand Chapter, so that all of these parties are properly estopped from considering the question. As we said above, Pennsylvania and Virginia being now, as they always have been, outside of the General Grand Chapter organization, and having never pledged to it their allegiance, but always opposed its assumptions of regularity and power, are, of course, in position to consistently oppose it now; but they, only, are in this condition. The mouths of all other American chapter organizations are estopped on this head, for the same reason that the holder of real estate is estopped from injuring the character of the title under which he holds possession.

Then, also, we disagree with him, that obligation on the part of Grand Chapters belonging to the General Grand Organization is void, because of the irregularity of its original establishment. However irregular this may have been sixty years ago, time and sufferance have cured the defect—Grand Chapters of the Union being the judges. Convenience and the public good have caused quiet possession to give title, no matter what may have been the original defects; and this has cured whatever defects may have existed in the original authority of the General Grand Chapter. But even if that were so, we cannot see by what code of ethics, an obligation voluntarily assumed to any one can be laid off at the will of the party assuming it. This is the whole question between the General Grand Chapter and our Grand Chapter. We care not what arguments may be brought against the former, how bad its original formation may have been, how weak, and useless, and cumbersome, it may be now, how thoroughly we may be satisfied of its utter inefficiency to accomplish anything which might not be better accomplished without it; the fact that all Royal Arch Masons in Iowa have freely and voluntarily agreed to maintain it, and support its constitution and laws, cannot be gotten rid of, and nothing but its own act concurring with theirs can release them. This subject has been fully considered here, and the Royal Arch Masons of Iowa are satisfied of the correctness of this view. Therefore, we have returned to our allegiance, hoping that the day may come when the General Grand Chapter, having done its work of introducing, even into Pennsylvania and Virginia, as well as in the States of its own obedience, the chapter work of Thos. Smith Webb, the work to accomplish which it was established, and being now only an encumbrance and a fossil, may be quietly disbanded, and Chapter Masonry allowed, like Blue Masonry, to work out its own ends by the inherent force which dwells in it.

Bro. Hyneman seems to think that the address of Comp. Lewis, as General Grand High Priest, at St. Louis, in 1868, with its "soft wooings," was the compelling power which restored our Grand Chapter to the national body. In this, he is entirely mistaken. The power that worked the change was, simply, that Iowa Masons, however much they desired it, could not avoid their own contracts, without the consent of the other party to them—could not "go back on their word"—they had heard of that man of whom David spoke, who "sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not," and they preferred to be of his class, even though modern judges should esteem them unwise; they could not, like Comp. H., see how they could, on account of even "illegal formation," repudiate her own mother, or refuse to recognize her.

We hope for the speedy dissolution of the General Grand Chapter, but when she does go to pieces, like the preacher, on the iron-bound coast of England, when a wreck appeared in offing while he was preaching, commanded his congregation to be seated till he could get to the door, and then dismissed them with the exclamation, "Now then! let us all have a fair start!" we desire that all shall start even, and "go together."—Langridge, Associate Editor, Evergreen.

The Broken Tessera.

AN ACECDOTE OF THE REVOLUTION.

"Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labor."

When Philadelphia was to be evacuated by the British army, under Sir Henry Clinton, June 18, 1778, there was a merchant, one Hubbard Simpson, largely engaged in the sale of English goods, who had become highly obnoxious to the American residents for supplying the British commander with mercantile facilities, and with information that had been used to the detriment of the American army.

This man was in high repute with Sir Henry, and his immediate predecessor, Lord Howe. From the former, he now, received a notification in time to sell his goods, and depart under the protection of the British army.

It was impossible, however, to dispose of so large a stock at short notice. To sell upon a credit was impracticable, so far as any of the American merchants were concerned, and as for those in the tory interests, they were not to be trusted. To make a cash sale in the present state of the funds was impossible. Thus Mr. Simpson revolved the matter in his mind till the very day preceding the evacuation. A final notice from Sir Henry found him undecided, sitting in his private warehouse, soon to be devoted to spoliation and fire by the incensed Americans.

Now this man was a member of the Masonic Fraternity. Before the breaking out of strife he had held a distinguished place in the provincial lodges. Although his understanding of right and wrong in the present war differed from that of a majority of his countrymen, yet the most zealous patriot could not accuse him of inconsistency or turpitude. What he had professed to be from youth—a warm loyalist—he still maintained; and this had led him to adopt the unpopular side in the revolutionary struggle, and to follow the British army, even at the expense of a large part of his property.

As things now stood he was likely to lose more. Already he had begun to contemplate the idea of throwing open the doors and departing, when a rap was heard without, and, in answer to his invitation, an old friend, Mr. Jonas Lee, entered, and asked for a conference.

This gentleman, come at a critical moment, was a person of note in the city—one who had suffered more than most others for his attachment to liberty—and a zealous Mason.

For three years and upwards, no intercourse had been held between the pair once fraternally intimate; they had only acknowledged each other's acquaintance by a nod of recognition when they met in the streets.

The object of the call was stated in a few words.

"My old friend and brother, I have heard of your approaching danger, and am come to offer you a service. We have taken opposite sides in politics; but you have sustained your choice like myself, at great sacrifices; and while I can but regret that you are arrayed against our common country, I yet respect your honesty of purpose. Masonry knows no principle but duty, and this is your hour of depression; therefore am I come to offer it to you in brotherly truth. For old time's sake I will take charge of your property, otherwise the spoil of our soldiers before to-morrow morning, sell it for you at the best time and advantage and hold the proceeds subject to your order."

The grateful merchant was profuse with his thanks.

"None of that Bro. Simpson. My own heart is a sufficient reward. You can say all that when we meet again. Time presses. You are in immediate and great danger."

A clear sale was forthwith made of the whole property, amounting to more than fifty thousand dollars. No documentary evidence relative to the debt was retained by Mr. Simpson. Prudence pointed out this as the only course that promised a successful result.

At parting, while yet the boat was waiting at the pier and the drums of the American advanced guard were sounding in the suburbs of the city, Mr. Simpson took a gold piece from his purse, broke it in two parts, and handing one to his noble-hearted friend, observed: "You and I used to debate the purpose of the ancient tessera; now we will make it a practical question. Whoever presents you with this fragment of gold, to him I authorize you to render up whatever in your hands belongs to me. Farewell."

Years rolled by, and Jonas Lee heard no more of his old friend. With great difficulty, and by the aid of powerful friends at headquarters, he had succeeded in disposing of the property without much loss; and by a judicious use of the money, he had become rich. Old age then crept upon him. His daily walks about the city began to be shortened. The almond tree flourished. The grasshopper began to be a burden. From year to year he drew nearer to his own mansion, and finally confined himself within his retired apartment, to wait for the Summoner of all flesh.

One day, as he was reclining in the listlessness of old age, with but the Word of God and the person of his good wife for companionship, and the voices of his grandchildren ringing from the next room, in happy harmony, he was accosted by a beggarly-looking young man, who prayed a gift of money, "for a poor shipwrecked foreigner, who had lost his all, and barely escaped with life itself."

Jonas Lee was not a person to refuse such a demand. He made him a bountiful gift of money, clothes and kind words. But when the foreigner was about to depart, he walked up to Mr. Lee's couch, and pressing his hand with thankfulness, he dropped into it a worn and ragged piece of metal, and asked him if he would accept that piece of gold as a token of a poor beggar's gratitude?

There was something peculiar in the foreigner's tone which led Mr. Lee to draw out his spectacles, and examine the offering intently. What was the surprise of his wife to see him rise from his chair, draw a similar fragment from his bosom, where it had been suspended by ribbon for a long time, and applying the pieces together, to hear him triumphantly declare: They fit! they fit! The broken tessera is complete! the union is perfect! Thank God, thank God, my brother is yet alive!"

The foreigner turned out to be the youngest son of Mr. Simpson, who had been shipwrecked, as he stated, to the great hazard of his life. Preserving the golden fragment, he had landed at Philadelphia, ragged and poor, charged by his father with a message to Mr. Lee. Why the former had so long delayed his claim, does not appear. The history informs us, however, that he had followed the British army through the remainder of the war; amassed a large fortune by some successful government contract; gone to England; embarked in extensive speculations there; and finally, retiring from business, immensely wealthy, was made a baronet for his loyal services.

His son was received with open arms and introduced in the first circles of Philadelphia. Report, concerning the Masonic part of the transaction became public, and gave a new impetus to the Order.

But when a full account of his stewardship was prepared by Mr. Lee, and the property, both principal and interest, tendered to the young man, the proffer was met by a letter from Sir Hubbard Simpson, just received, in which he declined receiving a shilling of it, and presented it, with his warmest regards, to his old friend and brother, Jonas Lee.—American Freemason.

The Parisian Masons and the Civil War.

As we anticipated, the ridiculous proceedings of a fraction of the Parisian Masons have already evoked a disavowal of official support. We learn from the correspondence of a contemporary that, "Bro. M. Malapert, who signs himself 'Orator of the Supreme Council of Masons and chief of the Craft,' disavows the whole of the proceedings; and at a meeting which was held at the Grand Orient Hotel, in the Rue Cadet, the great majority decided that the conduct of certain brethren of the Order was altogether personal, and in direct opposition to the genuine principles of Freemasonry; that in the absence of any formal decision, either of the Grand Orient of France or of the Supreme Council, the proposed manifestations were alike irregular, and the responsibility of whatever incidents might occur was perfectly individual. A notice to this effect has been published in various journals. The 'Siecle' publishes a letter from Bro. Ernest Hamel, Ex-Venerable (P. M)., of the Lodge Avenir, expressing his surprise and affliction that any body of Freemasons should have presumed to declare that 'Masonry would plant its banner on the walls of Paris, and in case of its being pierced by a bullet, they would, in a body, take part in the struggle. Such a declaration, he affirms, is in entire opposition to the tenets of the Order, the mission of which is always to forward conciliation and peace. The conduct of Bro. General Montaudon, an officer high in command in the Versailles army, is spoken of in terms of the highest praise with regard to the Masonic flag of truce, which he forwarded to headquarters without delay, even lending his own carriage for that purpose."

Apropos of this subject, and of Freemasonry in Catholic countries, Bro. Henry Jeffs, of Gloucester, thus writes to a local journal:

"I enjoyed the friendship of the late Rev. Canon Calderbank, of this city, and had a long evening with him on the night of his lamented decease. Some of the more pleasant hours of my life have been spent in the society of Catholic priests, and six years ago, when on a holiday visit to Paris, I saw and conversed with ecclesiastics of that church. A facetious Catholic invariably introduced me as 'a heretic and a Freemason.' Avoiding religious discussion, indeed, which was never courted on either side, I found other and congenial subjects on which to agree. My Arminian belief was never in danger from such an intercourse, nor do I give credence to that oft-repeated allegation against Catholics that they 'will compass land and sea to make one proselyte.' I had to submit certainly to some very hard hits against Freemasonry, and to quotations from the famous Allocution of the present Pope that the Craft is 'leagued together for the common ruin of religion and of human society.' In France it was said that the Catholic priesthood had not greater enemies than were to be found in the ranks of Freemasons. I could only reply that whatever the Craft might be in other countries, in England we knew naught of disaffection to legally constituted authority, and that the Catholics had not greater friends than were to be found amongst English Freemasons, who taught and practiced toleration to the fullest extent of all religious denominations, so long as they did not run counter to the law of the realm.

"That it was upon record that when, but a few years ago, a nobleman, at a Masonic assembly in Ireland, took advantage of his position as president of the meeting to speak against the Catholic hierarchy, Masonic law and usage were pleaded against him, and the Grand Lodge in which he held office required him to make a public retraction.

"It was alike honorable to the Craft and to his Order that the noble delinquent candidly acknowledged the error of his ways, and promised not to repeat the offense. In my interviews with Catholic priests it was known that I originated the memorial to Bishop Hooper in this city, who suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Catholic Church, and that I was instrumental in the Freemasons laying the foundation-stone of the monument. I could but affirm that the Freemasons did not do this from any hostile feeling to the Roman Catholics, but as a protest against the cruelties of bygone times, and to testify in these days of toleration, in the words of Goethe, that 'kindness is the golden chain by which the world is held together;' directing to persecute and condemn no one, but to love, succor, console and improve all.

"Protestants have their 'Book of Martyrs,' but if the history of nations were impartially written all religions would be found blameable. 'Let him that is without offense cast the first stone.' Mary persecuted and put to death Protestants. Elizabeth was an intolerant bigot, and, as a learned historian, with no Catholic leaning, says, 'malignant' in her persecution of her Catholic and Protestant subjects. The barbarities practiced during the reign of the Virgin Queen were a dishonor to our common humanity. But I have been very recently reminded of old arguments adduced by me in defense of the Craft to which I belong, and I have been good-humoredly taunted with the action taken by the Freemasons in Paris, and of the assertion of Citoyen Alix, a member of the Commune, that 'The Commune of Paris puts in practice that which Freemasonry has long since affirmed, that the reconstruction of the temple was certainly of this epoch the reorganization of labor.' To this bathos I appeal to Masonic law, which inculcates 'A Mason is a peaceable subject to the civil powers wherever he resides or works, and is never to be concerned in plots and conspiracies against the peace and welfare of the nation. He is cheerfully to conform to every lawful authority, to uphold on every occasion the interests of the community, and zealously promote the prosperity of his own country.' Masonry has ever flourished in times of peace, and been always injured by war, bloodshed and confusion.

"The Paris Freemasons have covered themselves with obloquy and ridicule, and are without the pale of the Order. But the murky cloud which has settled upon Freemasonry in Paris is not without its silver lining. Bro. H. Hamel, of the lodge 'L'Avenir' protests in the 'Siecle' against 'individuals arrogating to themselves the right of committing a corporation, which numbers adherents in both camps, to acts which, not being purely those of fraternal conciliation, are unfaithful to the primordial law of Masonry.'

"But what concerns me is the averment that Paris Freemasons, who threw in their lot with the insurgents have been influenced by a latent feeling of opposition to the Roman Catholic priesthood. I am afraid this can be verified. Still they stand condemned, as Bro. H. Hamel testifies.

"The great element in Freemasonry, and which has ever recommended it to my warmest sympathies, is (Communistic let it be) that we labor to bring together upon a common platform of social intercourse men of all religious creeds, and of varied shades of political opinion, to work in the cause of charity and for the alleviation of human suffering. 'Thus Masonry is the centre of union between good men and true, and the happy means of conciliating friendship amongst those who must otherwise have remained at a perpetual distance."—Magazine, London.

Legislation Regarding Non-Affiliation.

We are continually in receipt of letters from almost every section of the United States, requesting information regarding the status of non-affiliated Masons. In order to convey as concisely as possible the desired light on this, one of the most important subjects, if, indeed, not the most important which has attracted, within the past twenty years, the attention of the various American Grand Lodges, we comply with the requests made of us.

In order that our querists may, at a glance, learn the action which has been taken by various Grand Lodges on this subject, and which, we think, will answer their several purposes, we present the following summary:

The Grand Lodge of Maine directs its subordinates, in all cases of application for demits, to suffer no member to withdraw, unless to form a new lodge or to join another.

The Grand Lodge of Vermont declares that all non-affiliated Masons shall be indefinitely suspended, and they and their families be excluded from all the privileges and benefits of the institution.

Massachusetts deprives every Mason, not a member of some subordinate lodge, from visiting the same lodge, in the place where he resides, more than twice without the permission of the Master or vote of the lodge.

New York, in its constitution, provides that it being the duty of every Mason to belong to some lodge, and contribute to its funds, therefore, any Mason who does not contribute to the funds, or belong to some lodge, shall not be entitled to visit more than twice while he so continues, or to join in processions, or receive assistance or relief, or Masonic burial.

Pennsylvania declares that no brother made in a lodge beyond its jurisdiction, and having been a resident there for three years without joining a lodge, shall be entitled to Masonic relief, nor shall his family be entitled to apply therefor; and denies to a brother who is not a member of a lodge permission to visit any lodge more than once.

Maryland deprives a Master Mason, not a contributing member of any lodge, of the right to visit the same lodge more than twice, unless he joins some regular lodge.

The District of Columbia directs that no lodge shall, more than once, admit as a visitor, any resident Mason not a member of some lodge; and no resident Mason, non-affiliated more than one year, shall participate in any public procession or ceremony, nor shall any such, nor their widows or orphans, be entitled to any benefit from any lodge—all such non-affiliated Masons being regarded as profanes, not known to the Fraternity in any of its organized forms.

Virginia declares that a non-affiliated Mason shall not be entitled to join in any Masonic procession, or to Masonic burial, or any pecuniary aid from a lodge.

North Carolina forbids a non-affiliated Mason to visit any lodge under its jurisdiction, withholds Masonic burial and relief, and deprives them of the right to assist in any public ceremonies and processions of the Craft.

South Carolina prohibits them from visiting a lodge more than once, without becoming a member of some regular lodge under its jurisdiction, and withholds from them Masonic aid.

Georgia declares that Masons non-affiliated for twelve months shall not be permitted to visit any lodge, nor be entitled to any of the benefits and privileges of a Mason.

Alabama says that a Mason should never be allowed a demit without cause; he has no right to non-affiliate himself; and that none but affiliated Masons shall, in case of death, be buried with Masonic honors, or be entitled to Masonic charity.

Mississippi deprives non-affiliated Masons of all the rights, benefits and privileges of the lodges; that is to say, the right to visit, the right to charitable aid, the right to join in processions and to Masonic burial.

Louisiana divests them of all the right to visit, to assist at any public ceremónies or processions, to Masonic burial, or to receive relief for themselves or families from the charity funds of the Society.

Texas instructs its subordinate lodges not to grant relief to non-affiliated Masons out of the lodge funds, and refuses them the right to visit any lodge more than three times.

Arkansas maintains that they have no right to visit a lodge unless by consent of the same, with or without terms; nor to relief from the lodge; nor to join her local processions; nor to Masonic burial.

Missouri declares that they shall have no claim or right to aid from the Charity funds of the Grand Lodge or its subordinates, nor shall they be permitted to visit a lodge more than twice without the unanimous consent of the members.

Tennessee expresses the opinion of its Grand Lodge, that non-affiliated Masons are not entitled, as a matter of right, to the charities of the Society.

Kentucky leaves it discretionary with its lodges to bury a non-affiliated Mason, irrespective of his otherwise good standing, or of his request.

Ohio recommends its lodges to discountenance, by all proper means, the practice of non-affiliation, and to withhold from non-affiliated Masons the right of visiting, of participating in the public exercises and of Masonic interment.

Indiana directs that they shall not be permitted to visit any lodge under its jurisdiction, be entitled to Masonic burial, to receive relief from the charity funds, or to be allowed to assist at any public ceremonies.

Illinois declares that non-affiliated Master Masons, who refuse to contribute to the support of the Institution, unless prevented by disability by so doing, forfeit all the rights, privileges and benefits of the Society.

Michigan refuses to a Mason residing within the jurisdiction of a lodge the right to visit the same more than three times without becoming a member thereof, except sojourners, unless they be members in good standing of some lodge in its jurisdiction.

Wisconsin pronounces all non-affiliated Masons as not entitled to any of the benefits of Masonry, and deprives them of its privileges, nor have any of their families claims for pecuniary aid.

Iowa orders that Masons not of any lodge and residing in the jurisdiction of its Grand Lodge shall pay into the Grand Treasury the same dues as are required from affiliated Masons, and for non-compliance shall not be permitted to visit any lodge in the jurisdiction more than once.

Minnesota prohibits all non-affiliated and non-contributing Masons from receiving Masonic aid, and deprives them of the privileges of the Craft, permitting them, however, to visit a lodge not more than three times.

California deprves all non-affiliates, who do not contribute, of all the rights, privileges and benefits of the Fraternity.

Oregon makes non-affiliates pay dues, or debars them of all Masonic privileges.—Tisdall, in Pomeroy's Democrat.

That Masonry should have been assailed—in the suppression of the Eleusynians by Theodosius the great—in the attempt to crush the sect of the Essenes by the Romans—have been banished by the Czar—have been anathematised by the Pontiff, and hated by every form of despotism, is natural. Abundant cause, if searched for, may be found for the hostility to despotism, and for the eternal dread and aversion that exists between our institutions and all governments hostile to the rights of man. The Order has been assailed from the press, the pulpit, and the legislative hall. The passions of the multitude have been roused against us—the ideas of the weak, and the fears of the timid have been appealed to—the professional man's sense of dependence on the popular will has been appealed to—the business man's love of money, and the huckster in the political schemes, has each had his chance of preferment placed in jeopardy. Many hearts have failed for very fear, and many have turned from us weary of the load of public revilings, and too feeble to aid in stemming the torrent of the rabble curse.

Shepherds have warned their flocks to beware of committing the sin of belonging to one of those secret societies—whose efforts in the good cause have often aided to prepare members for their churches, and have in more than one instance, disciplined graceless renegades whom they, through fear, have left unwhipped.

Politicians once seized upon a popular frenzy, and used it against the Order as an instrument of personal ambition. The pensioned scribbler re-nibbed his quill, which was worn in dissemination of his grovelling spite—the vindictive whetted his knife—the dunce scoffed—the hypocrite denounced it as immoral—the demagogue as dangerous to the liberties of his dear people—all, all made ready for war. But alas! for the success of the endeavors of these doughty champions for the exposition of error, Masonry lives.

But it has been often urged on the notice of Masons by our adversaries, that Masonry inculcates morality to the exclusion of piety. This in the onset is denied, but a bare denial is not sufficient—and if it were so, is not morality better than nothing? or better than a positive influence which is demoralizing in its character? I have seen a community which has been shocked even to a holy horror, at the contemplation of the Masonic Fraternity existing in an organized form in its midst; yet quietly reposing under the shade of that deadly, poisonous Upas of intemperance, spreading its innumerable branches far and wide, without an effort to subdue or eradiate the legalized evil, and with scarcely a sigh for its besotted victims.

But Masonic morality is the question—what is it? The quality of an action as estimated by a standard of right and wrong. Different rules of morality exist and may be so framed as to admit of the practice of positive immorality; for the moral code of an atheist may not be far from perjury.

Then if doubts of the application of the rule exist, it is best for us in the start to acknowledge that the foundation of our code of morals is pure and good, or we must not look for purity in what it governs. We cannot gather figs of thistles—and to what shall we refer as the source of our morality? Holy Writ. And as he who has no religion or system of theology can have no consistent morality, so he who professes a religion essentially wrong, must fall in gross errors in morals. If then religion is essential to Masonry, it may be asked, is Masonry religion? It is answered that Masonry has a theology which is essential to the perfection of her code of morals. Masonry is no partisan of any sect but when speaking of its religion—we mean its great principles, its foundations—beams—pillars of its system.

Atheism and Polytheism have no place in our system, presuming that all organizations of theology refer to the Word of God as their basis. We denounce no doctrines as heretical, but those which have practical tendencies of a vicious or corrupting character, and as doctrines of this cast can have no foundation in Divine truth, our denunciations are consistent with our profession.

Morality is judged by moral actions, and these actions must exist with reference to a right rule of action. The precepts of the Bible may be strictly enforced in the moral inculcations of the Order, but its minute details of doctrine are left to the private interpretation of each member. And while she questions none on their private opinions, she denies admission to a share in her mysteries to all who deny her God.

And if concession is made thus far (and what good Mason does not?) what more can the most pious sectarian, or stickler for orthodoxy do to prove his piety. To neglect a due and becoming reverence for the name of Deity, loosens the bands of the social compact which rests upon a mutual pledge of faith. Whatever may be the opinions of others, Masons must know that serious moral mischiefs are the result of practical profanity.

Let Masons properly understand and follow their duties, and in the sublimity of our doctrines and the purity of our morals, God will be honored. Thus he will be a good man in the world—and we have strong reason to hope he will be a good man at home—for to fill his share of duty in guarding the shrine of his household gods, he must cultivate the social virtues.

My brethren, look to your duty—there is much more blame attached to an institution which professes to do good and fails, than to one which openly follows evil. We have remarked how Freemasonry has been assailed and villified—how it has survived all storms. Now let me call your minds to the fact that it is not from without but from within that we dread the most mischief. The scourgings of the Russian Czar, or the persecutions of the despot never closed so many lodges, as the unholy war against Masonry in 1826, in our own blessed land of freedom. And as the Institution has suffered the severest blow in our country—blessed with so much light—whose masses are farthest removed from a state of serfish continental degradation, so in individual recreancy the time-honored fabric suffers the most grievous wounds in the house of its friends.—Geo. Davis, Episcopalian, 1848.

The Five-Pointed Star.

There are many explanations of this, beside that given in the monitor. The following is one of them, which is worthy the attention of the studious. It is extracted from the publications of the Camden Society, of England, for 1839:

"PETALPHA PENTACLE.—This mark was heretofore used as the sign of the cross is now, sc. at the beginning of letters or bookes, for good luck's sake; and the women amongst the Jewes (Dr. Ralph Bathurst tells me) did make this mark on the children's chrysome cloathes. Mr. Wyld Clark, merchant (factor) at Santo Crux, in Barbarie, tells me that the Jewes in Barbarie have this mark on their trunkes in nailes, and on their cupboards and tables. So in France, &c., and heretofore in England, were built crosses for good luck; and my old friend, Mr. Lancelot Morehouse, rector of Portwood, Wilts, was wont to make this mark at the top of his missive letters, as the Roman Catholiques do the cross, and he told me (1660) that the Greek Christians did so."

"The figure of the three triangles intersected (adds W. Kynett), and made of five lines, is called the Pentangle of Solomon, and when it is delineated in the body of a man it is pretended to touch and point out the five places wherein our Saviour was wounded. And therefore there was the old superstitious conceit, that the figure was a fuge demonium—that the devils were afraid of it."

NOTE.

The "Pentaculum Solomonis," the "Driden-fus" of the German magical writers, and which is regarded at the present day by the superstitious in Germany as an effective hindrance to the power of witches, is said to have its origin in the secret doctrines of the Pythagoreans, and to have been from thence transferred to the mysteries of the Druids. Be this as it may, it is certain it was looked upon in the middle ages as a sign of immense power; and at the present moment the magical Pentalpha, in the western window of the southern aisle of Westminster Abbey, is one of the emblems which still exist, and tell to the initiated that the black monks who once chanted in the choir were deeply read in occult science. We are not, therefore, surprised to find it treated of in Dr. Carl Grabner's "Bilder der Wunderkunst und des Aberglaubens," 8vo., Weimar, 1837, p. 86, or that Goethe should have made Faust avail himself of its influence—

"Fur solche halbe Hollenbrat, Ist Salomonis Schlussel gut;"

but it would scarcely be expected that a belief in its influence should be gravely avowed in a work published at the commencement of the nineteenth century.

"It is always necessary to have this Pentacle in readiness to bind with in case the spirits should refuse to be obedient, as they can have no power over the Exorcist whileprovided with and fortified by the Pentacle, the virtue of the holy names therein written presiding with wonderful influence over the spirits. It should be made in the day and hour of mercury, upon parchment made of a kid's skin, or virgin, or pure, clean, white paper, and the figures and letters wrote in pure gold, and ought to be consecrated and sprinkled (as before often spoken) with holy water."—Barret's "Magus," book 2, part iii, (109).

Similar to this, and by many confounded with it, is the "Seal of Solomon," which consists of a six-pointed star, formed of two triangles interlaced, and which was sometimes held to be even more potent than the Pentalpha. Passing down street one day, the writer noticed one of these figures, made of tin, holding in its center the representation of a beer-glass, and doing duty a the sign of a beer-shop. It "attracted his eye's sad devotion," and he could not help wondering to what chain of circumstances it owed its situation. Subsequent study taught him that in Germany, and especially in Bavaria, this figure was deemed a sovereign defense against evil spirits. This sign was, therefore, used as a charm to protect against storms, and especially against fires (being thus a cheap kind of insurance). Breweries being particularly exposed to fire, were so often protected by this that it became, in time, the sign of a brewery, and so of a beershop! And thus the mighty spell with which Solomon of old compelled the genii, and piled up "that splendid model of excellence which immortalized his name," in these degenerate times, having crossed the sea, had sunk to the ignoble position of a pot-house sign. Many a good man has fallen equally low by keeping unworthy company.—Evergreen.

Stick to the Letter.

In every respect on points of Masonic law, we believe in sticking to the letter, both in spirit and intent. We do not believe it is right for individuals to advance theories and arguments which are intended to evade established laws, simply because they do not meet their particular views. Nor do we believe that any one has the right to render the reading of any point of the ancient landmarks different from what it really is in spirit and intent, on the ground of moral right—or in other words to give as law modified views of such landmarks.

To be made a Mason, says ancient law, a man must be perfect in body and limbs. Now, we believe in sticking to this law in letter and spirit; and we don't see how any Mason can view it in any other light. We don't believe, as does the Grand Master of Rhode Island, that putting a wooden foot on a man who has lost a limb, makes him perfect in true meaning or intent. It is merely bridging over a gap that could not be crossed in any other manner, and exhibits a pernicious and growing tendency to break down our ancient barriers.

Taking the same view as we do, the committee on foreign correspondence of the Grand Lodge of New Jersey, in reviewing the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Iowa, says:

"Answering for ourselves, we frankly confess that, upon Masonic questions, it is one of our failings to believe in the 'old fashioned sticking to the letter,' whether it kills or makes alive. Much of the irregularities in modern Masonry, arise, as we think, from a disposition to disregard the letter, and make every man the judge for himself of the spirit of the law. We suppose it was this regard for the spirit, in opposition to the letter which induced one of the Grand Lodges of the United States to sanction the initiation of a blind man, the Grand Lodge of France to initiate a deaf mute, the Grand Lodge of Prussia to declare that no Jew should be made a Mason, the Grand Master of Rhode Island to justify, recently, in an elaborate address, the initiation of a man with one leg, the Grand Lodge of France again, seriously to discuss the proposition to initiate women."

But where we find a few that seek to find loop-holes to evade the spirit of the law, we find that a large majority of the Fraternity believe in sticking to the letter and look upon these innovators with distrust. Among this large majority we find the Grand Master of Iowa, whose decision although brief, we would like the Grand Master of Rhode Island, as well as some others, to treasure up in the archives of Masonry. On this question, to which we have particularly alluded to, he decides, and his decision was sustained by the Grand Lodge of that State, at its recent annual communication, "that the loss of a foot is such a disqualification as the Grand Master cannot remove. An artificial limb will not obviate the objection."

Not only on this subject alone do we find this growing tendency to disregard the ancient landmarks, but on many others. Many are too apt to suit their views for the occasion, perhaps thoughtlessly, yet no less injurious to the welfare of the Fraternity. So let us stick to the letter of the law, whatever it may be, and we shall have nothing to regret.—Landmark.

THE ceremonies of the degree of Royal Master are very brief and simple—briefer and simpler, indeed, than those of any of the preceding degrees. Symbolically, however, they present one great idea—the truly Masonic one—of the laborer seeking for his reward. Throughout all the symbolism of Masonry, from the first to the last degree, the search for the WORD has been considered but as a symbolic expression for the search after Truth. The attainment of this Truth has always been acknowledged to be the great object and design of all Masonic labor. Divine Truth—the knowledge of God—concealed in the oldest Cabalistic doctrine, under the symbol of his Ineffable Name, and typified in the Masonic system, under the mystical expression of the True Word, is the reward proposed to every Mason who has faithfully wrought his task. It is, in short, the "Master's wages."

Now all this is beautifully symbolized in the degree of Royal Master. The reward had been promised, and the time had now come, as Adoniram thought, when the promise was to be redeemed and the true word—divine Truth—was to be imparted. Hence, in the person of Adoniram, or the Royal Master, we see symbolized the speculative Mason, who, having labored to complete his spiritual temple, comes to the Divine Master that he may receive his reward, and that his labor may be consummated by the acquisition of Truth. But the temple that he has been building is the temple of life; that first temple which must be destroyed by death, that the second temple of the future life may be built on its foundations. And in this first temple the truth cannot be found. We must be content with its substitute.—Mackey.

MASONIC CEREMONIES.—It is a noteworthy fact that the attempts to crush the society of Freemasons have always produced a reaction in its favor. We have noticed that the services of Masonic dignitaries have been often called for on public occasions since Blanchard commenced his crusade thereupon. The last that we notice is the laying of the foundation of an immense bridge over Grand River in the British province of Ontario. The grand officers of the Grand Lodge of that jurisdiction were present and officiated on the occasion, and a large concourse of people attended to witness the ceremonies, which were grand and imposing.—Peoria Democrat.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

IS PUBLISHED BETWEEN THE FIRST AND FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH.

Price per year, - - - - - - $1.25.

THE TROWEL is the oldest Masonic journal in America now published in its present form, and is again presented to the Masonic Fraternity for renewed and generous support.

It has ever been the organ of the masonic people and their families—such it will remain. It has been the friend and advocate of law, order, morality, intelligence—of improvement, progress and toleration, and will continue so to be.

It is now printed on new type, superior paper, and will give the latest Masonic tidings.

"The Greatest of these is Charity."

Such was the declaration of one whose eloquent sayings, whose profound knowledge of human nature, and whose acquaintance with Hebrew lore and Jewish law were never excelled. Who ever could delineate faith like Paul? who better elucidate the hidden springs of hope than he? And yet, Charity, which as then written, means love, outranked both Faith and Hope, for faith, based upon hope, is "the evidence of things not seen," the main-spring to action, and the direct incentive to that love which embraces every object which God has created under the dominion of man, and liable to need pity, commisseration or relief. The same model writer also tells us that "without faith it is impossible to please God," and that "faith works by love." Hence no faith is acceptable but that which does work by love or charity.

Laws are necessary; there must be defined rules of action, and human dependence compels reciprocal benefits and protection. It is indeed lamentable that these laws are broken, and that men forget the obligations they owe to each other. Nor can those appointed to enforce the laws, be excused for non-fulfillment of their sworn duties. They may be gentle, humane and well-bred, but their duty must be done.

But all wrongs do not come under the eye of human enactments, nor do all sins require the notice of human law.

But all wrongs and all sins are a violation of law, and offenses, immediate or remote, against society. The inducements—the provocations—the temptations and weaknesses which lead to crimes, sins and wrongs, are among the things unknown, or if known, not fully understood.

It is the mission of Masonry to disregard intolerance and attacks upon itself, and to foster the very highest idea of pity for the unfortunate, relief for the distressed, comfort for the mourner, protection for the weak, education and culture for the orphan, and an open hand to him who, having sinned, is ready to repent and do better.

Annual Elections.

The M. W. Grand Master was pleased, in his late able and timely encyclical letter to the Craft, to allude to the necessity of electing and installing officers at the time prescribed in the By-Laws. Most of the Masonic elections in the West, and probably in the United States, are held in December. It is quite desirable that such should be the case, as a matter of general and special convenience; general, because it closes out the old and commences the new year in a business fashion, and at a time when old accounts should be closed, and new ones opened; special, because our Grand Secretaries, especially in Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, and Nebraska, find it necessary to get the new names for correspondence, with reference to the annual grand communications in the autumn following.

One-tenth, perhaps more, of our Illinois lodges elect officers in June. In all these cases, in chapters, councils, and commanderies, as well as in lodges, the Grand Secretary is put to the inconvenience of making up his list twice, accompanied by the uncertainty attending returns, mistakes in entering and in localities. Masonry being a system of order, as well as of morality, it is important that there should be uniformity and order as to the time that elections take place. We know very well that Masonic bodies are the sole and proper judges of their own wants and conveniencies in this particular, and would in nowise infringe upon their rightful prerogatives. But at the same time, we feel assured that our brethren are always ready to consider any candid reasons presented. We therefore hope that our brethren who elect their officers the present month will, immediately thereafter, consider the propriety of changing the time of election to December. Another reason for this change strikes us with much force. It should be the pride of every lodge to be well represented in the Grand Lodge, and to stand well upon its rolls. In organizing committees, the Grand Master desires that not only able men be selected, but that they be the right men in the right place. To do this, he must consult locality, ability, fitness, and disinterestedness. It will be plain to the mental vision of any brother, that Masters elected in June, cannot, for various reasons, be as likely to be selected for important committees as those elected in December. But we will not enlarge.

THE DISTINGUISHED Grand Master of Florida, M. W. Bro. Samuel Pasco, an acquaintance of our Bro. Cyrus Jones, of Towanda Lodge, resides at Monticello, which is said to be the very seat of the magnolia, cactus, roses, oranges, lemons, figs, and the thousands of flowers and fruits of the flowery land, and a fine winter resort for northern invalids. We are glad to reckon the brother among our numerous subscribers in Florida.

Grand Commandery.

The pamphlet of proceedings last November, prepared by Grand Recorder Sir James H. Miles, and printed by Messrs. Horton & Leonard, at 108 & 110 Randolph street, Chicago, is highly creditable every way.

The Grand Commandery closed with 38 subordinates on its roll, and a membership of 2,197; average, 58; gain, 230; average, 6. Apollo Commandery, Chicago, has 336 members; Joliet has 105; Elwood, Springfield, 103; Sycamore, 101; and Chicago, 154. There are three commanderies in Chicago, numbering 518 members, or nearly one-fourth of the whole. John M. Pearson, Godfrey, is Grand Commander; W. M. Egan, Deputy; Daniel Dustin, G. Gen.; J. A. Hawley, G. C. Gen.; Rev. C. A. Gilbert, Gr. Prel.; R. H. Foss, Gr. Treas.; James H. Miles, Dr. 5,984, Chicago, Grand Recorder; H. W. Hubbard, G. S. W.; L. H. Jorgensen, G. St. B.; A. W. Blakesley, G. Sw. B.; John F. Nash, G. Warder; L. K. Osborn, G. C. G.; Sirs J. H. Miles, H. G. Reynolds, J. E. Forrester, Committee on For. Cor.; Sirs C. E. Munger, J. R. Gorin, V. L. Hurlbut, Committee on Jurisprudence. Sir C. H. Brower, Inspector General.

The Northern Pacific Railroad

Commences at Duluth, the western terminus of Lake Superior, and thence traverses the northern portions of the State of Minnesota and of the immense Territories of Dakotah, Montana, Idaho and Washington to a point named Terminus, on Puget Sound, with a branch commencing east of the Rocky Mountains, and terminating at Portland, Oregon; other branches extend from St. Paul to tap it northwestwardly and thence north to Pembina, with a probability of being extended to Manitoba; also from Portland, Oregon, via Olympia, Seattle and Terminus to Bellingham, on Puget Sound, latitude 49. This country is represented to be quite different and more desirable than that traversed by the Union Pacific. Four hundred and thirteen miles of road are in operation, and work is progressing rapidly at each end and on all the branches.

Grand Commandery Wisconsin.

The proceedings are on nice paper, the mechanical execution is neat, the arrangement perfect, and the whole complete. M. E. Sir A. V. H. Carpenter, Gen. R. R. Pass. Agent from Milwaukee to St. Paul, is Grand Commander, and E. Sir Wm. T. Palmer is Grand Recorder. Ten commanderies; 625 members; average, 62.

The Committee on Correspondence makes the usual hit at Illinois of fast traveling. Let us analyze this: Illinois has an average of 58 to each commandery, while Wisconsin has 62. It is well to count before criticising. Our Eastern Grand Lodges tried that on Illinois, but they are wonderfully reticent of late. Somehow they have found out that the growth of the West takes largely from them. The reflection is not pleasing.

Giles M. Hillyer,

Died April 22, at Vicksburg, Miss., aged 53 years. None in Mississippi, and few in the United States have filled so large a space in Masonic affairs. In the State of his adoption, he served with marked distinction as Grand Master, Grand High Priest, and Grand Puissant, and he had held important stations in our National bodies. He was eloquent and successful as a lawyer, brilliant as an editor, a warm-hearted friend, a fine Masonic scholar and jurist, and is lamented by all who knew him.

Be Humane.

Several gentlemen have organized the "Illinois Humane Society" under the act "For the prevention of cruelty to animals." It is certainly good policy to employ considerate men to manage animals. In other words, men who are unable to govern themselves are unfit to govern brutes, and, as a rule, the man or woman who uses force rather than kindness and reason in the management of animals, will act upon the same principle in governing human beings. The office of the company is at 43 Madison street, Chicago. Samuel T. Atwater is Treasurer and Wm. H. Sharp, Secretary.

Ancient and Accepted Rite.

Ill. Bro. Vincent L. Hurlbut, M. D., 33°, Deputy for Illinois, has issued his notices for a Council of Deliberation of the Bodies of the Scottish Rite in Illinois, to be held at Masonic Temple in the city of Chicago, on Thursday the 22d day of June instant, at 10 o'clock A. M. We hope to be present, and shall be glad to see a full representation. And we rejoice to know that so able and accomplished an Inspector General as Past Grand Commander Hurlbut, has charge of the interests of Scottish Masonry in Illinois. May we be long without a change.

Change of Firm.

We regret, greatly, that our friend and brother, Geo. H. Laflin, of the firm of Laflin, Butler & Co., has seen fit to retire from the firm. May good fortune attend him in any business in which he may engage, for he is a prince among men, and "a jolly, good fellow." The new firm is Messrs. J. W. Butler & Co., and we are glad to welcome into the firm our old friend James, and the urbane salesman, Mr. Tyler.

Traveler.

We give place this month to an able communication from "Traveler," and concur in all he says, barring the TROWEL, except that part relating to Encyclical Letters; we think they have done much good; we are as obnoxious to the criticisms of "Traveler" as any one; perhaps more. Yet, the matter of general publicity demands some thought, and we are not sure but our brother has the "hang of the barn" in that particular.

THE remains of Governor Bissell and and wife were removed from Hutchinson Cemetery, in this city, to Oak Ridge Cemetery, on the 31st of May, under the direction of the State authorities. Sir T. C. Smith had charge of the transfer; Dr. Wolgamuth was Chief Marshal; Elwood Commandery performed escort duty, and Governor Palmer delivered the address.

HAMMERED.—R. W. Bro. F. G. Tisdal, editor Masonic Department Pomeroy's Democrat, on behalf of Americus Lodge No. 535, New York, in the presence of many distinguished brethren, May 25, hammered at M. W. Bro. John H. Anthon, Grand Master, with an ivory gavel, banded with gold.

Bro. Sharon Tyndale.

The brethren of St. Clair Lodge No. 24 buried the remains of our deceased brother with Masonic honors, and passed resolutions of sympathy with the relatives, and setting forth his virtues in full. His sad end is yet, so far as the public eye is concerned, involved in profound mystery.

THE Grand Lodges of New York and Iowa meet on the 6th inst., the latter at Davenport; the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin convenes in Milwaukee, June 13. We hope to be present at Davenport and Milwaukee.

WE were favored with a call in March from the M. W. Grand Master, D. C. Cregier, Esq., which should have been noticed in the May number.

R. W. Bro. J. A. Hawley, Deputy Grand Master, favored us with a call last week.

M. W. BRO. J. W. SIMONS.—We, and all who know him, will be rejoiced to learn that our M. W. Bro. is fast recovering from the severe illness which gave so much reason to fear a fatal result.

A VERY large proportion of our old subscribers of the 22d of February are not yet returned to us. We will be highly grateful to any brother who will aid us in this matter,

The Saint Louis Ladies' Magazine,

No. 2, Vol. I., is on our table and is a new candidate for the favor of women. It is published at 407 N. Fourth street, St. Louis, by Margaret L. Johnson, who is both Editor and Proprietor, at $3.00 per annum.

Its engravings all through its sixty pages are tasty, and the fashion plate is recherche. The Music Department follows the fashion plate, and the whole is filled with story, poetic, gardening, home, work, fairy, fashion and business divisions. The paper is elegant, and the printer has left nothing undone. We shall refer it to our better half and submit her opinion in our next.

Literary Notices.

The Household for April and May, published by Geo. E. Crowell & Co., at Brattleboro, Vt., at $1,00 per annum, is upon our table. It is a 24-page sheet, considerably larger in page than THE TROWEL. It has practical articles upon nearly every subject interesting to housekeepers, indoors and out, and the construction of houses and out-buildings, all essential to the wants and means of a family, is a leading feature. The general and particular wants of a family are wisely considered, and both mental and physical ailments receive proper treatment. It is withal, a nice paper, fit to be seen anywhere.

Rounds' Printers' Cabinet.—This publication is issued quarterly by Messrs. Rounds & Kane, for the benefit of the printing and binding fraternities. It is a nice sheet of 12 pages, and, like The Press, is hard to excel. Its specimen pages are gems, and the mechanical execution and general array are alike to the credit of a genuine printer and liberal dealer like Bro. Rounds. This firm can fit up a good printing office in a day, and a $500 to $3,000 bindery on a week's notice.

THE MASONIC MIRROR and Pythian Herald, an eight-page sheet, is published at St. Johns, N. B. Monthly, at fifty cents yearly, by Robert Parkin. The position of the Craftsmen in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia demands an organ, but we question the policy or good taste of being the organ of two distinct Fraternities. If such could be the case with propriety, then we would hoist the flag of the I. O. O. F., for there is no real antagonism between the two societies; but it is evident to any reflecting mind, that collision or distraction would follow.

IN our July issue we hope to be able to serve up our usual quantum of jurisprudence, and to resume our accounts of our travels.

Minnesota Commercial Gazette,

Filled with a Monthly Summary of Minnesota affairs. Agricultural, Manufacturing, Educational, openings for business, Railroads, New Settlements, and everything that a Minnesotain will wish to preserve, and send abroad; and any one looking to Minnesota for a home, or for investment will wish to know. Circulation 20,000—rapidly increasing. Advertisements 20 cents a line of 8 words. Sent from May till Jan, 1872, eight months, for 20 cents, or two copies for 30 cents, or eight copies to one address, $1—the cost of presswork and paper. Everybody wants it. Address as above, Box 1668, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

A LETTER from Bro. Galloway, of Menominie, Wis., has a fine engraving of the Mills of Knapp, Stout & Co., at that place, with the town in the rear. It is a beautiful engraving.

Masonic Jurisprudence.

A brother writing us from Clinton P. O., South Carolina, asks the following:

1. "Can a brother Mason be tried in the lodge of which he is a member, for an offense against the criminal statutes of the country," after said brother has been tried and acquitted by the civil courts? Or should a brother be brought to trial for the crime, say of murder, under the above circumstances?

2. Which is the correct orthography, demit, or dimit?

ANSWERS.

1. "Most assuredly he can. The acquittal in the civil court may have been caused by some technicality, or legal quibble, apparent to all; but if the verdict of acquittal be not based on the most irrefragible proofs of innocence, the Masonic Society would be doing injustice to its own good name, did it not proceed against the offender, just as if no such verdict had been rendered.

2. Dimit is the proper word. It is derived from the Latin "dimmitto," to allow to go; to send away. One of the oldest and most beautiful Hymns of the Catholic Church is the "Nunc dimmittis." Anglice, "Now let us depart."

Demit has no such meaning. It is derived from the Latin "demitto," to depress, to let fall, to humble, &c.

Demission means diminution of dignity; dimission, leave to depart: dismission.—Tisdall, Pomeroy's Democrat.

Formation of Grand Councils.

The following history of the organization of the several Grand Councils, in the United States, we find in the Masonic Token, condensed from Comp. Drummond's report on Foreign Correspondence to the Grand Council of Maine:

The Grand Council of Alabama was formed by twenty-seven R. & S. Masters who received their degrees under the authority of the Southern Supreme Council, 32°, of the A. & A. Rite; that of Arkansas by councils chartered directly by that Supreme Council; those of Florida, Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina in the same manner; those of Kentucky and Ohio, by councils chartered by the agent of that Supreme Council and its authority; that of Mississippi by councils chartered by the Grand Council of Princes Jerusalem, of that State, under the same authority; those of Connecticut, Vermont and Virginia by councils founded by Jeremy L. Cross or under his authority; that of California by two councils chartered by the Grand Council of Alabama, one chartered by that of Tennessee and one by that of Texas; that of Illinois by councils chartered by the Grand Council of Kentucky; that of Indiana by two councils chartered by Ohio and one by Kentucky; those of Iowa and Missouri, by councils chartered by Illinois; that of Kansas by councils chartered by Missouri; that of Louisiana by one council chartered by the Southern Supreme Council, one by Kentucky and two by Alabama; that of Maine by councils chartered by Massachusetts; that of Massachusetts by self-formed councils, though perhaps some of them took charters from New York, and some from Cross; that of Michigan by councils chartered by Connecticut; that of New Hampshire by one self-formed council, one chartered by an old Grand Council, and one chartered by Connecticut; that of New Brunswick by councils chartered by Maine; that of New Jersey by one council chartered by New York and two by Pennsylvania; that of New York by a union of two Grand Councils, one formed by Joseph Ceneau, and the other formed by councils chartered by Connecticut; that of Pennsylvania originally by two councils located in that State, and one located in Texas; that of Rhode Island by one council founded by Cross, one by Massachusetts, and one by Connecticut; that of Tennessee by two councils chartered by Kentucky, one by Alabama, and two under the authority of the Southern Supreme Council; that of Texas by one council chartered by New York, one by Kentucky, and one by Alabama; and that of Wisconsin by councils chartered by Ohio.

It will be perceived from this statement that none of the following Grand Councils, or their subordinates, viz: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Wisconsin derived their origin in any part, directly or indirectly from Jeremy L. Cross. To the nineteen of these now in existence, Pennsylvania should probably be added.—Freemason, St. Louis.

"Expulsion for Non-Payment of Dues" Again.

In our April number we reviewed briefly a law of the Grand Council of Indiana, under this head, and there stated that the expulsion of a member by a majority vote for non-payment of dues, and compelling a unanimous vote before restoration, as a burning shame upon Masonic jurisdiction, to which the Masonic Advocate at Indianapolis demurs as follows:

"The grand discovery made by Bro. Gouley, that the Masonic laws of Indiana 'expels a Mason for non-payment of dues,' will be a surprise to the Masons of this jurisdiction. We know of no such law. Will Bro. Gouley inform us where it is to be found? The Masonic law of this State provides that no Mason can be reprimanded, suspended, or expelled for any cause whatever, except upon written charges and specifications and a fair trial. The nature of the punishment that shall be inflicted upon a brother who has been found guilty of unmasonic conduct is left to the judgment of those who are most familar with all the circumstances attending the case. We have never heard of any Masons in this jurisdiction being expelled for non-payment of dues alone, although we have heard of cases where we thought such a penalty would not have been too severe. We can see but little difference between expulsion and indefinite suspension, as both place the individual in the same relation to the Craft."

We regret to have to act as promptor to M.˙. W.˙. Bro. Rice, the editor, relative to his own laws, but will refer him to the amendment of Rule 190, Proceedings of 1869, pages 16–17, of that State, as follows:

Resolved, 1. That the payment of all dues, for the non-payment of which a member may have been suspended or expelled; or a vote of the majority of the members present of the Council suspending or expelling a member for any other cause, shall restore the member to all the rights and privileges of a non-affiliated Mason; but in no case whatever shall a suspended or expelled member be restored to membership without the unanimous vote of all the members present.

Resolved, 2. That a motion to restore a suspended or expelled member shall be made at a stated meeting of the Council, and lie over until the next stated meeting, when it shall be acted on.

The italics are ours, and we challenge any intelligent reader to make anything out of that amendment, except what we said, viz: that a member may be expelled by a majority vote, for non-payment of dues, and further that he cannot be restored to membership except by unanimous vote. While we seldom criticise the language of laws of sister jurisdictions, yet Bro. Rice will agree with us, we think, when we say that the phraseology of that amendment is the best specimen of ambiguity we have ever seen, yet no conscientious Grand Puissant could put any other construction on it than we have, and execute the law as it stands.

We fully agree with him that it should require a unanimous vote to restore to membership after expulsion, but who, we ask, would justify expulsion for non-payment of dues by a majority vote? We leave this to be answered by every fair and candid reader, and hope the Advocate will exercise its good officers in having such a law repealed.

We also agree with him that Indefinite Suspension is only another name for expulsion, and have always opposed its use on that account. The grand bodies of Missouri will not allow that penalty to be inflicted. While we are on this subject and under the head of Indiana, we will also draw Bro. Rice's attention to the following law of his Grand Lodge, on page 114, Proceedings 1870, Article 149 of its Constitution, viz:

149. The payment of all dues for which a member is suspended, or a majority vote of the Lodge inflicting the penalty of suspension or expulsion, for any other cause, shall restore him to the rights and privileges of a non-affiliated Mason; but it shall require a unanimous vote to restore to membership a member who has been indefinitely suspended or expelled for any cause whatever.

This law is more definite than that of the Grand Council, but its effect is the same, and our remarks apply equally to it, except that it is not certain whether under it a member can be expelled for non-payment of dues, but it is clear he can be expelled by a majority.—Freemason, St. Louis.

Orders of Chivalry.

The connection of Freemasonry with chivalry may be interpreted in more than one sense. Even those matter-of-fact thinkers who resolutely deny that any of the present Masonic chivalric degrees are derived, however remotely, from the ancient orders, will admit that an ideal affinity, a kinship of noble aims, unites the modern Masonic "institutions" with the heroic confraternities of the past. To a romantic ear there is a fascination in the very word "knight," and with the adjective "knightly" we are wont to associate everything that is good and true and honorable. To succor the weak, to defend the oppressed, to do battle for the faith, for one's country or one's friends—such was the glorious programme of the knights of old, and more especially of those who devoted themselves to the rescue of the Holy Land from the destroying hands of the infidels. The origin and history of the first great Knightly Order of Palestine—the Templars—are so well known to all readers that it becomes unnecessary to dwell upon the subject here. But one great moral to be gathered from the record must not be forgotten; like the rivulet which swells into the river, like the acorn which expands into the oak, like the mustard seed whose growth overspreads the soil—even so arose those great orders of chivalry from small beginnings to wealth, power and fame. We may, in like manner, safely conclude that Masonry itself was originally, and probably for many years, a pigmy which attracted but little notice, until by degrees it attained its present form, and now rejoices in the exercise of a giant's strength. But to return to the consideration of the chivalric orders. Of these we have in England only two, with their auxiliary or subsidiary degrees, and both are expressly tolerated, if not recognized, by the Articles of Union between the two Grand Lodges in 1813. We mean the Knights of the Temple, with the appendant Order of Malta, and the Knights of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, with the complementary Order of the Holy Sepulchre. As it is our intention to give a full account of these chivalric degrees upon a future occasion, similar to those already given of the grades belonging to the Ancient and Accepted Rite, we do not purpose entering into particulars now; but it may be said that all these orders, so far as Masonry is concerned, are, if not universal, at least peculiarly English in their genius and character. They are not the offspring of the Masonic adventurers of the eighteenth, or earlier part of the nineteenth centuries—they were not hatched in the fertile brains of a Cagliostro, a Schrœder, or a Zinnendorf. The Grand Masters of the Craft, or other eminent brethren holding high office under the Grand Lodge of England, have for many years presided over, or patronized, the mysteries of those orders; and this fact in itself bespeaks for them the kindly feeling and respect of all true Masons.

Chivalry is but the helmet which completes the panoply of the Masonic soldier; without it he is none the less a soldier, but with it he can go forth into the battle of life with greater confidence and animated by a surer hope. The only argument which can be used against the Knightly Orders is that they are essentially Christian in their inception and scope. This is true, and it arises from circumstances which are now inseparably interwoven with the world's history, and which, therefore, cannot be annulled.

All the memories of the past cling to that central idea—the triumph of the cross; and those brethren who now, in a greatly altered state of human affairs, choose to commemorate the deeds of old, must adhere to the pact formerly sealed in blood, amidst the din of arms and the shout of victory. Fortunately we have no sentimental grievances upon this point among the Freemasons of England; no member of the ancient faith of Israel feels himself an outcast because Knights Templar exist, or because the Red Cross banner is being unfurled day after day throughout the length and breadth of the land. We know that many of our friends of the Hebrew race—the true lineage of kings and princes—are good and faithful Masons; we appreciate their worth and honor their principles. Whenever the call of charity is heard, they are ever ready with their contributions, and outside the pale of Masonry, although a lodge bears his name, if we desire to mention a true philanthropist, what name is more universally appreciated than that of Sir Moses Montefiore.

Orders of Chivalry have their advantages, inasmuch as they cultivate and preserve that nice sense of honor, that delicate perception of the true and the beautiful, which is the attribute of all noble minds. While Freemasonry teaches justice, benevolence and good-will, chivalry exhorts us to the practice of self-denial and courtesy in every relation of life.

There can be no doubt that the Masonic Orders of Chivalry now flourishing in England preserve the essential characteristics of the ancient knightly fraternities, and we need not perhaps, pry too archæologically into their precise origin. It is at least certain that several English royal princes, including two who were afterwards kings, took a leading part in the organizations of both the Red Cross and Templar degrees, and as the Constantinian Order has now been so firmly re-established in England, let us hope that the two great bodies of chivalry will forever distinguish themselves amongst Masons by the exercise of those rare but invaluable qualities which ought to be the peculiar characteristics of Christian Knight Masons.—Freemason, (London.)

A SOLEMN and imposing festival called the Purim or the Feast of Lots, celebrated by the Jewish people on the 14th and 15th of the month Adar (corresponding to our month of March), in memory of their deliverance from the conspiracy of Haman by Esther.

These lots were cast in the first month of the year, and gave the twelfth month of the same year for the execution of Haman's design to destroy all the Jews in Persia. Thus the superstition of Haman, in crediting these lots, caused his own ruin, and the preservation of the Jews, who had time to avert this blow, by the influence of Esther. In memory of this deliverance the Jews instituted an annual feast, which they named Pur, (lots), or Purim.

This festival is celebrated with every manner of rejoicing and hilarity, indulging in every kind of rational pleasure and good cheer. On the eve of the feast they give alms liberally to the poor, that they may also enjoy the Feast of Lots. On the evening of Adar 13th, when the feast begins, they assemble in the synagogue, and light the lamps; and as soon as the stars begin to appear they commence to read the Book of Esther. There are five places in the text wherein the reader raises his voice to the highest point. When he comes to the place which mentions the names of the ten sons of Haman he repeats them very quick, without taking breath, to show that those ten persons were destroyed in a moment. Every time the name of Haman is pronounced the whole congregation clap their hands, stamp on the floor with their feet, and cry out "Let his memory perish." A custom prevailed in the early practice of these ceremonies to bring into the synagogue a great stone with the name of Haman written on it, and all the while the Book of Esther is being read, they struck it with other stones, till they had beaten it to pieces.

The next day, early in the morning, they repair to the synagogue, where, after they have read that passage of Exodus (xvii., 8-16) wherein is mentioned the war of Amalek, they again read the Book of Esther, with the same ceremonies as before. After quitting the synagogue, they make good cheer at home, and pass the rest of the day and evening in sports and mirth.

They compel every one to be present at the synagogue—men, women, children and servants; because all shared in the benefits of the deliverance which Esther obtained for them. On this day scholars make presents to their teachers, heads of families to their domestics, the great to those in mean condition. In a word, the whole day and evening is spent in joyfulness, sports and feasting. As it is said in the Book of Esther, ix., 22: "That they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor."—Manual E. S.

"Many of the antediluvian arts were lost at the deluge; and amongst the rest the use of fire, which was not regained for a long period afterwards. Goguet makes this observation, and affirms "that it is a truth attested by the most ancient and most unanimous tradition. The Egyptians, Persians, Phœnicians, Greeks and several other nations, acknowledged that their ancestors were once without the use of fire. The Chinese confess the same of their progenitors. However incredible these facts may appear, yet they are confirmed by what several writers, both ancient and modern, have declared of nations who were their cotemporaries, and in this state of ignorance and barbarity when they knew them. Pomponious Mela, Pliny, Plutarch, and other ancient authors, speak of nations who, at the time they wrote, knew not the use of fire, or had but just learned it. Facts of the same kind are attested by several modern relators. The inhabitants of the Marian islands, which were discovered in 1521, had no idea of fire. Never was astonishment greater than theirs, when they saw it on the descent of Magellan on one of their islands. At first they believed it to be a kind of animal that fixed itself to, and fed upon wood. Some of them, who approached too near, being burnt, the rest were terrified, and durst only look upon it at a distance. They were afraid, they said, of being bit, or lest that dreadful animal should wound them with his violent respiration; for these were the first notions they formed of heat and flame. Such, too, probably were the notions originally of the Greeks. And there is no doubt, for this reason, that there were some nations anciently who eat the flesh of animals quite raw. These facts may enable us to form a judgment of the savage and barbarous state of mankind after the confusion of tongues, and dispersion of families."—Dr. Oliver.

War Certificates.

A Touching Incident.——We are indebted to Bro. Wilson, Master of the Lodge and station hotel keeper at Chenoa, for the following: On the second day of August last a certificate was issued to Reuben Young, (son of D. W. Young) of the Twentieth Regiment, Col. Marsh.

After the battle at Pitsburg, he returned home, and meeting Bro. Wilson, something like the following colloquy ensued:

Wilson. Well Reuben, did you get the certificate I sent you?

Reuben. I did that, and I was glad I had it. After the battle at Pittsburg, I was pnt in the cock-loft of a cabin, among the joists and rafters, not often visited by the surgeons, and every day growing feebler and worse.

Wilson. Well, how did your certificate help you there?

Reuben Why, one morning, when the waiter brought me my breakfast, I pulled out my certificate and told him to hand it to the surgeon; pretty soon the surgeon came, and spoke to me and said, "What do you want, my son?" I told him, "I want to get out of here." So he took me to a house, put me in a good room, and I had every care and comfort I wanted.

On another occasion Reuben was traveling to Fort Henry and gave out by the way. Soon the Major came along, and Reuben asked him if he was a Mason. He answered that he was. The certificate was forthcoming, the boy was soon on the Major's horse, and in due time in camp.

This one case is ample compensation for our 700 certificates.—Trowel, June 1862.

Secret Societies.

But it is said to be inconsistent with the Gospel to hold societies thus secretly guarded. Let Him who "spake as never man spake," speak for Himself—"Unto you," He says, to His disciples, "it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, but unto them without all these things are done in parables." When He stood before the High Priest, and was asked of His doctrine, He replied, "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, and in secret have I said nothing" contrary thereto. This He said of His doctrine and teaching. But the secrets and mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven were another matter. It was only a few hours before He thus spake of His teaching—His doctrines—that He had instituted the great sacramental mystery of His religion, in secret, with His disciples alone. And this sacrament of the last supper was, for some centuries, always a secret mystery, known only to those who by baptism had been initiated; until, alas! the Church began to court the world, and then those sacred mysteries of that heart-rending event were made a public spectacle of,—alas for the Church that it is so!—Rev. E. M. P. Wells.

Comments of the Press.

The Masonic Trowel.—We are pleased to note the fact that this valuable journal is again upon its feet. It will be remembered that the editor and proprietor, H. G. Reynolds, lost everything he had by the fire of February 23d; and the re-establishment of the paper is owing to his indomitable will and energy alone. Although Bro. Reynolds appears to ignore our existence, in that our table has not lately been honored with The Trowel, we would be very uncharitable indeed, did we not wish him success and prosperity in all his undertakings, and in the publication of The Trowel especially. So mote it be.—Woodford Sentinel.

The Trowel.—It will be recollected that a short time since our confrere of The Trowel, M. W. Bro. Harman G. Reynolds, had the misfortune to lose his printing office, library, and worldly goods generally, by fire. We are rejoiced to learn that with true grit he has bent his back to the new burden, and started in the race again. He expected to have the new issue out on the 5th ult., and will doubtless soon fill up the gap caused by his misfortune. Meanwhile there is nothing better than to help those who try to help themselves, wherefore we solicit all who can do so to at least send him the price of one year's subscription to The Trowel, viz. $1.25. Beside the comfortable feeling arising from a good act, every one who takes the paper will more than get his money back in good Masonic and entertaining reading.—N. Y. Dispatch.

The Masonic Trowel—Makes its appearance this week, looking better for having passed through the fiery ordeal. Typographically, it is equal in appearance to any of the most pretentious papers of the older cities.

Mr. Reynolds merits, and we doubt not will receive, the hearty co-operation of the Masonic Fraternity in making The Trowel as useful as it is ornamental—and if they do, he will soon regain all his maierial losses by the fire.—Illinois Atlas.

Out of the Ashes—The Masonic Trowel reaches us bright and new. It has risen from the ashes of the great fire in Springfield of Feb. 22. We congratulate Bro. Reynolds on his success in getting started again. The new Trowel is printed in almost exactly the style of the old one, giving it a familiar, friendly look. We have no doubt the lodges throughout the State will extend to The Trowel a friendly hand, and aid Bro. Reynolds in retrieving the heavy losses sustained by the fire. The terms are only $1.25 per annum, which is certainly cheap enough for such a paper. Subscribe for it.—El Paso Journal.

The May number—number one of the new series—of The Masonic Trowel is before us. It is a real gem, and speaks volumes of praise in behalf of Bro. Reynolds, the editor and publisher, whose zeal and industry is seldom surpassed. It will be remembered that the office of The Trowel, together with the editor's large and valuable library of law, theological, miscellaneous and Masonic books and papers, also those of the Grand Lodge of this State, were totally destroyed on the 23d of February last. Bro. Reynolds has now succeeded in resurrecting The Trowel, and gets it up in the nicest style, from new type, which merits the hearty support of the entire brotherhood. All records of the Order in this State, also any printed matter from anywhere pertaining to Masonry sent to the office of The Trowel will be thankfully received.—Guardian, Olney.

We are pleased to welcome The Trowel again on our table. The terrible fire that destroyed the office has not destroyed the paper, which Phœnix-like rises from the ashes.—Courier.

We have received The Masonic Trowel, a paper published at Springfield, Illinois. It is a handsome sheet and is devoted to literature and Masonry.—New Era, Atlanta, Ga.

The Masonic Trowel.—We perceive that the publication of this journal—the oldest Masonic publication in the State—has been resumed by its conductor, Harman G. Reynolds, Esq., at Springfield. It will be recollected that the office was entirely destroyed by fire on the 22d February last. The many friends of the editor will be glad to learn that he is on his feet again. The Trowel is very neatly printed, and contains a large amount of reading of value to the Craft, besides much of a miscellaneous character. Issued monthly at $1.25 a year. Every Mason in the State would find benefit by taking The Trowel.—Belleville Democrat.

The Trowel Redivivus.—Our friend Reynolds, as will be seen by the Tidings of to-day, has resurrected his Trowel from the ashes. He makes a tip-top Masonic paper, and we wish him entire success.—Tidings.

Welcome The Trowel.—Our M. W. Bro. H. G. Reynolds, P. G. M. of Illinois, and editor and proprietor of The Trowel, published at Springfield, Illinois, it will be remembered, lost his whole establishment by fire on the 22d of February last. Like a phœnix he has risen a new Trowel from the ashes, well filled with Masonic matter. We wish him success.—N. Y. Dispatch.

Important Conversation About Eating.

BY A DOCTOR.——SECOND PAPER.

Doctor, I am glad to meet you again. The conversation on the subject of "eating," which we held a few days since, has greatly increased my desire to make further inquiries.

"I shall be happy to answer them. What particular question have you in mind?"

"What meats are the most healthy?"

"Do you refer to the common meats?"

"I do."

"Mutton first; beef next; fish next; and pork last."

"I have often heard Doctors condemn pork; why is this? Surely many healthy people eat pork."

"I agree with you that many comparatively healthy persons eat pork; but such persons usually toil at out-of-door work, and because of the great strength of their physical constitutions, they can endure even the use of pork. The hog is the filthiest of animals; and experiments show that when the flesh is made the only or chief article of food for a few days the physical system begins rapidly to suffer. Scrofulous persons suffer the soonest and the most largely, and there is good reason to believe that much of the scrofula prevalent in this country is caused by pork-eating, either by the patient or by his parents."

"But it is often difficult to get other meat than pork."

"My answer is, eat pork if you must, in other words, from necessity; never from choice."

"How should pork be cooked?"

"I will answer in the language of a veteran physician of twice my own years, 'cook it done.' Other meats may be eaten rare if desired; pork must be cooked thoroughly. My advice to you is, unless you are an out-of-door laborer, eat pork rarely and sparingly, and see to it that the cook puts it over a hot fire and keeps it there until it is 'twice done.'"

"Now, Doctor, tell me about the comparative healthfulness of the different modes of cooking."

"Do you mean frying, boiling, roasting, etc."

"Yes."

"First, let me impress you with the general thought that all meats, pork excepted, are the most healthful when cooked so as to retain their juices. This is best done by roasting. Broiling ranks next; then comes boiling; and last we have frying. I repeat it, cook meat as far as possible in their own juices."

"Thank you, Doctor; now, are you willing to give me your opinion about vegetable food?"

"Certainly."

"How shall we cook them?"

"I will give you the same general rule as before: the best mode is to cook them so as to retain their own juices. Baking, therefore, is my preference. Beets baked are far preferable to boiled beets. In boiling much of the most valuable ingredients which are in the juice is lost."

"You surprise me; I have never eaten baked beets."

"Then try them. Have your cook thoroughly bake them. In eating slice them, and spread with butter. In some sections of Europe the baked beet is sold to the peasantry as a good substitute for the bread-loaf, and is eaten in the same way. I need not say that it is relished."

"Now, as to other vegetables?"

"I need not tell you that baked potatoes are the best; fried are the worst. Let the rule be to cook them with as little grease as possible. Milk is much more healthful with vegetables than grease."

"Would you advise us to eat several kinds of vegetables, when convenient at the same meal?"

"I would not burden you with severe restrictions here; but if my good wife should ask me for 'mine opinion,' I would gently hint to her to cook not more than two."

"Should she ask for the reason, what then?"

"I would answer that most vegetables digest more easily alone. Indeed, this is true of most kinds of food. I think, taking society as it is, the best advice I can give you, is to eat a variety of food, but not many kinds at the same time. Do you take the hint?"

"I understand you fully. And now I must thank you again for your good advice. The topics considered in these two conversations have interested me more than I can tell you."

"I am quite willing to answer any other inquiries."

"When we meet again you shall have the opportunity. Good morning."——Home and Health.

Crocodiles.

Of all wild animals the crocodile seems to be the most alarming and destructive. An Egyptian sportsman, who supported himself and family by the product of his gun, about three years ago, with three of his neighbors, went to an island called Geizeril-Arab—a favorite resort of crocodiles—to hunt for their eggs. As they were going round the island, three crocodiles escaped into the river. On examining the spot, a quantity of eggs were discovered in the sand. These they secured, and were proceeding back to their tent, when a crocodile who had watched the transaction rushed to the place of her deposit, and as rapidly returned to the river, and swimming, followed them opposite to to their abode, where until nightfall her eyes were seen above the water. The sportsmen feasted sumptuously upon their spoil; but as soon as the last embers of their fire had died away, the crocodile charged them furiously, repeating her attacks several times during the night; and it was only by the frequent discharge of their firearms that they kept her off at all. The crocodile, which had hitherto remained harmless, now became furious, and attacked all the cattle it could catch upon the river side. Among the victims was a fine mare in a neighboring village, who, as usual, was allowed to graze in the coarse abundant pasturage. One day whilst drinking, she was seized in the back of the neck by the jaws of the crocodile. The mare being a powerful animal, in an agony of pain, threw up her head. The crocodile dropped upon her back, and with her strange burden, the mare galloped of to her stable. The astonished villagers immediately set upon the crocodile with their naboot, or stout sticks, until she was induced to let go her hold and dismount; but the mare died from the joint effect of its wounds and fright.

During March, which is the breeding season, the crocodiles deposit their eggs in the sand of the banks or, in preference, in small sandbanks or islands on the stream. The eggs, which are white and hard, in size resemble those of the domestic goose. One found on White River measured exactly three inches and a half in length and five inches and thirteen sixteenths in circumference.

The care and anxiety bestowed by these ferocious creatures upon their eggs are astonishing. When about to lay, the female crocodile will dig with her claws a hole in the sand six inches deep, drop her egg therein, and cover it up. She will then make several holes around the first, to mislead those in search of her treasure. Every day she will add a fresh egg to her store, at the same time carefully enlarging the excavation, turning them, and re-covering them with sand. After they are hatched by the sun's ray, the mother will place her young in the shallow water of a retired creek, where she will nourish them until they are capable of feeding themselves.

Jackson and Buchanan.

[From Col. Forney's Reminiscences of Public Men.]

Shortly after Mr. Buchanan's return from Russia, in 1834, to which he had been sent by President Jackson in 1832, and immediately following his election to the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, to fill the unexpired term of William Wilkins, resigned, who, in his turn, was sent to succeed Buchanan in the same foreign mission, Buchanan called upon Old Hickory with a fair English lady, whom he desired to present to the head of the American nation. Leaving her in the reception-room down stairs, he ascended to the President's private quarters, and found General Jackson unshaved, unkempt, in his dressing-gown, with his slippered feet on the fender before a blazing wood fire, smoking a corn-cob pipe of the old southern school. He stated his object, when the General said he would be very glad to meet the handsome acquaintance of the new bachelor Senator. Mr. Buchanan was always careful of his personal appearance, and, in some respects, was a sort of Miss Fribble, addicted to spotless cravats and huge collars; rather proud of a small foot for a man of his stature, and to the last of his life what the ladies would call "a very good figure."

Having just returned from a visit to the fashionable continental circles, after two years of thorough intercourse with the etiquette of one of the statelites courts in Europe, he was somewhat shocked at the idea of the President meeting the eminent English lady in such a guise, and ventured to ask if he did not intend to change his attire, whereupon the old warrior rose, with his long pipe in his hand, and deliberately knocking the ashes of the bowl, said to his friend:

"Buchanan, I want to give you a little piece of advice, which I hope you will remember. I knew a man once who made his fortune by attending to his own business. Tell the lady I will see her presently."

The man who became President in 1856 was fond of saying that this remark of Andrew Jackson humiliated him more than any rebuke he had ever received. He walked down stairs to meet his fair charge, and in a very short time President Jackson entered the room, dressed in a full suit of black, cleanly shaved, with his stubborn white hair forced back from his remarkable face, and, advancing to the beautiful Britisher, saluted her with almost kingly grace. As she left the White House she exclaimed to her escort:

"Your Republican President is the royal model of a gentleman."

Dan Darthany's Little Dick.

He was a hard-fisted, horny-handed old backwoodsman, was Dan Darthany. Nobody had ever seen his weather-beaten face moistened with a tear, nor did any suppose his leathery heart was capable of beating in sympathy with any human being. His voice was as sharp as his axe, and his conversation was as rough as the thatch of his backwoods cabin.

Dan's little five-year-old bright-eyes was as hearty a lad as ever strayed among the pines. He was the life of the cabin. He picked up just such education as you would expect among such company. He wasn't a petted or pampered child.

Dan teamed it into town, one winter afternoon, for some supplies from the store.

Bright-eyed little Dick was along, full of sparkle and fun, with his little bear-skin coat on, his thick mittens and fur cap. Dan hitched his team and left little Dick in the sleigh while he went into the store. He made his purchases, and was almost ready to start for home. It was just then time for supper, and the boy at the next tavern came out to the street, swinging his huge bell. It frightened the horses, and they started off on a full run with the sleigh and little Dick. Away they sped like reindeer over the snow. "O God! my boy!" cried Dan Darthany; and he and two other men jumped into a sleigh which was standing near, and followed in pursuit as rapidly as they could urge on their horse.

The frightened horses ran as Dan thinks horses have never run before. It is growing dark. The snow is in drifts; light and in some places deep. What if that boy should fall into some drift and perish in the cold and darkness! Drive on; for we may overtake them before it is dark. The country is level and open, but there is not a sign or sight of the runaway team.

Yes, there is; here they come to it. Here is one runner; and the rest of the track seems as if made with the side of the sleigh. They will learn something of it soon, for the horses cannot have carried it far that way. Poor Dick! Is he killed? He must be.

Here is one of the horses with his neck broken. Hurry on the pursuit, for the remains of the rest of the wreck must be near. It grows darker and darker.

The other horse is in a snow drift, and with the broken sleigh fast to him, pants and snorts in terror. The sleigh is bottom upward. Poor little Dick must be in a drift somewhere. They will go and get torches and search, for they may find him yet while life is in him. With a heavy heart, Dan almost gives up the hope of finding the little fellow alive.

Stop! Dan Darthany! Hear that half-smothered little voice from under the overturned sleigh? "Dad! Dad!" "Oh God! there's my boy!" "Dad! Dad!" again says the little fellow; and great tears of joy course down the furrows in the backwoodsman's cheeks as he rushes to the place whence the sound came, upheaves what is left of the sleigh, and drags out the little curled-up heap of bear skin, which is nothing more nor less than his dear Dick; not a broken bone nor a scratch; but the little fellow is chilled through.

Dan Darthany wraps the boy in his own great fur coat and takes him in his arms rubbing him as he goes. "Dick, what did you feel like when the hosses was runnin' away!"

"Why, dad, I just grabbed hold of the side of the sleigh, and I knowed you'd come soon."

"But wasn't you skeered when the thing upsot?"

"No; I just held on, and said, 'God keep Dick;' and I got pooty cold while I was a waitin', but I knowed you'd come."

Says rough Dan Darthany, "I ain't very heavy on religion, I ain't and I hain't no book-larning; and I don't know about what you religiousers call particular providences; but when them hosses was a-tearing along so, I jest said, 'God save my dear Dick, God save my dear Dick,' all the time we was a-goin' arter 'em; and I know'd He'd do it somehow. An' if thar is such things as pertickular providences, why, I jest guess this is one of 'em, I do."—S. S. Workman.

Bob Ryan and Dandy.

"Never make an enemy even of a dog," said I to Bobby Ryan as I caught at his raised hand and tried to prevent him from throwing a stick at our neighbor Howard's great Newfoundland. But my words and effort came too late. Over the fence flew the stick, and whack on Dandy's nose it fell. Now Dandy, a great, powerful fellow, was very good-natured, but this proved a little too much for him. He sprang up with an angry growl, and bounded over the fence as if he had been as light as a bird, caught Bobby Ryan by the arm and held him tightly enough to let his teeth be felt.

"Dandy, Dandy," I cried in momentary alarm, "let go. Don't bite him."

The dog lifted his dark brown, angry eyes to mine with a look of intelligence, and I understood what they said: "I only want to frighten the young rascal."

And Bobby was frightened. Dandy held him for a little while, growling savagely, though there was a good deal of make believe in the growl, and then tossing the arm away, leaped back over the fence and laid himself down by his kennel.

"You're a very foolish boy, Bobby Ryan," said I, "to pick a quarrel with such a splendid old fellow as that. Suppose you were to fall into the lake some day, and Dandy happened to be near, and suppose he should remember your bad treatment and refuse to go in after you?"

"Wouldn't care," replied Bobby, "I can swim."

Now it happened only a week afterward that Bobby was out on the lake, in company with an older boy, and that in some way their boat was upset in deep water not far from the shore; and it also happened that Mr. Howard and his dog Dandy were near by and saw the two boys struggling in the water.

Quick as thought Dandy sprang into the lake and swam rapidly toward Bobby; but strange to say, after getting close to the lad, he turned and went toward the larger boy, who was struggling in the water, and keeping his head above the surface with difficulty. Seizing him, Dandy brought him safely to the shore. He then turned and looked toward Bobby, his young tormentor; he had a good many grudges against him, and for some moments seemed hesitating whether to save him or let him drown.

"Quick, Dandy!" cried his master, pointing to poor Bobby, who was trying his best to keep afloat. He was not the brave swimmer he had thought himself.

At this the noble old dog bounded again into the water and brought Bobby to land. He did not seem to have much heart in his work, however, for he dropped the boy as soon as he reached the shore, and walked away with a stately, indifferent air.

But Bobby, grateful for his rescue, and repenting his former unkindness, made up with Dandy on that very day, and they were ever afterward fast friends. He came very near losing his life through unkindness to a dog, and the lesson it gave him will not soon be forgotten.—Children's Hour.

A Mother's Social Position.

BY MRS. J. E. M'C.

"Where is mother, Aggie?" asked Fred, as he came bounding in from school.

"Gone out to tea, Masther Freddie, and yer to be a very good boy, the while."

"Oh, dear! What a dull time we shall have, Jennie. Will she stay late, Aggie?"

"Can't say," said Agnes, unconcernedly, as she trudged about, getting the children's supper on the table.

"It isn't much like having mother at home, is it?" said Freddie, confidentially to his sister, as the three children gathered around the desolate-looking supper-table. "Mother has better toast than this brought on, don't she? Aggie didn't think it worth while to prepare any fruit just for us. Let's tell mother."

"No, indeed, Freddie; it would be a shame to trouble her about such a little thing. It won't hurt us to rough it once in a while," said George. "If we always get as good a supper as milk-toast and cookies and chipped beef, we shall do well. Let us not make it unpleasant for mother, when she comes home, by our complaints. She has been intending to make this visit to Mrs. Holmes for several weeks, and I hope she will have a good time."

"So do I; but I hope, too, she will hurry home."

At an earlier hour than they expected, mother arrived, and there was a rush and a shout of welcome from the three children who had been sitting quite dull and lonesome about the lamp in the pretty sitting-room. It had not looked right, to them all the evening; but suddenly it brightened up wonderfully.

"I will take your bonnet and shawl, mother," said Jennie, "then you need not go up stairs. How nice your new dress looks, mother," she added, stopping for a moment to survey it with childish pleasure.

Mother's cheeks and eyes were bright and happy as a mother's should be who finds such a welcome awaiting her. The children loved to see her so nicely dressed, and had many questions to ask of the little tea-party she had attended. They were glad to know she had passed so pleasant an afternoon, and doubly pleased when she said:

"Miss Ashton showed us a fine set of views for the stereoscope which she brought home from her tour in Europe, and she says you may all come up on Saturday afternoon and see them too. She expects her nephews down from school, and you will all take tea together."

The children felt a higher respect for their mother because of her position socially. It was a pleasure to know she was everywhere respected and her opinion deferred to. They loved to have her invited out to tea, much as they missed her at home; and they knew it was because they were her children that they received many favors and attentions not accorded to others.—Mother's Journal.

Hard on the Engineer.

An engineer on the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad tells the following story of himself: One night the train stopped at a small station in Indiana. While this operation was going on, I observed two green-looking countrymen in "home-spun," curiously inspecting the locomotive and occasionally giving vent to expressions of astonishment. Finally, one of them looked up to me and said:

"Stranger, are this a locomotive?"

"Certainly! Didn't you ever see one before?"

"No, haven't never seen one 'afore. Me'n Bill come down to the station to-night purpose to see one. Them's the feller, ain't it?"

"Yes, certainly."

"What yer call that you're in?"

"We eall this the cab."

"And that's the driving wheel."

"That big black thing on the top is the chimney, I suppose?"

"Precisely."

"Be you the engineer what runs the machine?"

"I am the engineer."

"Bill, said the fellow to his mate, after eyeing me closely for a few minutes, "it don't take much of a man to be an engineer, do it?"

Advice of an Old Lady.

Now, John, listen to me for I am older than you, or I 'couldn't be your mother. Never do you marry a young woman, John, before you have contrived to happen at the house where she lives at four or five times before breakfast. You should know how late she lies in bed in the morning. You should take notice whether her complexion is the same in the morning as it is in the evening, or whether the wash and towel have robbed her of her evening bloom. You should take care to surprise her and observe how her hair looks when she is not expecting you.

If possible you should be where you could hear the morning conversation between her and her mother. If she is ill-natured and snappish to her mother, so she will be to you, depend upon it. But if you find her up and dressed neatly in the morning, with the same countenance, the same smiles, the same neatly combed hair, the same ready and pleasant answer to her mother which characterized her deportment in the evening, and particularly if she is lending a hand to get the breakfast ready in good season, she is a prize, John, and the sooner you secure her to yourself the better.

Home Conversation.

Children hunger perpetually for new ideas, and the most pleasant way of reception is by the voice and the ear, not the eye and the printed page. The one mode is natural, the other artificial. Who would not rather listen than read? We not unfrequently pass by in the papers a full report of a lecturer, and then go and pay our money to hear the self-same words uttered. An audience will listen closely from the beginning to the end of an address, which not one in twenty of those present would read with the same attention. This is emphatically true of children. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they deem it drudgery to study in the books; and even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of the educational advantages which they desire, they cannot fail to grow up intelligent, if they enjoy in childhood and youth the privilege of listening daily to the conversation of intelligent people.

We sometimes see parents, who are the life of every company which they enter, dull, silent, uninteresting at home among their children. If they have not mental activity and mental stories sufficient for both, let them first use them for their own households. Ireland exports beef and wheat, and lives on potatoes; and they fare as poorly who reserve their social charms for companies abroad, and keep their dullness for home consumption. It is better to instruct children, and to make them happy at home, than it is to charm strangers or to amuse friends. A silent house is a dull place for young people, a place from which they will escape if they can. They will talk or think of being "shut up" there, and the youth who does not love home is in danger. Make home, then, a cheerful and pleasant spot. Light it up with a cheerful conversation. Father, mother, talk your best at home.—Landmark.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

DOTY'S WASHING MACHINE,

LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER

Improved with ROWEL'S PATENT DOUBLE COG-WHEELS, and the PATENT STOP, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

PRICES—A Fair Offer.

If the Merchants in your place will not furnish, or send for the Machines, send us the retail price, Washer, $14; Extra Wringer, $9; and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked, that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machines free of freight, after a month's trial, according to directions.

No husband, father, or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more expeditiously, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

Midsummer.

Past many a shady nook,
The babbling meadow brook
'Twixt grass-grown banks with feathery fern abounding,
Glides on its devious way
Through all the livelong day,
While fields and woods with summer song are sounding.

Far off across the vale,
Where the light vapors sail,
Veiled with thin mist the purple hills are sleeping;
And in the ripened field,
Amid the summer's yield,
The farmers now the golden grain are reaping.

The deep creek, winding, flows
By shelving shores where grows
The silvery willow marked with sun and shadow,
And in its glassy wave
The cattle come to lave
Their sweltering limbs from feeding in the meadow.

Steeped in the blinding light,
The clouds, all deathly white,
Across the vault, with listless motion sailing,
Below me in the plain,
Along the binding grain,
Their grateful shadows o'er the earth are trailing.

From farm-yards far and near
The shrill horns, sounding clear,
With answering echoes from the hills are blending;
The laborers' work is stopped,
The whetted scythes are dropped,
And homeward now their eager feet are tending.

Beside the cottage porch,
The sunflower's shining torch,
That marked with rings of flame the summer's coming,
Stands in proud splendor there
Where all the noontide air
Is drowsy with the sweet bees' idle humming.

Within the garden blows
The fragrant summer rose,
Whose blushing leaves with sweet perfume are laden;
And swaying gently there,
The lily, passing fair,
Hangs her meek head like some retiring maiden.

Oh, glorious summer! stay,
Nor hasten yet away
From the sweet fields with thy warm beauty glowing;
My life has reached its prime,
Its radiant summer-time,
And all my blood with added warmth is flowing.

The day at last declines,
The west with splendor shines
As slantwise now the sun's last beams are falling,
And all the dazzling air
Bright with the sunset's glare,
Is filled with myriad voices blithely calling.

Way to do the Work.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

No officer can do his work well who does not thoroughly understand it; hence the necessity of "studying" it. It is not enough that he can repeat it, parrot-like. We do not agree with those who think that an uneducated man makes the best officer because he is more likely to get it exact. It may readily be conceded that an ignorant man will be more likely, to use the exact language of the work than one who is educated. It is undoubtedly the fact, and for this reason: The man who does not think has no words but those he finds in the work to express the idea which that work contains. He gets the idea from the work and expresses it in its own language, because he has no other. With the educated, thinking man, the case is different. He has half a dozen terms that express the same, or a similar idea, and he will frequently have one at hand, when the term that is orthodox escapes his memory.

Now it is doubtless desirable that there should be uniformity in the work, but we submit that there are other things more desirable. One of these is a forcible and impressive manner of delivering the lectures. The change of a single word for one of the same, or a similar signification, mars the work less than the false pronunciation or accentuation of the word laid down in the ritual. Suppose the candidate is told in the true work that he has "exemplified" an event in history, would it detract from the impression of the work should he use the word "illustrated" instead? We give this as a specimen of the principle for which we contend, that there are worse errors than the substitution of a strange word of similar meaning. The sentence in which the word "exemplified" occurs, badly delivered, would be less forcible and impressive, and subserve the interest of Masonry less than the interpolation of "illustrated" in a well and forcibly spoken sentence. If this be true it is better to make the manner of delivering a study as well as the text of the work.

This brings us back to our starting-point, that a good officer will endeavor to understand—thoroughly understand—the work. And by this we do not mean that he should go through it without missing a word or misplacing a syllable. Some do that and yet know very little about the words. The ritual of Masonry will bear study. It is terse, simple and expressive, and in nine cases out of ten when an officer is at a loss to construe a passage in it, if he will express the idea in the most forcible, direct and simple language that he can command, he will get it correctly. There is no verbiage, no rhetorical periods, no high-sounding epithets, no rounded sentences in Masonry. It is like the three pillars; it combines wisdom, strength and beauty, without a display of tawdry finery. Then it follows that the officer who shall attempt to deliver his charges and lectures in a grandiloquent, or what is generally called an eloquent manner, will most surely fail.

But this is not all. The officer must strive to accommodate his manner to the particular subject on which he is engaged. It would be simply and only ridiculous to assume the same bearing and manner in delivering the historical lectures that would be proper and desirable in the most thrilling portions of the second section of the third degree. Should a man design to commit an outrage on a public highway at mid-day, where persons were constantly passing, he would not likely be long or very noisy about it. If he said anything, it would not be in a loud tone of voice that might bring the neighborhood upon him. But nature would be his indicator and he would speak in a low, earnest key, that would not attract attention from the passers by but which would be audible to those to whom it was addressed. We give this illustration as a specimen which may be applied to a great number of points in the work of Masonry.

The work should always be performed in a manner that would be appropriate to the subject were the transactions delineated real. Hence anything incongruous introduced in the ceremony, detracts from its influence and impression. Masonry is essentially dramatic. Thus we must not only observe the "unities" of the play, but the "proprieties" also. What would we think of a murderer who after he had throttled his victim, should carry his body to the hastily-scooped grave by torch light? Anye t we have witnessed scenes in the lodge-room quite as incongruous, not to say ridiculous, as this. Such lodges are wise above the traditions of Masonry. They sacrifice sense to effect, and then spoil the effect by the perfect absurdity of the proprieties. "A jewel in a swine's snout" is a scriptural figure to illustrate a lack of discretion. There are many beautiful things and pretty ceremonies intrinsically, that are wholly out of place in the work of a lodge of Masons.

To prevent falling into these follies we must study the work. The accomplished actor does something more than commit his lines to memory. He studies the meaning of the author; he strives to ascertain and enter into the train of thought that led to the expression of the beautiful ideas which it is his duty and pleasure to render in the best possible manner. The good lodge officer is in a degree an accomplished actor. He must strive to comprehend the thoughts which passed through the brains of those ancient worthies when the present work of Freemasonry was embodied into a perfect system. And he who most thoroughly studies these old forms and expressions, these old symbols and emblems, these ancient ceremonies and rites, will be best qualified to administer them. He who applies himself the closest to the study will discover the most beauties and the most good in the Institution, and will be the best able to perform the duties of his station.

In choosing men to do the work of the lodge we must never forget that there are countless numbers of good Masons who can by no means make good officers. We must look beyond the mere tenets of a Mason's profession—brotherly love, relief and truth. These the good officer must have, but he must have more. One of the great obstacles in the way of Masonic progress is to be found right here. We elect those to office that we love without regard to capability. The result is that we often have good Masons who are very bad officers in the chairs of the lodge. The work is ill done, the interest in Masonry flags, the attendance becomes small, the lodge dwindles down to a determined few, and well for it, if that few does not become weary.

We close this paper with a remark that ought to be an axiom: No lodge was ever prosperous when the work was ill done; no lodge long declines when the work is well performed. From this fact the importance to Masonry of good work may be inferred.

MASONIC TROWEL.—This valuable publication is again established on sound basis, and comes to us laden with much useful knowledge. Every member of the Order in Woodford county should send $1.25 to the publisher and assist Bro. Reynolds to spread the light abroad. We know of no better publication for the benefit of the Craft than the Trowel.—Woodford Sentinel.

Annual Elections.

In the June number of THE TROWEL I find an article on the above subject, in which the lodges electing in December are commended. "It is quite desirable," says the writer, "that such should be the case as a matter of general and special convenience; general because it closes out the old and commences the new year in a business fashion, and at a time when old accounts should be closed and new ones opened;" while the lodges electing in June are said to put the Grand Secretary to the inconvenience of making up his list twice, and they are urged to consider the propriety of changing their time of elections to December, as Masters elected in June cannot, for various reasons, be as likely to be selected for important committees as those elected in December. Now I cannot see it in this light. The lodges which elect in June in their returns name the officers who will hold till the following June—say eight months after the meeting of the Grand Lodge. These names will be published in the printed proceedings, and till the following June you can know who are the officers in those lodges. The lodges which elect in December do not make their returns till October—say ten months after election. These names are published in the following spring, and in the third year after his election (elected December 1869, reported to Grand Lodge October 1870, proceedings out March 1871) and three months after he has retired from office you may for the first time find out (so far as the proceedings are concerned) that Bro. Jonney Smoker was the Worshipful Master of Marrow Bone Lodge No. 1,000, years ago. So I say that I cannot see how a December election is going to assist the Most Worshipful Grand Master in the selection of the able material for his important committees, as the list of the officers of the subordinate lodges will not, in all probability, be published till next year. So that from our printed proceedings neither he nor anyone else can tell who will compose the Grand Lodge of Illinois for 1871.

This ought to be remedied, if possible, and can be. There are several plans which suggest themselves:

First. Reverse the order of things. Let the subordinate lodges elect before the Grand Lodge meets—let the lodges elect, say, in September—and the names be entered on the returns and sent immediately to the Grand Secretary. Let the old officers represent the lodge in Grand Lodge; let the elected officers be installed in December and take their stations for the year. This will do all that you desire, viz.: close out the old and commence the new year in a business fashion. It will do more; it will give the Grand Secretary the list of the Masters and Wardens for publication for the current year, and who will form the next Grand Lodge; and the Grand Master and the Craft will not be left in the dark as to who he may select on committees or whom we shall meet in Grand Lodge. Nor can I see why December should be the end of the Masonic year any more than June. Out of forty-three Grand Lodges five meet in January, one in February, four in May, ten in June, one in July, nine in October, four in November and five in December.

In Iowa the lodges elect in May, the Grand Lodge meets in June, the new officers have been reported and installed in June, the proceedings printed and in the lodges usually in July, and the new Master at his first meeting after installation has the latest laws and regulations for the government of himself and his lodge. Now could we only follow the example of Iowa; have our elections in May, which we could do; our Grand Lodge in June, the most appropriate month in the year; and make the 24th of June our general installation and celebration day throughout the State, and old St. John's day would be, as it used to be, the day of the Order? Let us push for a Grand Lodge in June.

TRAVELER.

The Inherent Right of Visitation.

In our last number we gave to our readers the contribution of Phi Pi to the Michigan Freemason and we now give another fine and unanswerable argument from the same writer. We do not know his name, but his articles prove him to be a sound and logical reasoner and we are glad that he is striking a blow at the fiction brought into existence by certain authors. We will here state the usage of Missouri is against recognizing visitation as a "right," but only as a "privilege," and we fully agree with Phi Pi.

In an article, published in the February number of your magazine, I endeavored to show that there are no "inherent rights" in Masonry. The argument was drawn, partly from the principles and nature of civil jurisprudence, (whence the term, its meaning and its application are derived), and partly from the nature of the Masonic compact itself. If the argument is sound, and the correctness of its conclusions be conceded, it is, of course, logically unnecessary to argue against the inherent nature of any particular Masonic right.

But as this so-called "inherent right" of Masonic visit is now called in question, and eliciting much discussion; and as the harmonious and prosperous continuance of Masonry, in the United States, seems to depend upon a correct decision of the points involved, I may be pardoned for again essaying to aid in determining the true nature of this right.

The topic forming the basis of my former article was taken from the reply of the Grand Master of Massachusetts to the circular, on the right of visit, issued by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia. The annual transactions of that Grand Lodge, for the year 1870, being now in my hands, I will call the attention of your readers to this circular on the right of visit; to the replies of twenty or more Grand Masters and others to the questions propounded by it; and to the final action of that Grand Lodge on its own questions.

The questions contained in the circular, stripped of unnecessary verbiage and disconnected from the particular circumstances in which they arose, may be thus stated:

1. Is Masonic visit the "inherent right" of every Mason.

2. Is the right of objection to the visit, in every member of the lodge to be visited?

3. Is the member's objection valid, if unsustained by approved reasons?

4. Does the duty of preferring charges against the visitor devolve upon the member objecting to the visit?

If the first question be answered in the affirmative, it is necessary to a proper understanding of its force and effect, that we determine the nature and dignity of an "inherent right." In civil law, life, liberty and property are the only objects to which the term "inherent or absolute right" is applied; and such is the dignity and sacredness of these rights, under the civil compact, that not even the State itself, much less an individual, can lawfully invade, abridge, impair or destroy either one of them, until the person whose right is in question has been arraigned, tried and found guilty of some crime, misdemeanor or default, under the civil law. If a man commit murder, arson, highway robbery, etc., his life may be taken; if he commit some lesser crime, his liberty may be curtailed; and if he be guilty of some misdemeanor or default, his property may be forfeited—but not in either case, till after conviction.

In short, the civil law punishes all violations of its provisions, by arresting or curtailing one or more of these three great "inherent rights" of the citizen, but allows no individual member of society to usurp its function and destroy or impair, on his individual responsibility, any one of the "inherent rights" of his neighbor.

If, therefore, the "right of visit," in the Masonic compact, be an "inherent right;" and if the dignity of such right be determined by the analogies of the civil law, whence the term is derived; we perceive, at once, that our answers to the second and third questions, as stated above, must be in the negative—that the member of a lodge to be visited has no right to object to the visit; and that his objection is not valid, whether with or without reasons, until (under the fourth question) he prefers charges—and not then, unless, upon trial, the charges be sustained. If this be the logical and necessary result of the premises assumed by the advocates of the "inherent right of visit," they, and not I, are responsible for the seeming "reductio ad absurdum" to which the doctrine is brought.

The transactions of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia contain the replies of eighteen or twenty Grand Masters to the questions asked by its circular. They are so equally divided on the questions under discussion, as to show conclusively that Masonic mind of the country is muddled in the attempt to reconcile this "inherent" principle with Masonic good sense. While several of these Masonic authorities have the good sense, (guided by sound Masonic instincts), to go directly to safe and right practical results, regardless of the inconsistencies of those results with the so-called landmark and the authorities, it seems strange that all of them should fail to strike a blow at the Masonic fiction of "inherent right" which is the root of the whole difficulty. Several seem to be in awe of a supposed landmark, and are evidently embarrassed by the effort to reconcile the "landmark" with their Masonic common sense.

But, let me now ask, how came it to be a landmark? (if it be one) by whose authority, and for what reasons did it acquire such a dignity? A very slight examination of this question will demonstrate that the so-called landmark was at the first an inference from an inconsiderate dictum of a high Masonic authority, which first characterized the right of visit as an "absolute right." "Absolute" and "inherent" rights, in civil law, being essentially the same, and the terms synonymous, the original phase was easily supplanted by the latter, and it came, ultimately to be accepted, by many as sound Masonic law;. but it was so, only because the Masonic events and conditions did not exist which could subject it to the test of reason by the light of experience. If the right of visit be an inherent right, it is eminently proper that it be guarded as a landmark; and if the principles upon which it was dubbed "inherent" and created "landmark" were true, originally, they are true now. But if, after careful scrutiny, they are found to be unsound now it is equally manifest that they were unsound from the beginning. If the right be not "inherent," but purely from a relative right; and, (so far as it is a right), if it be one that is inferred from the nature of the Masonic compact, it is not and cannot be one of those immutable landmarks of the Order, which derive all their strength, dignity and stability from the fact that they express a fundamental Masonic truth. But again: If the reasoning of my former article in your February number, be correct, there is not and cannot be any "inherent right" in Masonry. If there cannot, from the nature of the case, be any such right, for this reason alone the particular "inherent right" of visit falls to the ground, and drags down with it the "landmark" of which it was the origin and support.

"Resolved, That it is the right of a brother in good standing to visit all regular lodges; but, if objections are made, it is the right of the Master to determine the validity of such objections, he alone being responsible to the Grand Lodge."

This resolution dodges the main question. It affirms the right of visit, but does not say (except by a possible inference from its silence) that the right is not "inherent." It affirms the right of the Mater to sit in judgment on the objections to visit, if any be made; but does not say (except, again, by a possible inference from its silence) that it refuses the simple, unexplained objection, by a member, to the visit. It is silent also on the duty of an objecting member to prefer charges. It affirms the position (not necessarily required by their circular questions) that the Master is alone responsible to the Grand Lodge for refusing the right of visit.

This action is amenable to criticism. Though silent, in express terms, on the "inherent" question, it virtually concedes the inherency of the right, by requiring the objector to state his reasons, and the Master to pass upon them. With singular inconsistency, it then degrades the "inherent right" from its true dignity, by allowing the Master, on the ex-parte statements of a member to deprive a visiting brother of his "inherent rights," without a hearing or a trial!

Brethren! not only you of the District of Columbia, but of all other Grand Lodges in the United States: We must decide this question; either the right of visit is or it is not "inherent." The question cannot long remain juggled as it is in this resolution. If we accept the inherency of the right, we must also accept its logical consequences; and a visitor can never be lawfully excluded from a lodge without charges, and trial. But if we reject this "inherent" fallacy, and assign the visit to its proper place in the scale of Masonic rights, we will thereby remove, from our Masonic jurisprudence, a principle which is unsound of itself, and certain to disturb the equilibrium of our system so long as it is recognized. Indeed, in the near future, I see our Masonic ship wrecked on this rock, unless it be speedily removed. Explode and remove it, and our Masonic navigators will be relieved from the necessity of steering between the Scylla of an erroneous principle and the Charybdis of a dangerous practice.

In conclusion, permit me to say, that the drift of events, inside and outside of Masonry, in the United States and in Europe, seems to indicate the necessity of a Masonic policy which will recognize the inalienable and undeniable right of every Master Mason, when standing on the floor and before the altar of his lodge, to say, (either by an unexplained ballot or by unexplained words), to the initiation, to the advancement, to the membership or to the visit—I object. It is as much his prerogative to do this, on the question of visit, as it is on either of the other questions; and for the same reasons; and it is not a valid argument against his right, to say, "he may sometimes exercise it from willful, capricious or unworthy motives." If this argument be good as against this right, it is equally good as against "advancement" or "membership." But who will now deny the wisdom of the rule that regulates the ballot on these questions? The Master of the lodge is no more responsible for the rejection of a visit, by this means, than he is for the rejection of a membership. He incurs no responsibility in the business, unless he, in the exercise of his prerogative, exclude the visitor as he may a member of his own lodge. It is the Master's prerogative, (for good reasons), to exclude from the lodge, or its privileges, a candidate for initiation, advancement, membership or visit, even after the entire lodge has signified its willingness to admit; but it is not within his prerogative to admit one, in opposition to the objection of a single member of his lodge.

Of the particular instances in which such a rule as is here indicated may work well, or ill, there is no lack. Every intelligent Mason can supply them, without number. It is enough to say, in advocacy of the rule, that it is in harmony with Masonry; is in harmony with itself; and is preservative of that harmony which is the strength of the Institution.

The effort to exalt the "right of visit" above all other rights or privileges, springs from a sentimentalism which, if persisted in, will be found to be of dangerous tendency, if not of ruinous effect, to our Masonic institutions.—Freemason (St. Louis).

At a regular communication of Ipava Lodge No. 213, A., F. and A. M., held on the evening of June 23d, A. D. 1871, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, A number of members of this lodge have received circular letters from New York and elsewhere, from persons purporting to be Masons and claimingto work on the square, offering to sell counterfeit money for the purpose of circulating the same, in violation of the teachings of Masonry and of the laws of the land; and,

WHEREAS, Said circulars are received and read by persons who are not Masons, thereby leading many persons to believe that Masons tolerate crime in their brethren and are bound to shield them from exposure; and,

WHEREAS, Our Senior Warden has lately received a similar circular from a person claiming to be a Mason, and signing his name William B. Logan, 15 Dutch street, New York City; Therefore,

Resolved, We denounce the publication and circulation of said circular under the garb of Masonry as an imposition, a libel and slander on the Institution of Masonry and an act that would subject its author to expulsion from any well-governed lodge of Masons in any part of the world.

Resolved, That the members of this lodge are hereby warned against the seductive temptations to crime which are presented in said circular and are required to keep themselves unspotted from their influence and to avoid giving countenance to the same either by word or act in such manner as to induce others to be imposed upon so that through mercenary motives they might be led to commit crime against the teachings of Masonry and in violation of the laws of the land.

Resolved, That if any member of this lodge shall hereafter communicate with the author or authors of any such letter or circular or those of any infamous character of whatever nature or kind for the purpose of exposing them or bringing them to justice he shall first communicate his intentions to at least two discreet brethren in order that his motives may be proven to be, if at any time it may be necessary, that Masonry may not suffer from his indiscretion and, a failure to do so shall be taken as prima facia evidence of his complicity in the guilt unless the contrary be clearly proven by at least two competent witnesses.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered on the records of this lodge as a standing memorial of the lodge in regard to the matters contained therein.

Masonic Calendar.

Ancient Craft Masons commence their era with the Creation of the World, calling it []Anno Lucis* (A.·. L.·.), "in the year of Light."

Scotch Rite, same as Ancient Craft, except the Jewish Chronology is used, Anno Mundi (A.·. M.·.), "in the year of the World."

Royal Arch Masons date from the year the second Temple was commenced by Zerubbabel, Anno Inventonis (A.·. Inv.·.), "in the year of the Discovery."

Royal and Select Masters date from the year in which the Temple of Solomon was completed, Anno Despositionis (A.·. Dep.·.), "in the year of the Deposit."

Knights Templar commence their era with the organization of their Order, Anno Ordonis (A.·. O.·.), in the year of the Order."

RULES FOR MASONIC DATES.

Father Taylor.

Who has not heard of "Father Taylor," the sailors' preacher of Boston? Among all the curious specimens of humanity of which the great New England city could boast, Father Taylor was the most unique and the most attractive. Twenty years ago we met him there, attended his Bethel Church and heard him preach; formed his personal acquaintance, and knew not which to admire most—his deep piety and great purity of character, or the native brilliancy of his mind, and his peculiar forms of expression——nervous, sententious, sparkling. There is no finer passage in Dickens' "American Notes," than his description of Father Taylor's preaching; and the gifted Miss Martineau confessed the power and influence of his pulpit efforts.

Father Taylor was a Freemason, one of the old stamp of Craftsmen, who received the precepts of the Order with profound respect, and illustrated in his life the power of Masonic instruction. He did homage to Masonry, as an institution, believing it, in its peculiar sphere, capable of accomplishing much good for humanity. How long he was a member of the Order, we do not know, nor of what lodge he was a member, but presume he was initiated in early life. That he was faithful to his Masonic duties and covenants, is attested by his Masonic burial, and the large number of brethren who attended to honor his memory.

We gather from an eastern paper the following brief history of this remarkable man:

Father Taylor, as he was familiarly called, was born in the city of Richmond, Virginia, in the year 1793. In early childhood he was left an orphan, and when quite a youth entered upon a seafaring life, first as a surgeon's boy in the American navy, and afterward in the navy of Spain, which was then operating in Mexican waters against the French. In our war of 1812 with Great Britain he shipped on board the privateer Curley, and was captured by the English and carried a prisoner into Halifax. Here he was found by a poor but Christian widow who had known him in Boston. The pious lady ministered to his wants and gave him a Bible. Returning to Boston, he was converted under the ministry of Rev. Elijah Hedding, afterward one of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Through the kind offices of Amos Binney, a benevolent Boston merchant, he was sent to Newmarket Seminary, New Hampshire. Here he received the only school training of his life. His available talents becoming quickly known, he was pressed into the service of the Church, and joined the New England Conference in 1819. Very judiciously he was sent to labor in the sea coast towns, where the success of his ministrations was marvelous. Every where the people flocked to hear the sailor preacher, and hung rapturously upon his impassioned presentations of truth. In 1829 he was placed in charge of the Methodist Seamen's Bethel, of Boston; he had been here but a few years when a commodious place of worship was erected for him by the contributions of Christians of all creeds. In this chapel he prayed and preached and labored for the good of seamen to the end of his days.

The congregations of Father Taylor were, without doubt, the most extraordinary that ever assembled to hear preaching. In the centre, furnished with seats reserved expressly for them, were sailors from every clime, and of every tongue spoken by civilized men. Around them were grouped families of sea-faring people, most of them poor and lowly, but constant attendants upon Father Taylor's ministrations. But in the congregation would always be found representatives of the highest culture—authors, poets, orators, wits, the elite of the intellectual world—attracted and fascinated by the imagery, humor, and resistless sympathy of Father Taylor's preaching. The wealth of his illustrations were without limit; his hearers were surprised, melted, and taken captive.

Very few of the brilliant passages of Father Taylor's sermons have been recorded; one, however, in which he gives his estimate of creeds, shows, though very imperfectly, his peculiar style:

"Creeds, like Joseph's coat of many colors, are made of patches, no two of them alike, or one of them to-day what it was when first made. No man shall make a creed for me; and I am sure I do not wish to make a creed for any one."

In common discourse Father Taylor was graphic, witty, and sometimes very sarcastic. Being asked when leaving a house to make a prayer, he replied, "If there is any thing you wish me to pray for, I will do so; but I can't make a prayer." One of his most characteristic sayings was about Emerson: "He is a Christian, no matter what he says about it, and will have to go to heaven, for if the Devil got him he would never know what to do with him. There seems to be a screw loose somewhere, though I never could tell where; for, listen as close as I might, I never could hear any jar in the machinery. He's certainly a Christian, though he knows no more of the principles of Christian doctrine than Balaam's ass knew of the principles of Hebrew grammar." To a minister, whom he wished to encourage to labor and wait, he gave the advice "not to carry the seed-basket and the sickle into the field at the same time." His quaintness was very perceptible in his prayers. Many will remember his petition for President Lincoln, that the Lord would "protect him from the creatures who were trying to bore their way through the sheathing of his integrity." To a prayer-meeting, which had just been exhorted that repentance was never too late, for a sinner blown up in a powder mill could make his peace with heaven before he fell to the earth, Father Taylor said: "Do not trust to such a chance, brethren—don't wait for your dying hour before you repent—perhaps you never will be blown up in a powder-mill! Somebody once asked him why he was not called "Dr. Taylor" —why they did not make him a doctor of divinity? "I suppose it is because my divinity never needed doctoring," was his answer. Rev. Dr. Bartol (Unitarian) has published a funeral sermon on the wonderful sailor. Here are a few gleanings from it: "He looked on Transcendentalism with a half-serious, half-humorous mistrust, as a curious compound of good and bad, to the last. 'It is like a gull,' he said to me, "long wings, lean body, poor feathers, and miserable meat." At my house, Dr. Channing inquired about a famous Methodist preacher then in town. "Oh! I should like to see him," added Dr. Lowell. "You can't see him," Taylor immediately answered; "he is behind his Master!" Could Shakespeare do better? "Laugh till I get back!" I remember as one of his farewells. He hated gloom, and told me of a dismal theologian, that he seemed to have killed some one, and wanted him to go help bury the body. "O Lord, we are a widow!" he said, praying for a bereft wife. He had a sentiment for the little fish he caught and threw back into the sea, saying: "There, little one, go tell your grandmother that you have seen a ghost!" The chaise he once owned was always full of ragged children, so that he could not take his own family to ride.

The quaint, pungent sayings of the venerable Taylor, would be invaluable; we have picked up a few which illustrate the peculiar and original character of his mind—it reached conclusions as by intuition, and brought them forth sparkling all over with gems of the purest water. Such was Father Taylor,—frank, honest, blunt and brilliant; a good man, a true Mason; stern and startling in his appearance and manner, but a light and an influence which were a boon and blessing to his flock.

The good, saintly old preacher was feeble for some years before his death, yet tenacious of life to the last. Only a few days before the end he said, "I shan't die while there is any thing left of me." The Boston papers tell us that he passed away in the first quarter of the ebb-tide, the proper time, according to the sailors, for a natural death. Boston will not soon forget his rugged face, furrowed all through and through, yet beaming with the light of genius; but his memory will be tenderly cherished by sailors all over the world. To them he was, in the strongest sense, Father Taylor, as well as a sincere friend and judicious counsellor.—Review..

Out of the Shadow.

In assuming once more our place in the editorial sanctum, though our fingers still do duty with trembling weakness, we feel as though we may be pardoned a few words in relation to an experience which has been to us both sad and novel. We write not altogether as one who taketh off his armor at the completion of the battle, for we are still unable to leave our room, but humbly acknowledging the goodness of the Father by whose mercy we have been raised from the very confines of the grave and encouraged to hope that ere long we may again mingle with the brethren, and once more engage in our life work.

For the first time since arriving at man's estate, we have been seriously ill, and have experienced what it is in twenty-four hours to lose all the strength of manhood and become helpless as an infant, unable to turn without assistance, or to exercise the least control over the limbs that have so long obeyed our volition. As the disease progressed in intensity, we saw with a calm which a well man could with difficulty appreciate, the increasing anxiety of the physician, the evident alarm of friends, and felt that we were indeed very near the gate that opens upon the valley and shadow of death, and in that solemn hour no more poignant regret came to us than that we should not see the completion of the Temple for which we have so long and so earnestly labored. Thanks, however to the intelligent and skillful treatment of our physician, Dr. C. H. Terry, of Brooklyn, for having fallen into whose hands we can never be sufficiently grateful, the crisis of danger was safely passed and we have entered upon the long process of convalescence. To one who has never traveled this road nothing can appear stranger than that the pain having ceased, the dim eye brightened, the appetite returned, one should not be able to get up and walk abroad at will; but day follows day, and week runs into weeks, and yet the trembling limbs refuse their accustomed duty, and so we wait with what patience we may till, by slow degrees, we shall have accumulated sufficient strength to enable us once more to control our own motions.

As now in the quiet days we are passing until quinine and beef tea shall have wrought their expected effect, one thought occurs to us that many others may take to heart with profit. It is this: out of a life so inordinately busy as for twenty years ours has been, there has been abstracted a calendar month during which time we have scarcely had the power to think, much less to act, and hence this period of time, so far as anything we could do is concerned, has been an absolute blank. We have lived, it is true, but for all practical purposes we have been as much out of the world as though we had never been in it, and yet the affairs of the world have gone on in their accustomed round, and even those most accustomed to meet us were, without thinking of it, gradually becoming accustomed to our absence.

Herein we have the type of what will happen to us all when in due time we are called to lay aside forever the concerns and employments of this world, and when the places that have known us shall know us no more. However poignant the grief of friends, however affectionate the memories that may be kept of us, our places will be filled, and the ever-rushing tide of human affairs will sweep onward, as though we had never formed part of it. Whoever, then, would live even in the memory of those who survive him, can only hope to do so in the good works he shall have accomplished while yet it was day with him. Seeing this, how puerile and unworthy seem the ambitions, the jealousies and the pitiful meannesses we so often meet in our journey through life? Reflecting how soon and how thoroughly death will sweep away our most cherished hopes, and spread over us, in the darkness of the grave, an impenetrable vail of forgetfulness, let us endeavor rather to cultivate the amenities than the enmities of life, so that, dying, there may mingle with the tears that fall at our grave only the kindly memories of our good works.

In addition to the unremitting attentions of our immediate family, we might here signalize the kindness of many brethren, a large proportion of whom, under the orders of our physician, were denied admittance to the sick room; but we have not space for their enumeration. We must, however, be pardoned one honorable mention, without which we could not be satisfied to rest. When the fact of our illness was made known to R. W. Bro. Fitzgerald Tisdall, Masonic editor of Pomeroy's Democrat, he at once volunteered to assume the labor of this department, and during all the time of our incapacity, he has, in addition to his own engagements, performed the labor of keeping up the usual quantity of original and miscellaneous matter, which the patrons of the Dispatch expect to find as each issue is laid before them. For this unsolicited act of real kindness on the part of one not himself in the enjoyment of the rudest health, we tender our warmest and most grateful thanks, and beg to assure him that while we live, no vicissitude of time or circumstances shall ever make us forget this real exhibition of friendship and brotherly love. Nay, more, we feel quite certain that whoever loves us—and they are not a few—will feel an impulse of kindness toward the brother who so signally helped us when we could not help ourself.—J. W. Simons, in Dispatch.

Is it Hele or Hail?

I have no doubt that many, like myself, have noticed how frequently an initiate is perplexed when called upon to pronounce the word hele, in one part of the ceremony through which he is passed. He generally exhibits hesitation before he utters it, and then pronounces it as if he were not sure that he had caught the word aright. His perplexity is sometimes increased by the W. M. pronouncing the word as written hail or hale—a pronunciation which some are ready to defend. I doubt not that you agree with me in deeming it very desirable, not only that our ritual should be correctly recited, but that it should be correctly understood—that the meaning of every phrase and of every word should be thoroughly apprehended. Now, I do not think this is the case in relation to the word in question.

What does the verb hele really mean? I dismiss the words hail and hale as being wholly out of question. I believe the only Anglo-Saxon word so pronounced is hael, which we spell hale—healthy, sound robust, &c.; or when used as a salutation, spelt in English, hail, implying, probably, a good wish, as welcome! or, as we sometimes say, "all right." A "hail-fellow" is a companion—a good fellow. But neither of these words can have reference to secrecy, or concealment. Is not, then, the word we should use, the old Saxon word hele, from helan, to cover? From this same word we get our hell, which signifies a covered or hidden place, and answers to the Hebrew sheol and the Greek hades, both translated hell in our Bibles, although it is plain, in almost every place in which the word is used, that it simply means the unseen or hidden place in which departed spirits are kept, and not a place of punishment, which the word is now used to denote. Thus the (Ps. cxxxix., 8,) "if I make my bed in hell, thou art there." If hele be the word we should use, and the meaning is to cover, I see why our outer guard is called a tyler—his duty being to cover, that is, to hide or conceal, the entrance to the lodge. This word, to cover, is often thus used to signify to protect, to guard the body; as also to hide, conceal, or put out of sight. So Job says, "If I cover my transgressions, as Adam;" that is, if, like Adam, I try to conceal my transgressions. In like manner the Psalmist says, "If I say darkness shall cover me," which is immediately explained by, "the darkness hideth not from Thee." Thus the tyler covers, conceals, or protects the doors of the lodge. Down to the present day, I believe, the meaning of the old word is retained in Cornwall where the tylers, or tilers, are called hellyers, or coverers, because they cover in the roof of the house. But, then, why have we hele, conceal, and never reveal? Some say these are synonyms, heaped on one another to render the injunction more impressive. I do not think so; firstly, because an accumulation of words tends to weaken a sentence rather than to give strength or emphasis; and, secondly, because the construction of the sentence will not justify that assumption. Hele, conceal, or never reveal, might do so; but these words conjoined by and certainly will not. The conjunctive conjunction denotes that to reveal is something in addition to what goes before. Why, then, are the three words used? What is the difference in their meaning? Will this do?

1. HELE, to cover or hide; that is, never to permit certain things to be seen.

2. CONCEAL, to be so cautious in our words that even the most astute or quick witted stranger shall never be able to discern or discover what is not proper to be made known.

3. NEVER REVEAL, to abstain from making known, in any way, what is entrusted to us as Masons.

These suggestions are offered with all deference, and in the hope of eliciting something on the subject from some of our erudite brethren.——London Freemason.

What is Freemasonry?

Very many definitions have been given to the term Freemasonry, all agreeing in one essential particular, declaring it to be a system of morality, the teaching of which makes men better and happier, and leads them to live while on earth with a reference to an eternal life after death. We give below a few definitions by different men, which cannot fail to prove of interest to all Craftsmen. "Freemasonry is a beautiful system of morality, veiled in allegory, and illustrations by symbols."—Hemming.

"Freemasonry is an establishment founded on the benevolent intention of extending and conferring mutual happiness upon the best and truest principles of moral life and social virtue."—Calcott.

"Freemasonry is an institution calculated to benefit mankind."—Andrew Jackson.

"From its origin to the present hour, in all its vicissitudes, Masonry has been the steady unvarying friend of man."—Rev. Erastus Burr.

"Freemasonry is an order whose leading star is philanthropy, and whose principles inculcate an unceasing devotion to the cause of virtue and morality."—La Fayette.

"The grand object of Masonry is to promote the happiness of the human race."—Washington.

"Masonry is an art, useful and extensive, which comprehends within its circle every branch of useful knowledge and learning, and stamps an indelible mark of pre-eminence on its genuine professors, which neither chance, power nor fortune can bestow."—Preston.

Grand Lodge Iowa.

The Most Worshipful, the Grand Lodge of Iowa, of A. F. and A. Masons, met at the Opera House in Davenport, Tuesday June 6th. Officers present:

John Scott, Grand Master.
W. P. Allen, Deputy Grand Master.
O. P. Waters, Senior Grand Warden.
J. W. Gustine, Junior Grand Warden.
J. W. Wilson, Grand Treasurer.
T. S. Parvin, Grand Secretary.
W. B. Langridge, Deputy Grand Secretary.
Rev. I. K. Fuller, Grand Chaplain.
Geo. B. Corkhill, Grand Orator.
Wm. V. Lucas, Grand Senior Deacon.
P. C. Wright, Grand Junior Deacon.
Theodore Schreiner, Grand Tyler.
Henry C. Nutt, Senior Grand Steward.
Geo. B. Van Saun, Junior Steward.
Jacob L, Chase, Junior Grand Steward.
J. B. Hatch, Grand Sword Bearer.
Henry R. Kendig, Grand Pursuviant.

The Past officers present were as follows:

Past G. Masters, T. S. Parvin, A. R. Cotton, J. R. Hartsock.

Past S. G. Wardens, John Bell, J. L. Enos.

Past J. G. Wardens, Horace Tuttle, J. M. Griffiths, O. H. Watson, W. J. Law, A. R. West, Z. C. Luse.

Past Grand Treasurers, Wm. Leffingwell, C. S. Ellis, W. E. Woodward, W. F. Kidder, J. W. Jamison.

Grand Master Scott then delivered his annual address. Bro. Scott was formerly a confrere of M. W. Bro. Morris of Kentucky, and made a fine executive during his two years Grand Mastership in Iowa.

Report of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence by Bro. U. D. Taylor, laying before the Grand Lodge an epitome of the doings of the Craft throughout the world, and other very useful and interesting matters on various subjects, presented and referred.

Breth. Parvin and Hartsock were appointed a committee to introduce Breth. Albert Pike, Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, A. and A. Rite of the Southern Jurisdiction, and Past Grand Master H. G. Reynolds, of Illinois, who were announced to be waiting and desirous of visiting the Grand Lodge. The distinguished visitors were duly introduced, warmly greeted by Grand Master Scott, and assigned seats of distinction in the Grand Lodge. This greeting was cordially and eloquently accepted in appropriate responses by the visiting brothers.

On motion of M. W. Bro. Guilbert, the following resolution was adopted.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to prepare and report at the next grand annual communication a working plan for the erection and carrying into active operation a home for the widows and orphans of indigent Masons.

Eighteen charters were granted, carrying the number up to 300.

GRAND OFFICERS INSTALLED.

Grand Master, O. P. Waters, Muscatine; J. M. Griffiths, Deputy;——Kendig, Senior Grand Warden; J. W. Gustine, Junior Grand Warden; J. C. Copp, Burlington, Grand Treasurer; T. S. Parvin, Iowa City, Grand Secretary; Rev. J. S. Anderson, Grand Chaplain; J. W. Corkhill, Grand Orator; Alfred Wingate, Senior Grand Deacon; G. B. Van Saun, Junior Grand Deacon; Theodore Schreiner, Grand Tyler; C. H. Shaw, Grand Marshal; P. C. Daum, Sword Bearer; J. H. Bolton, Senior Grand Steward; W. P. Crawley, Junior Grand Steward; C. S. Dunn, Grand Pursuivant.

Col. Geo. B. Corkhill delivered a very able address.

The newly elected Grand Master, M. W. Bro. O. P. Waters, is a Mason and citizen of high standing, and makes the third or fourth Grand Master elected from Muscatine. The first was the venerable Father Humphrey, who was in attendance, and the second was the Illustrious Bro. T. S. Parvin, still as active and efficient as ever. The Grand Lodge was organized in 1843, and with the exception of the one year he served as Grand Master, he has been Grand Secretary from the organization. As a law-giver, Bro. Parvin has few equals. The youthful appearance of the Grand Lodge under the gallant and courtly Guilbert is fast giving way to more thoughtful faces and grayer heads. The schools of instruction have been discontinued, and the meetings of the Grand Lodge are fixed at Davenport until 1875.

This able body assembled June 13, in the hall of Kilbourne Lodge No. 3, formerly Milwaukee, changed in honor of R. W. Byron Kilbourn, who fitted up a spacious and elegant lodge-room with convenient ante-rooms, and leased it for 99 years to the lodge for one dollar per year.

M. W. Bro. Gabriel Bouck, presiding, R. W. Bro. W. T. Palmer, Grand Secretary. Col. Bouck is the son of Gov. Bouck of New York, has served in the State Legislature, is an able lawyer, witty, abrupt, ingenious, eccentric and original. He cannot copy, nor can any live man imitate him.

The body was double the size it was when we visited it in 1866.

OFFICERS ELECTED.

Grand Master—H. L. Palmer, Milwaukee.

Senior Grand Warden—D. C. Lamb, Fond du Lac.

Junior Grand Warden—G. W. Robinson, Montello.

Grand Treasurer—W. H. Hiner, Fond du Lac.

Grand Secretary—W. T. Palmer, Milwaukee.

The Grand Master made the following appointments:

Deputy Grand Master—S. A. Pease, Montello.

Grand Chaplain—Rev. J. O. M. Hewitt, Waupun.

Grand Senior Deacon—C. F. G. Collins, Beloit.

Grand Junior Deacon—G. E. Hoskinson, Green Bay.

Grand Marshal—S. N. Dickinson, Sparta.

Grand Sword Bearer—S. W. Fuller, Hudson.

Grand Pursuivant—H. B. Coons, Potosi.

Grand Steward—R. Bates, Racine.

Grand Steward—C. H. Holmes, Jefferson.

Grand Tyler—Ebenezer Clewitt, Woodstock.

The Foreign Correspondence was placed in charge of R. W. Bro. John Turner, of Mauston.

In 1849 occurred the memorable division of the Grand Lodge of New York; in June, 1852, Henry L. Palmer appeared on the floor in what was known as the Willard Body, and introduced resolutions which were adopted, and were years afterwards, the basis of peace. In 1852 we find him Grand Master of Wisconsin, and during his administration of two years, a constitution was adopted which has been modeled after by a majority of the Grand Lodges in the Union. It has never been excelled. After filling with great credit the positions of Grand High Priest, Grand Puissant, and Grand Commander, in 1865 he was elected Grand Master of Templars in the United States. Now, with remarkable unanimity, the Grand Lodge calls him to preside over its manhood as he did over its youth. And she may be proud of the event, for he has no superior.

On Friday, the Grand Lodge laid the corner-stone of the Jewish Temple, Emanu-el. The Grand Lodge was preceded by the lodges and chapters in the city, accompanied by the Jewish societies, firemen, county and city authorities, and were escorted by Knights Templar in full array under the command of Rt. Em. Sir A. V. H. Carpenter, Grand Commander.

The display was very fine, and all Milwaukee saw it. Grand Master Palmer, assisted by his Grand Officers, laid the corner-stone, and Dr. Lienthal delivered an elegant address.

The Grand Lodge of Connecticut.

The annual communication of the M. W. Grand Lodge of Connecticut was held in this city, commencing on the morning of May 10th, and continuing two days. The most important action of this body in which the Craft at large is interested, was its recognition of the Grand Lodge of Quebec.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: James L. Gould, Bridgeport, Grand Master; Wm. W. Lee, Meriden, Deputy Grand Master; John L. Devotion, Norwich, Senior Grand Warden; E. B. Rowe, New London, Junior Grand Warden; George Lee, Hartford, Grand Treasurer; J. K. Wheeler, Hartford, Grand Secretary; C. W. Stearns, Middletown, Grand Senior Deacon; Dwight Phelps, Winsted, Grand Junior Deacon; Chas. R. Fish, Hartford, Grand Chaplain; David F. Lane, of New Hartford, Grand Marshal; H. E. Patten, Hartford, Tyler.

The following Committee on By-Laws was appointed: J. N. Lewis, Greenwich; C. M. Hatch, Bridgeport; R. C. Narramore, Birmingham.

Anti-Masonry.

In 1830 a powerful anti-Masonry party attempted to overthrow the Order. It was declared that the Masons had killed a man for making known the secrets of the Craft. Designing partisans encouraged and directed the excitement and sought by the whirlwind of passion to be carried into the seats of political preferment and power. The public mind was excited to such an extent that the anti-Masonic party numbered 100,000 voters in the State of New York; almost divided the vote of Pennsylvania; was very powerful in Massachusetts; obtained control of the State government of Vermont, extended to Ohio and others of the Western States, was used with great vigor against Mr. Clay.

Nor must it be supposed that these partisans were solely the people of vulgar prejudices. They numbered many men of social influence, respectable talents and of large capital among them. But the excitement was unfounded; the malignant charges had no ground to sustain them, and this powerful party, like a thundergust, discharged its volleys and then was dissolved, leaving the Masonic sky clearer than before.

Those who had belonged to this party soon became ashamed of their weakness and folly, and sought to cover up their defenceless antecedents. But it is evident that if there had been the shadow of proof of the vile charges made against the Fraternity it would have been overwhelmed in the maelstrom of an indignant public opinion.

As it was, it proved to be the crucible in which the true gold of Masonry was tried. Our Order came out purified of its dross, and to-day it challenges criticism, and commands the admiration of all the discriminating and candid among men.

In vain have the Finneys, the Blanchards and other fool-hardy fanatics tried to preach up another anti-Masonic crusade. They have, by the effort, only brought themselves into a shameful notoriety, and secured, as the reward of their labors, the contemptuous smile of the Craft, and the horse-laugh of an amused public.

He who affirms that Masonry is antagonistic to liberty, or the happiness of mankind, must impeach the integrity of Washington, whose name and fame are forever associated with every principle of constitutional freedom. He was the first Grand Master of Masons in the United States, as he was the first President of the Republic. He was buried with Masonic honors.

The caviller must arraign the virtue of La Fayette, who was made a Mason in 1777, at Morristown, New Jersey, General Washington presiding as Worshipful Master. He must question the honor of Benj. Franklin—of General Warren—of Chief Justice Marshall—of Henry Clay—of General Jackson—and of thousands of others of America's noblest sons.—Kentucky Freemason.

Application of the Title "Solomon."

The name of Solomon has been often used, but chiefly to designate the wise. We find in history the following application: "Solomon of England" was bestowed upon Henry VII., the first of the Tudor Kings of England, whose reign, conducted upon pacific principles, was, upon the whole, beneficial to his country, and gave an opportunity for the nation to flourish by the development of its resources. The same title has been satirically awarded to James I. (1566—1625), on account of his pedentry and puerility. Buchanan, his instructor, said that he "made him a pedant because he could make nothing else of him." The appellation of "Solomon of France" was conferred upon Charles V., who was also called "the Wise." The same title was bestowed upon Louis IX., or St. Louis (1215—1270), who summoned to his council the most able and virtuous men of his kingdom, put an end to many ecclesiastical abuses, and was always intent upon promoting the happiness of his subjects.—Heptasoph.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

IS PUBLISHED BETWEEN THE FIRST AND FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH.

Price per year, - - - - - $1.25.

THE TROWEL is the oldest Masonic journal in America now published in its present form, and is again presented to the Masonic Fraternity for renewed and generous support.

It has ever been the organ of the masonic people and their families—such it will remain. It has been the friend and advocate of law, order, morality, intelligence—of improvement, progress and toleration, and will continue so to be.

It is now printed on new type, superior paper, and will give the latest Masonic tidings.

But three pages of the paper will be given to advertisements; but, if sufficient inducement be offered, a cover will be added and made a part of the paper for that purpose.

Advertisements for one month, payable in advance; for three months, payable one-half in advance and the remainder after the first insertion; for six months or longer, payable one-third in advance, the remainder quarterly.

The space usually occupied by eight lines of nonpareil type, solid, will be regarded as one square, or, twelve squares to each column.

Equitable charges will be made for changes, alterations or withdrawals.

Orders for advertisements from abroad should state how much space is desired.

Editorial notices will in all cases be written by ourself, and charged for at the rate of one dollar for every ten words or less, payable in advance. The request for editorial notice should be accompanied by the money for the number of words desired, in no case exceeding fifty.

Any one who fails to pay bills when due without an acceptable excuse, will have his or their advertisement thrown out with an editorial notice to that effect. Suspension of business is a sufficient excuse.

No advertisement received from irresponsible houses nor for an immoral or disreputable business, and I reserve to myself the right to reject all such.

No one is authorized to receive any advertisement for me except by my written authority, nor will any advertisement be received without the written authority of the party ordering it.

Judaism and Christianity.

All legal documents in America recognize the Christian religion in matters of chronology. The inhabitants of the United States, are in theory a Christian people. Among them are many who are not Christians in theory, but who are good people for all that.

The Masonic Society is not religious in the sense of any creed. It is religious in the sense that no atheist can be made a Mason, and that all Masons should believe in God, be good men and true, and obey the moral law. This rule will admit men of almost all countries, sects and religions.

The Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons in the United States is, in belief and theory, a Christian Fraternity. Of its membership, full two-fifths, and probably one-half, are members of Christian churches. Four-fifths, and more, probably nine-tenths, adhere to and in some way believe in Christianity. Those who do not, with very few exceptions, pass under the names of Hebrews, Israelites, or Jews, all meaning pretty nearly the same as now used. In matters of religious faith, Christians hold to the faith of the Israelites up to the commencement of the Christian era. The Jewish history, the Psalms of David, the writings of Solomon, and the utterances of the prophets, are as dear to the Christian as to the Hebrew. All his religious belief, hopes and faith are based upon them. Without them both Hebrew and Christian are without hope. The Hebrew is still looking for "One mighty to save." A cosmopolitan, busy, industrious, hopeful, intelligent, but full of courage and endurance, while wrongly treated, and despised without reason, his thoughts are towards Jerusalem, and upon Him who is to gather the chosen race in the land of Palestina. In all that we have to say, we will neither underrate nor show disrespect for a people now a nation scattered through many nations, ready for the call that shall again restore to them the land desecrated by Saracen and infidel.

The Christian believes that Jesus of Nazareth is his Redeemer and Saviour. This the Hebrew does not believe. We must in Masonry, as in other things, take men as we find them. Take them with their honest beliefs, their national prejudices, their habits of life, their tastes, education and associations. The Christian does not expect the Jew to vary from his form of prayer, and would have no respect for him if he did.

Christian Masons do not demand that ritualistic prayers in Masonic services shall be framed to please them. They never have been. And as symbolic Masonry is designed for good men of "every country, sect and opinion," they should not be so framed.

But in our services, work and instructions, in symbolic lodges in countries eminently Christian, certain phrases and expressions have been introduced recognizing or alluding to Christianity; they were not wisely introduced, but to eradicate them, the prejudices of good men would be disturbed, conscientious convictions would be rudely assailed, and a club placed in the hands of our foes that would be used with terrible effect.

A great many Protestant clergymen—quite two-thirds in the United States—belong to the Masonic Fraternity. Many of them are both devoted Christians and ardent Masons. When they can they attend Masonic meetings, especially in the rural lodges. They are usually invited to conduct the devotional services of the lodge. In doing so they do as they do elsewhere. To this our Hebrew brethren object. Why? Let us state a thing or two. We never heard a Hebrew join in what is termed the Lord's Prayer? Can any one of them give a good reason why they should not? We answer boldly, No! There is not a single utterance in that model form of prayer, but what agrees with the Hebrew theology and law, and no allusion is made to the author. Let well enough alone.

What is unwisely introduced into our work, does no harm. It pleases some, gratifies many, and hurts none. If a clergyman be present, it is discourteous not to invite him to conduct or participate in religious services, and good breeding requires that he should be permitted to conduct his portion of the services in his own way. In that let clergymen be governed by their own sense of duty.

At the same time we hope that none will take such occasions to make a parade of their Christianity, or to foist their notions where they are evidently distasteful.

While every Mason may be fully persuaded in his own mind, he should ever remember that every other Mason may do the same. If brethren will strive to please each other and to communicate happiness, the way will be found smooth and plain.

The foregoing thoughts have been suggested by an article communicated to the columns of the Dispatch, in which demands are made accompanied by threats. This communication comes from a Hebrew, who, in this matter is displaying devotion to his faith, and no devotion to Masonry only as it serves the purposes of his religious belief.

Americans may be reasoned with, and with time, patience and perseverance, can be reasoned out of their prejudices, and often times, will yield their serious convictions in order to advance a common good. But they can never be driven. Threats are poor arguments and worse weapons. And when the veil is so thin, that the whole purpose is apparent, it is time for both Hebrew and Christian to cease clamoring over matters which do no manner of harm.

Annual Elections Again.

In the June TROWEL we set forth reasons why the time of elections ought to be made uniform. To our remarks TRAVELER makes some exceptions and urges that the elections be held in June, and that the time of meeting of the Grand Lodge be in June also. Our readers are referred to the communcation itself in another column. We also urged as one of the reasons for election in December, that the Grand Master could select his committees from the Grand Secretary's list, based somewhat upon his own acquaintance more intelligently than where they are part elected in June and part in December. In answer to us, TRAVELER evidently assumes that no returns are made except the annual reports made in September. Masters and Secretaries of several years' service will readily see where he misapprehends.

The return of work, membership and the status of the lodge generally, is made up to the 31st day of August annually. The Grand Master does not rely on these returns for his committees. But the law requires that when an election is held for lodge officers immediate report shall be made to the Grand Secretary of the names of the Master, Wardens and Secretary. No other names are required, because correspondence and official communications are directed to the Master or Secretary, as necessity or official propriety may dictate; the Wardens may be required, one or other or both, to act as Master and their names are returned with the Master and Secretary for that reason.

These names are entered in a lodge officer's book by the Grand Secretary, and the work of collecting these names, registering them, correcting the lists and communicating them to the Grand Master, is not only an important but a laborious and exacting part of his duty.

Now, in regard to the time of holding Grand Lodge meetings. We are, as we long have been, in favor of the last Tuesday in May or first Tuesday of June, about which we may have something to say in a future number. But this need not affect our argument in favor of elections in December, but rather strengthens it. If the Grand Lodge held its session in June, the officers returning from Grand Lodge, acting from their own knowledge and experience, would be able to give efficacy and force to the edicts and rulings of the Grand Lodge, and their successors, following in their footsteps, would gather experience for their duties in the annual assemblies of the Craft. From these lists returned in December from all the lodges, the Grand Master could make up committees from the ablest brethren, and select wisely with reference to the duties to be performed. It would be the best possible arrangement that could be made. Wisconsin and Iowa profit largely by it.

Anti-Mason, Beat this !

Sundry anti-Masons we wot of are acquainted with one Robert Deatherage, of Rio township, in Knox county, a self-poised, thinking, mathematical brother, who has several years presided in Oxford Lodge No. 367, and has respect for principles that produce results. Among his fellow farmers he is counted truthful, honest and rich, and among his brethren blameless and worthy. But if anyone should take him for what the Times calls a rural bumkin or country innocent, they would be sadly floored in their calculations. In 1869, a couple of pork dealers bought his hogs and lost on them. Last year they wanted his hogs again and offered him twenty-five cents below market price. They knew very well that he was constantly posted and did not expect to get his hogs below the usual rate. He studied a few moments and observed:

"I believe you lost on the stock I sold you last year?"

"We did," was the reply.

"Well," says Robert, "you may have these at your offer."

Meeting the dealers awhile afterwards he asked them if they had made anything on his hogs. They replied that they had.

"Did you make up your loss last year?" he asked.

"Yes," they replied.

"Did you get your interest?"

"We did."

"All right then," said Robert, and went his way.

This is practically "giving none offense," and knowing Robert personally long before and ever since he and we were elected on the same county ticket, we rejoice at the opportunity of placing on record a noble deed, related to us on the cars recently by one of his neighbors—a deed which every Mason might profitably imitate. As to anti-Masons, it is of no use to advise them; they prefer to believe a lie. We will omit the consequence.

The History of Springfield, Illinois,

By J. C. Power, Esq., is a very attractive and readable pamphlet, of 106 pages, with a preliminary historical sketch; history of the Ordinance of 1787; has a statement concerning Springfield and Sangamon county; a court house and State Capitol history; a good railroad and internal improvement article; a map showing roads diverging from Springfield; a brief account of street railways; remarks respecting topography, population, geology, coal and coal mining, water works, gas, sewerage, churches, schools, benevolent institutions, public libraries, public buildings, United States, State, county and city officers, business houses and firms, hotels, lumber and marble yards, newspapers, mills, breweries, elevators, manufacturing establishments and concludes with a general review and notices of the Board of Trade and the Lincoln Monument. Some of the articles were prepared by Bro. H. C. Watson, especially those in regard to printing houses and city schools. For the notice of THE MASONIC TROWEL we are under many obligations. In this matter Mr. Power has displayed tact, ability and good bottom, and has avoided all flummery, plumage and gas. We understand that he is preparing a history of the Lincoln Monument for which he is abundantly qualified.

Favors.

Thanks to E. Sir James H. Miles, Grand Recorder, for full set proceedings of Grand Commandery: also to Bro. Leon Hyneman, Philadelphia, for Vols. 1, 2 and 3, Masonic Mirror, 1852, 3 and 4, with several valuable plates, eleven pamphlets containing proceedings of both Grand Lodges in New York, with other historical documents; several pamphlets, Dermott's Ahiman Rezon, World's Masonic Register and volumes 1 and 2 Masonic Library; a very valuable contribution: to Bro. Protective Life Insurance.

It will be remembered by our January readers that we published in the initial number of The Trowel for this year the "Constitution and Laws of the Masonic Protective Association of Edgar county, Illinois." This we did without endorsement or opinion, in order that our brethren might see the general principles upon which protective societies are based; while the details may differ, the general principle is the same. The plan, we believe, was first started in Georgia; the object is to secure what is equivalent to life insurance among persons of like employment, profession or association, at nominal cost, subject to a certain assessment in case of each death, to be limited in number, with the expectation of permanence by filling vacancies as they occur. Our brethren at Princeton have organized a similar association, limited to 5,000, with fair prospects, of which Bro. Geo. Crossley is President, and Bro. L. R. Jerome is Secretary and General Agent. We most cheerfully commend these brethren to the fraters of the Mystic Tie, and assure them that any inquiries or business will meet prompt attention. Send to Bro. L. R. Jerome for by-laws, applications or information.

The Grand Lodges of New York and Vermont have recognized the Grand Lodge of Quebec. The number of recognitions is now twenty-one.

Eastern Star in Illinois.

In the May issue of The Trowel, the numbers in Illinois, reached 69.

May 8: charter issued to Rose Croix No. 70, formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson at Newark, Kendall county; Bro. J. A. Freeman, W. P.; Lucy Freeman, W. M.; Maggie Johnson, A. M.; this charter has since been surrendered.

May 8: charter issued by Deputy to the York Chapter No. 71, at York, Clark county; Bro. Samuel B. Lake, W. P.; Mary Jackson, W. M.; Nancy Floyd, A. M.

May 8: charter issued by Deputy to Illiopolis Chapter No. 72, at Illiopolis, Sangamon county; Bro. Hon. Miles H. Wilmot, W. P.; Elizabeth Mitchell, W. M.; Elizabeth H. Addams, A. M.

June 3: charter issued to Martha Washington Chapter No. 74, at Chester.; formed by Bro. H. W. Hubbard; Bro. Hon. James Douglas, W. P.; Lucinda M. Jones, W. M.; Alice Shannon, A. M.

The Editor of The Trowel is Deputy Supreme Patron for Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Wyoming, Dakotah, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Michigan. Correspondence is invited.

Sorry to Part.

Bro. Frank Sloan commenced work in The Trowel office as a compositor, remained in it until the first day of this month, and for nearly two years has been foreman. During the time he has become a Master Mason and a reliable, worthy member of Tyrian Lodge; has married and now dandles two stout sons upon his knee. From this he has betaken himself to the proprietorship and management of the Observer, in the thriving, live town of Mt. Pulaski, at the crossing of the railroads from Springfield to Gilman and from Peoria to Decatur, in the adjoining county of Logan.

Frank is a good fellow, honest, industrious and economical, and with fair patronage will succeed. We are sorry to part with him but we congratulate him on his prospects and wish him abundant success.

Geo. H. Laflin.

We announced in our last, that Bro. Geo. H. Laflin had retired from the firm of Laflin, Butler & Co., and that Messrs. J. W. Butler & Co. succeeded to the business; in this we stated what appeared from the circular which came to us first. But, somewhat to our surprise and greatly to our gratification, we find George with his brother, back at 44 State street, Chicago, in his old quarters alongside of Rounds & Kane, in the old paper business, good as new, with enlarged experience, abundant means, and a disposition to accommodate. The card of the new firm appears in this number, and we ask all our friends to give them a call.

Plankinton House.

We had not visited Milwaukee since 1866, until our recent visit to the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin. We are familiar with the growth and expansion of Chicago, but Milwaukee has increased to a city of 80,000; 100,000 is claimed by some. The population has more than doubled within five years. We naturally went to the far-famed Newhall House, but upon meeting our old and valued acquaintance, Hon. J. P. C. Cottrill, we found him and family boarding with an elder brother at the Plankinton House, a new, model, first-class hotel, with a superior table, and every accommodation that can be desired. We knew the father, Mahlon Cottrill before he kept the Pavilion Hotel in Montpelier, Vermont, and the present landlord of the Plankinton was the pet of the guests and inmates when we left there in 1837.

Hon. J. W. English.

Another good man, able advocate, learned lawyer, and a staunch friend and tried Freemason has left our Illinois State, and formed a connection with a relative at Leavenworth. Brother English is Illinois born and bred, was a member of the late Constitutional Convention, and was prominent for a position on the Supreme Bench. He is a Past Master of Carrollton Lodge No. 50, and Past H. P. of Carrollton Chapter. What we Illinoisans have lost, Leavenworth and Kansas have gained. Yet on the early side of life, we look for a career and success alike honorable to his name and the State whence he hails.

Very Gratifying.

The eighteen volumes of the Freemason's Magazine, Boston, contributed by Bro. C. W. Moore to our library, with the four volumes contributed by our son-in-law, making 22 in all, are invaluable to us, and so long as we continue to edit The Trowel are unpurchasable. We now lack Vols. 1,2 3, 4, 12 &, 13, to make a complete set up to Vol. 28. Who has them to spare? Upon what terms can they, or any of them be had?

Not Common.

The present Grand Master of Wisconsin served in the same position for the years 1852, 3—4. The brother was elected Grand Secretary in 1861, and still fills the same position with credit to himself and honor to the Fraternity.

The 24th at Blueville and Edinburg.

Notwithstanding the appearance of unfavorable weather, a large concourse gathered at Edinburg station on the railroad from Pana to Springfield, and had services in a grove near by.

The Lodge at Blueville was out in full force and in splendid regalia. The brethren attended from Taylorville, Rochester, Springfield, Grove City, and Mt. Auburn, and listened to an oration from Rev. D. F. Carnahan of this city, and Rev.——— ———of Ohio. Dr. Houston reports the addresses as very able. It was a pic-nic affair, and the occasion was very enjoyable.

Blueville Lodge is a live body of men, and bids fair to be one of the strongest lodges in the State. We wish the brethren and the lodge abundant union and peace.

Festival at Mt. Pulaski.

Our good brethren at Mt. Pulaski had a rousing good time on the 24th. The meeting was held in Capps' Park, and a splendid oration was delivered by Rev. D. P. Bunn, P. G. Chaplain. Our Foreman, Bro. Frank Sloan, was present, and reports that of Masons, with their families, nearly one thousand were present. Delegations were in attendance from Illiopolis and other towns. The weather was pleasant, and the Eastern Star Chapter lent attraction to the services. Enough to eat of the very best, and stacks left.

The Twenty-Fourth at Woodhull.

Bro. W. H. Widney presided; Bro. J. Tower was Marshal; Bro. C. Bunce, Assistant; R. W. Bro. Scott, of Sheffield, was Orator; and effective addresses were also delivered by Rev. W. C. Wagner, of Woodhull, and Rev. A. Beeler, of Millersburg. Masonry received a forward movement.

Twenty-Fourth at Golconda.

The free and accepted brethren had a nice pic-nic, at Golconda, whereat M. W. Bro. Thomas J. Picket, of Paducah, Kentucky, was present.

The colonel loves to come over to the Illinois shore. And well he may, for he was ever a favorite among our people and brethren.

W. Bro. G. W. Lininger.

One prominent inducement to visit the Iowa Grand Lodge, was to meet our old Illinois brethren and among them the worthy brother whose name heads this article.

We learned with much regret that he passed through Davenport on the second day of the session with the remains of a loved sister, taken from Council Bluffs to Peru, in this State, for interment. We mourn with him, as will all who know him.

Was it Ever Beat?

Col. Bouck, the retiring Grand Master of Wisconsin, was elected Grand Master in 1860. When the news reached Oshkosh that Sumter had been fired upon, in the spring of 1861, he was in the midst of an important trial. The trial closed and the next morning he presented a company for service to the Governor at Madison. So it was told to us.

Exhausted.

Our issue for May is entirely gone, and not over two-thirds of the subscribers at the time of the fire have been sent us. We will now commence to send new and old subscribers, the June number, of which we have about 1,200 on hand. Those who desire that number should not delay, for none will be left by the first of August, and we cannot afford to reprint.

Marble Bust.

St. Andrews Lodge, Boston, has ordered a marble bust of R. W. Bro. Charles W. Moore, to be placed in the Grand Lodge room. This is a just tribute to the veteran editor, and distinguished Grand Secretary. Bro. Moore was Master of St. Andrews in 1833, and is now its oldest Past Master and member. We thank Bro. Moore for a photograph of the bust, and shall preserve it as a sacred memento.

Thirty-Third Degree.

During the late meeting of the Council of Deliberation the thirty-third degree was conferred by Deputy Hurlbut upon Ill. Breth. H. N. Hurlbut and Warren G. Purdy, of Occidental Consistory, Chicago, and Jacob W. Brewer, of Monmouth Consistory, elected at the last meeting of the Supreme Council.

Salem, Oregon.

The session of the Grand Lodge, June 18, was held at Salem, a city of 4,000 people, on the Willamette River, in the valley of the same name. It has two Masonic lodges, one R. A. Chapter, a Lodge of Perfection and a chapter of the Eastern Star, all flourishing.

The Philosophy of Freemasonry

Is a new work by Bro. Jacob Ernst, of Cincinnati; 316 pages, library style. We have not had time to peruse it, but can assure our readers that the character, culture and piety of the venerable author are a sufficient guarantee of its excellence. Price, $1.25. We will take orders at THE TROWEL office.

New Masonic Books.

MASONIC TRIALS is the title of a work prepared by Bro. Henry M. Look, Grand Visitor of Michigan. The author is not much known to fame beyond his own State until now. His book is of the ordinary form, 347 pages, on good paper and large type.

Trial in the lodge is treated in fifteen chapters, entitled, Of the Offense; Tribunal; Jurisdiction; Charges; Answer; Proofs; Argument; Deliberation; Judgment; Penalty; Appeals; New Trials; Restoration; Grand Lodge Trials; Powers of the Grand Master in Trials and Appeals.

Trials in chapter and commandery embrace, mainly the same topics.

Many flagrant Masonic offenses are mentioned; thirty two forms are given in lodge trials, and two in the chapter. The same forms used in lodge trials, can be used in chapter trials also. Fourteen forms are given for use in commandery. The book is the result of patient labor, thought and experience, and is particularly adapted to Michigan and New York, and with very few exceptions, is applicable and highly useful everywhere. It supplies a large want, and we hope it will be found in every lodge, chapter and commandery. Issued by the Masonic Publishing Company, 626 Broadway, New York. Bound in cloth, bevelled boards, gilt, Price $2.00. Orders taken at this office.

MASONIC SKETCHES AND REPRINTS, in two divisions, embracing "history of Freemasonry in York," and "unpublished records of the Craft," by Wm. Jas. Hughan.

The history of Freemasonry in York is by a master hand, and including notes and appendices is instructive and diverting; many rare old documents are brought to the light.

The unpublished records embrace matter taken from old record books in Cornwall, documents in the possession of the Grand Secretary of England, and from other authentic sources. Many of them are ancient and one is as far back as 1169. Some of them are quaint and amusing; all are interesting.

Published by Masonic Publishing Company 626 Broadway New, York, Pride $3.00. Orders taken at MASONIC TROWEL Office.

FROM R. W. Bro. Ed. C. Parmalee, Grand Secretary of Colorado, we learn that Grand Master Teller of Colorado has issued a dispensation to twelve brethren of Salt Lake City to form a lodge there, known as Argenta Lodge U. D. with Breth. Ebenezer H. Snow, W. M. Elias B. Zabriski, S. W., and Martin K. Harkness, J. W.

A VERY large number of subscribers at the time of the fire, are not yet reported. We want them immediately.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—Isa. 8, 20.

Decisions by Grand Master of Illinois.

20. It is the right of a brother against whom charges have been preferred to testify upon the trial thereof.

21. No publicity should be given to the expulsion or suspension of a member pending an appeal.

22. A lodge cannot enforce a "tax" upon its members beyond the amount prescribed by the by-laws.

23. It is improper to use the seal of a lodge upon papers or letters of a personal character.

24. The right to visit a lodge is not absolute, it may be refused for good reasons.

25. A visiting brother is not obliged to exhibit a "traveling certificate" from either this or any other jurisdiction; no amount of documentary evidence is alone sufficient to prove one a Mason.

26. A lodge granting permission (upon request) to another to confer the second or third degree relinquishes jurisdiction, and the lodge receiving such permission must cast the ballot for the candidate.

27. The Master of a lodge is entitled to vote as a member; in the event of a tie it would be proper for him to cast an additional or deciding vote as Master.

28. Simply deposing an officer of a lodge from office does not affect his standing in his lodge nor his rights as a Mason.

29. Lodges U. D. have territorial jurisdiction co-equal with other lodges, which in effect is ceded to them by the lodges recommending their formation.

30. It is improper to permit the use of a lodge-room for a public meeting.

31. The time for holding regular meetings of a lodge is fixed by law, and as a lodge cannot suspend or annul a by-law, it cannot, therefore, close for a period beyond the time thus prescribed without a dispensation from the Grand Master.

32. An office is not vacated by permanent removal of the incumbent from jurisdiction. To accept resignation of an elected officer of a lodge and hold special election to fill vacancy requires authority of Grand Master.

33. When a lodge receives a petition from an applicant who resides beyond its jurisdiction without consent of proper lodge and the same is rejected, the lodge having lawful jurisdiction ought to duly consider the fact, but is not bound to ask consent of said rejecting lodge in order to receive and act upon petition of said applicant.

Annual Council of Deliberation of the A. and A. Rite.

In accordance with article 25 of the Constitution of 1867, of the A. and A. Rite of the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States of America, and at the notification of the Sovereign Grand Inspector General, Vincent L. Hurlbut, 33°, Deputy for the District of Illinois, the illustrious brethren of the grade of 33° and principal officers of the bodies belonging to the A. and A. Rite in this State, assembled on yesterday in the hall of Occidental Consistory, in the Masonic Temple, of this city, at 10 A. M.

Ill. Vincent L. Hurlbut 33°, Deputy, called the convention to order and appointed Ill. Gilbert R. Smith, 33°, of Occidental Consistory, Secretary.

The council was honored with the presence of Ill. Albert Pike, 33°, M. P. Sovereign Grand Commander of the A. and A. Rite for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States.

After presentation of the anual address of the Deputy and the appointment of a Committee on Credentials, the Council adjourned until 2:30 P. M.

At 12 noon a special session of the Supreme Council of the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States was convened, with the following officers:

Ill. Vincent L. Hurlbut, 33°, M. P. Sov. G. Com; Ill. H. C. Ranney, 33°, P. Lieut. G. Com.; Ill. H. A. Johnson, 33°, G. Min. of State; Ill. J. V. Z. Blaney, 33°, G. Treasurer General; Ill. H. G. Reynolds, 33°, G. Secretary General; Ill. L. L. Munn, 33°, G. Capt. of Guard; Ill. W. A. Stevens, 33°, G. Master of Ceremonies; Ill. C. H. Brower, 33°, G. Marshal General; Ill. R. H. Foss, 33°, G. Standard Bearer.

The grade of Sovereign Grand Inspector General, 33°, was conferred upon Ill. Bros. H. N. Hurlbut, 33°, Warren G. Purdy, 33°, of Occidental Consistory, and Jacob W. Brewer, 33°, of Monmouth Consistory.

At 2:30 P. M. the Council of Deliberation assembled pursuant to adjournment.

After sundry reports from committees, and transaction of other business partaining to and for the benefit of the Rite in this district, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year.

Ill. Vincent L. Hurlbut, 33°, Commander-in-Chief; Ill. Walter A. Stevens' 33°, Deputy G. Commander; Ill. Hosmer A. Johnson, 33°, 1st Lieutenant Commander; Ill. Jacob W. Brewer, 33°, 2d Lieutenant Commander; Ill. Harman G. Reynolds, 33°, G. Minister of State; Ill. Loyal L. Munn, 33°, G. Prior; Ill. George Thompson, 32°, G. Chancellor; Ill. Eugene B. Myers, 33°, G. Treasurer; Ill. Gilbert R. Smith, 33°, G. Secretary; Ill. Wm. M. Avise, 32°, G. Architect and Engineer; Ill. Samuel W. Ottenheimer, 32°, G. Hospitaller; Ill. Warren G. Purdy, 33°, G. Master of Ceremonies; Ill. E. L. Cronkrite, 33°, G. Standard Bearer; Ill. Wm. A. Warren, 33°, G. Captain of the Guard; Ill. H. F. Holcomb, 32°, G. Sentinel.

At 8 P. M. the 17th and 18th degrees were exemplified by Gourgas Chapter of Rose Croix, H. F. Holcomb, 32°, M. W. and P. M., and thus closed one of the best represented and most harmonious Masonic assemblies ever held in this city.—Times.

The Ballot in the Lodge.

Simple as the matter may appear, the use of the ballot in the lodge is not understood as it should be.

If the case brought before the Grand Lodge at its last communication should, as we believe it to be proved but one of many, it is highly necessary that the nature and use of the ballot should be clearly explained to the Craft.

In the case mentioned, the W. M., according to the evidence, instead of ruling his lodge in an impartial manner, constituted himself a partizan of the rejected candidate, and threw the weight and influence of his important position against the expressed objection, whether just or unjust, is immaterial to the candidate. If the ballot is to be maintained as an integral part of our constitutions, then it must be carried out in its entirety.

The founders of our laws exercised a wise discretion in introducing that clause in our regulations which gives power to a small minority to reject any applicant, however worthy, apparently, from a society amongst whom perfect harmony is desired to be maintained.

The ballot having been taken and proving unfavorable, we hold that beyond giving an opportunity for correcting an unintentional adverse vote, the subject should be finally considered disposed of, and that neither the Master, nor any other member of the lodge should question the propriety of the vote. It may be that from private knowledge on the part of even one member, there are circumstances connected with the character of the candidate which, though well known to the objector, it would not be prudent or proper to announce. Therein lies the whole power of the ballot, and for the rendering available such knowledge was at first established.

The Board of General Purposes (in the ranks of which may be numbered some of our best authorities on Masonic jurisprudence), in the case of the Lodge of Israel, strongly expressed their opinion upon this subject, by suspending the lodge and bringing under their censure both the Master and immediate Past Master of the lodge.

A circumstance recurs to our memory, which was recently related in a foreign Masonic journal. A candidate whose antecedents were of the most unobjectionable character, had, on the ballot been rejected, to the surprise of nearly all present.

One black ball in this case was sufficient to exclude. Inquiries were made as to the objectors, but without response. The feeling arose that some mistake had occurred. One by one the brethren disavowed their objection, till but one remained. This one, on being pressed for his reasons for voting against the candidate, felt it his duty to inform the W. M. that his objection was based on the fact, within his certain knowledge, that the candidate had been guilty of criminal intercourse with a near relative of his (the W. M.'s) own, and under these circumstances he could not conscientiously vote for him as a fit and proper person to become a Mason.

The ballot is open to many objections. In some cases it is used as the means of annoyance to an unpopular W. M., a small clique possessing the power to refuse the admittance of any candidate, worthy or unworthy, during the tenure of his office.

The Master has undoubtedly the power to reprimand his lodge for any dereliction of duty on the part of the members, but the ballot must be kept secret. Every Master should know sufficient of Masonic law, to convince him that every brother has an inherent right to exercise its free use, and that any interference on his part would be a usurpation of power that will never be tolerated by the supreme power of English Craft Masonry.—Magazine (London).

A Trip to Mt. Vernon—Laying the Corner Stone of the New Court House.

Wednesday, the 7th June, was the day appointed for laying the corner-stone of the new Court House at Mt. Vernon, Jefferson county. The weather was bright and beautiful and the rain of the day previous, laid the dust and cooled the atmosphere which had been so scorching.

The county authorities, assisted by Mt. Vernon Lodge No. 31, A. F. & A. M., had charge of affairs, and well did they discharge their duties.

At about 8 o'clock, the special train left Centralia carrying the delegation from here—composed of Cyrene Commandery, No. 23, K. T., under the charge of Sir Knight H. D. Buck, and about fifty ladies and gentlemen—including the officers of the Grand Lodge, aud others from Odin and other points above.

At Mt. Vernon the excursionists were met by the Committee of Reception, and soon the procession was formed, and under the escort of Cyrene Commandery at 12 o'clock marched to the Square, where preparations had been made for those who performed the ceremony. A large platform covered with awnings was provided, with seats, tables, &c. On the platform were seated the Supreme Judges—all being present except Chief Justice Breese, who was detained at home on account of ill health—and they were certainly a very serious looking body of men—and justify the remark, "sober as a judge." The exercises then began with music by a choir of ladies and gentlemen, citizens of Mt. Vernon.

Grand Master Dewitt C. Cregier, then prefaced the ceremonies by a few appropriate and well-timed remarks, and called upon the Grand Chaplain to ask the divine blessing. After which came some more good music, and then the ceremony of laying the corner-stone by the Grand Master. To say that he performed his duties in an impressive manner, would be saying what every one acquainted with his thorough understanding of the rules of Masonry would expect of him, and he did not disappoint them. Assisted by the Grand Officers—among whome we noticed Judge Hubbard, and Dr. DeLancey, of our city, T. J. Whitehead, of Odin, the ceremonies were performed in that creditable manner expected of the Craft. Gen. Chas. Black, of Champaign, then delivered a brief address, which was listened to with marked attention.

More music; benediction. The visiting Craft were then invited by the resident brethren to a basket dinner, in the shade of a neighboring grove, where the appetites of all—sharpened by the lateness of the dinner hour—were more than satisfied by the bounteous repast spread before them.—Centralia Sentinel.

Quick Work.

The session of the Grand Lodge of Indiana, recently held in this city, occupied but two days in transacting its business, being one day less than that of any previous session for many years past. The amount of business done was not less than is usually transacted, nor was it hurried through without due consideration.

Our present system for the dispatch of business is probably the best that can be found in any grand jurisdiction. The committees, which are required to perfrom the greater amount of labor, are appointed at the previous communication, and meet one week before the meeting of the Grand Lodge. They are thus enabled to investigate all matters coming before the Grand Lodge, and have their reports prepared for the first day of the session. By this means the expenses of the last communication were reduced about thirteen hundred dollars.

Shall the House at Home Come Down?

BY J. D. MISSIMER.

"Just as you say, Libbie! You can have it all your way!
Just as you've always had it—since our wedding day.
Do just as you see fit to do; I know you're always fair—
And if you want it, as you say, a new one shall be there.

Of course, the house is old and gray! but, Libbie, so are we!
'Twas good enough in by-gone years, for children, you and me;
But, never mind! I'll not object, the homestead shall come down,
Make way for one that's—well, such as we saw when last in town.

But somehow, Libbie, do you know, since we live here alone,
I've always thought that when I died, I'd die right here at home!
Yes, I'd lay me down when life was dull, earth's pathway fully worn,
And go to sleep in that same room—you know where I was born.

And, Libbie, covering all the roof, see! stands the poplar tree!
Think back just fifty years ago—it shaded you and me!
Where first we stood and listened, as the minister us two
United, made us one—'twas there I gave my heart to you.

Would that the old tree could be spared, the dearest in the land!
But if you wish it, too, cut down, it shall no longer stand!
Though somehow, Libbie, I must say, I always loved that tree,
For there it was, that you, as wife, were given unto me.

Still, I never did offend you, Libbie! We never yet had strife!
Nor is it I that's first to chill, to mar our goodly life;
We've lived together fifty years, as live the little birds,
And gave ten children to the world, and never once had words.

So don't be sad or gloomy, dear, look up and smile again.
Forgive me, Libbie, if by words, I've caused you any pain.
I merely spoke my heart to you; don't grieve, I'll say no more,
We'll tear the old home down, next week! just as I said before.

Yes, we'll tear them down next week! the house and tree and all!
But then what will the children say at Harvest Home this fall?
I feel for them! they'll stand and look and wonder in the sun,
And come to me and ask me how and why the thing was done.

They were all born here, where I was born! up in that little room,
Just where the roses on the sill are peeping out in bloom;
And when the old home is torn down, and swept away, I fear
We'll have no more re-unions 'round about us every year.

Come, do not weep for what I've said; no, no, now dry your tears!
Be mine again and love me still! Come, drive away your fears.
I know I wronged you thoughtlessly, indeed, I meant no harm,
And we'll tear the homestead down, to build a new one on the farm.

What's that you say? Not tear them down? The homestead and the tree?
Why bless you! Do you mean we'll let the dear old landmarks be?
You're smiling, Libbie. Art so glad? Because I love you three?
And you, my little darling, love us just as rev'rently?

And are you sure you're pleas'd as well? Were you but joking, dear?
I thought you wept because I spoke so harshly to you here.
And shall we here abide until our summons hence shall come?
Yes? Well then, Libbie, let us live content in the dear old home,

—Pomeroy's Democrat.

A Sagacious Dog.

Snapp, a blacksmith, owns two dogs. one a terrier, four or five years old, the other half shepherd and half cur, about twelve or fifteen years old, and consequently very feeble.

In the winter, between the hours of breakfast, and dinner, and supper, these two dogs may always be seen, perched up, just far enough from Snapp's forge to escape the sparks, but still near enough to keep warm. As soon as the hour for dinner comes, which they know even better than the apprentices in the shop—they are both off at a full run, each aiming to secure a place behind the warm kitchen stove, which is only large enough for one dog at a time. Now, the terrier being the most active, almost always gains the coveted place, leaving the poor old dog out in the cold. Now comes the curious part of my story.

The old dog being thus left out in the cold, one bitter day, put himself in a thinking attitude, and set his wits to work to devise some means by which he could get the terrier out of his coveted place. All at once an idea seemed to strike him. Taking advantage of the good "watch dog," qualities of the terrier, he made a feint toward the garden, barking furiously, as if some one was intruding at that point, when, true to his nature, out popped the terrier, not to make a feint, but pell-mell rush to the extreme end of the garden pushing the old schemer just outside the kitchen dool, who no sooner saw the terrier enter the garden than he popped too, not into the garden, but behind the warm kitchen stove, curled himself up, and waited with a cunning twinkle in his eye, for his young friend, who no sooner made his appearance and seeing the situation, than he tried exactly the same strategem with the old dog, with as little success as if he had tried to fly. Finding that to fail so sigually, he in turn put his wits to work,

After disappearing in the garden for a few moments, he made his appearance right in front of the kitchen door, with a large bone in his mouth, and set to work on it as if he was enjoying it hugely.

Now, what dog could resist such a tempting sight? At least the old fellow behind the stove could not, it is plain, for sneaking cantiously out of his snug retreat, he made a sudden dash for the coveted bone, which he secured very easily—to the surprise of all, for a few minutes only, as the mystery was soon cleared up; for no sooner had he possessed himself of what he found to be nothing but an old dry bone they had both gnawed a hundred times, than the young rascal had secured the good warm retreat behind the stove—which he certainly deserved after displaying so much cunning—leaving the poor old fellow out again in the cold, there to contemplate the old proverb, "It takes a thief to catch a thief."

Facts About Washington Territory.

Governor Edward S. Salomon, of the above Territory, has been in the city for a week. He reports that Washington contains a population of 33,000 whites and 15,000 Indians. All the towns of note are upon Puget Sound. Olympia, the capital, contains 2,500 people, and an appropriation of $40,000 passed Congress some time ago to give it a new territorial edifice, but the Legislature went to quarreling about a site, and kept at it so long, that the money relapsed into the unexpended funds. The Governor wants a new penitentiary at present. Other leading towns in the Territory of Washingtou are Walla-Walla and Seattle, 2,500 inhabitants each, and Steilacoom and Vancouver, with 1,000 each. Port Gamble is the chief shlpping place, and it has saw-mills which use up two hundred thousand feet of lumber every twelve hours, and exports sawed pine and cedar to Japan, China, and Siberia. During the past year between five and six hundred families, for the most part New Engianders, Germans, and Scandinavians, have made the Terrtory their home. Great expeetations of settlers are entertained when the North Pacific road shall be finished. The Governor has arranged to bring immigrants from Germany to Puget Sound direct, at the cost of about one hundred and fifty dollars per head, sixty-five of which goes to the Union Pacific Railroad, fifteen to Benjamin Holladay's steamship line, and fifty ta pay transportation between Europe and Chicago. The climate west of the mountains is delicious, show being rare and ice almost unknown, and the thermometer fluctuates between seventy-five degrees in summer and forty degrees in winter. There are minerals in the Tsrritory, but they are not as yet developed. The chief interests of the Territory are farming, stock-raising and lumber. The richest persons are W. Miller, a real estate negotiator; Marshall Blim, a lumber dealer; and Doctor Baker, worth $200,000 apiece. Governor Salomon is a rather youthful, florid, blue-eyed gentleman from Chicaga, and he is a Hebrew by religion and race.—Capital.

The Silent Club.

There was at Amadan a celebrated academy. Its first rule was framed in these words: "The members of this academy shall think much, write little and be as mute as they can."

A candidate offered himself; he was too late; the vacancy was filled up; they knew his merit, and lamented their disappointment in lamenting his. The president was to announce the event; he desired the candidate should be introduced. He appeared with a modest air, the sure testimony of merit. The president rose, and presented a cup of water to him, so full that a single drop would have made it overflow. To this emblematic hint he added not a word, but his countenance expressed deep affliction. The candidate understood that he could not be received, because the number was complete; yet he maintained his courage, and began to think by what expedient, in the same kind of language, he could explain that a supernumerary academician would displace nothing, and make no essential difference in the rule they had prescribed.

Observing at his feet a rose, he picked it up, and laid it gently on the surface of the water—so gently, that not a drop of it escaped. Upon this ingenious reply, the applause was universal—the rule slept, or winked in his favor. They immediately presented to him the register upon which the successful candidate was in the habit of writing his name. He wrote it accordingly; he had then only to thank them in a single phrase, but he chose to thank them without saying a word.

He figured upon the margin the number of his new associates—100; then having put a cipher before the figure 1, he wrote under it, their value will be the same—0100. To this modesty, the ingenious president replied with a politeness equal to his address; he put the figure 1 before the 100, and wrote they will have eleven the value they had—1,100.—Mag., (London).

Washington at the Table.

An original letter just published for the first time, gives some interesting glimpses of the habits and opinions of the Father of his country. From this we learn that the President ate Indian cakes for breakfast, after the Virginia fashion, although buckwheat cakes were generally on the table.

Washington's dinner parties were entertained in a very handsome style. His weekly dining day for company was on Thursday, and his dining hour was always at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. His rule was to allow five minutes for the variation of clocks and watches, and then go to the table, be present or absent whoever might. He kept his own clock in the hall, just within the outward door, and always exactly regulated. When lagging members of Congress came in, as they often did, after the guests had set down to dinner, the President's only apology was: "Gentlemen (or Sir), we are too punctual for you. I have a cook that never asks whether the company has come, but whether the hour has come."

He was always dressed in a suit of black, his hair powdered and tied in a black queue behind, with a very elegant dress sword, which he wore with inimitable grace. Mrs. Washington often, but not always, dined with the company, sat at the head of the table, and if, as was occasionally the case, there were other ladies present, they sat each side of her. The President sat half way from the head to the foot of the table, and on that side which would place Mrs. Washington, though distant from him, on his right hand. He always, unless a clergyman was present, asked a blessing in a standing posture. If a clergyman was present, he was requested both to ask a blessing and to return thanks after dinner.

Anecdote of General Washington.

Washington had accepted an invitation from Arnold to breakfast with him at West Point on the very day the plot was discovered, but was prevented from keeping his engagement by what men call chance—by the earnest request, namely, of an old officer near whose station they passed, to spend the night there and inspect some works in the neighborhood. Next day, while Washington, with his staff, including Lafayette, were seated at table at this officer's quarters, a dispatch was brought to the American general, which he immediately opened and read, then laid it down without comment. No alteration was visible in his countenace but he remained perfectly silent. Conversation dropped among his suite; and after some minutes, the general beckoning Lafayette to him, passed to an inner apartment, turned to his young friend without uttering a syllable, placed the fatal dispatch in his hands, and then, giving way to an ungovernable burst of feeling, fell on his neck and sobbed aloud. The effect produced on the young French marquis, accustomed to regard his genetal (cold and dignified in his usual manner) as devoid of the usual weakness of humanity, may be imagined. "I believe," said Lafayette in relating this anecdote "that this was the only occasion, throughout that long and somewhat hopeless struggle, that Washington ever gave way, even for a moment, under a reverse of fortune; and perhaps I was the only human being who ever witnessed in him an exhibition of feeling so foreign to his temperament.

As it was, he recovered himself before I had perused the communication that had given rise to his emotion; and when we returned to his staff not a trace remained on his countenance either of grief or despondency."

The Voice of Conscience.

Have you heard of the great clock of St. Paul's in London? At mid-day, in the roar of business, when carriages, and carts, and wagons, and omnibusses go rolling through the streets, how many never hear the great clock strike unless they live near it! But when the work of the day is over, and the roar of business has passed away—when men are gone to sleep and silence reigns in London, then at twelve, at one, at two, at three, at four, the sound of the clock may be heard for miles around. Twelve! one! two! three! four! How that clock is heard by many a sleepless man! That clock is just like the conscience of the impenitent man. While he has health and strength and goes on in the whirl of business, he will not hear his conscience. He drowns and silences its voice by pulling into the world. He will not allow the inner man to speak to him. But the day will come when conscience will be heard, whether he likes it or not. The day will come when its voice will sound in his ears and pierce him like a sword. The time will come when he must retire from the world, and lie down on the sick bed, and look death in the face. And then the clock of conscience, that solemn clock, will sound in his heart.

The Arab's Proof.

Some years ago, a Frenchman, like many of his countrymen, had won a high rank among men of science, yet who denied the great God who is the author of all science, was crossing the great Sahara, in company with an Arab guide. He noticed, with a sneer, that at certain times his guide, whatever obstacles might arise, put them all aside, and kneeling on the burning sands, called on his God. Day after day passed, and still the Arab never failed till at last one evening the philosopher, when he arose from his knees, asked him, with a contemptous smile, "How do you know there is a God?" The guide fixed his burning eyes on the scoffer for a moment in wonder, and then said, solemnly, "How do I know there is a God? How do I know that a man and not a camel passed my hut last night in the darkness? Was it not by the print of his foot in the sand? Even so," he pointed to the sun, whose last rays were flashing over the lonely desert, "that footprint is not that of man.

Mothers, Speak Kindly.

Children catch cross words quicker than parrots, and it is a much more mischievous habit. When mothers set the example, you will scarcely hear a pleasant word among the children in their plays with each other. Yet the discipline of such a family is always weak and irregular. The children expect just so much scolding before they do anything they are bid, while in many a home, where the low, firm tone of the mother or the decided look of her steady eye is law, they never think of disobedience, either in or out of sight. O, mother, it is worth a great deal to cultivate that "excellent thing in women" a low sweet voice. If you are ever so much tired by the mischievous or willful pranks of the little ones; speak low. It will be a great help to you to ever try to be patient and cheerful, if you cannot succeed. Anger makes you wretched, and your children also. Impatient, angry tones never did the heart good, but plenty of evil. Read what Solomon says of them, and remember he wrote with an inspired pen. You cannot have the excuse for them that they lighten your burdens any; they make them only ten times heavier. For your own, as well as for your children's sake, learn to speak low. They will remember your tone, after your head is under the willows. So, too, will they remember a harsh and angry tone. Which legacy will you leave to your children?

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.—In looking over our exchanges we happened upon the following local item:

Lillie Smith, the little Sunday-school scholar who gained a reputation from having committed to memory three hundred and sixty nine verses of Scripture in one quarter, is just recovering from the brain fever.

How many bright, intelligent children have been urged on by the instigations of cruel parents and teachers to overtask their mental and physical energies in order to gratify the inordinate pride and ambition of these worse than Egyptian taskmasters, until their minds and health were wrecked and they filled untimely graves? The little girl named above, is recovering from brain fever, into which she was driven by the inhuman treatment of her Sunday-school teacher, who, though not guilty of any offense of which human law takes cognizance is none the less guilty in the sight of Him who made an especial appeal in behalf of "These Little Ones."

Died.

In Secor, May 24, Bro. ELI N. POWELL, aged about sixty-five years.

The deceased was a charter member of Bloomington Lodge No. 43, afterwards a member of Peoria Lodge No. 15, a charter member of Isaac Underhill Lodge No. 375, at Secor, of which he was several years Warden and Secretary, and remained a member until his death.

At Fentonville Mich, M. W. Bro. WM. M. FENTON, May 12, aged 61 years.

His death was caused by running against a post at a fire. The deceased was an attorney by profession, was several years Grand Master, and served one term as Lieutenant Governor.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER

Improved with ROWEL'S PATENT DOUBLE COG-WHEELS, and the PATENT STOP, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

PRICES—A Fair Offer.

If the Merchants in your place will not furnish, or send for the Machines, send us the retail price, Washer, $14; Extra Wringer, $9; and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked, that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machines free of freight, after a month's trial, according to directions.

No husband, father, or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more expeditiously, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

Masonic Poem.

Who wears the SQUARE upon his breast
Doth in the eye of God attest,
And in the face of man;
That all his actions shall compare
With the divine, the unerring SQUARE,
That squares great virtue's plan;
That he erects his edifice by this design and this,
and this.

Who wears the LEVEL says that pride
Does not within his soul abide,
Nor foolish vanity;
That man has but one common doom,
And from the cradle to the tomb,
That he erects his edifice by this design and this,
and this.

Who wears the PLUMB, behold how pure
His words, his walks, and could we view
The chambers of his soul;
Each thought enshrined so pure so good
By the stern line of rectitude
Points truly to the goal.
And he erects his edifice by this design and this,
and this.

Who wears the "G," oh, type divine!
Abhors the atmosphere of sin
And trusts in God alone;
His Father, Maker, Friend, he knows,
He vows and pays to God his vows
As by the eternal throne.
And he erects his edifice by this design and this,
and this.

Thus life and beauty came to view
In each design our fathers drew,
So glorious so sublime;
They breathe an odor from the bloom
Of gardens bright, beyond the tomb—
Beyond the reach of time;
They bid us build on this and this,
The walls of God's own edifice.

Material for the Temple.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Throughout the entire work, Masonry is represented as a building—a spacious, beautiful and strong temple, and its members are the stones which compose its walls. This figure which was also adopted by some of the gospel writers, is as beautiful as it is expressive. Perhaps we cannot do better than to devote this paper to its consideration.

When the Entered Apprentice is given his first principle on which to build his moral and Masonic edifice, uprightness of walk and action are enjoined upon him. But alone he could erect no spacious edifice. He must be one of many; a single stone among a number that shall complete an immense building. Unless these stones can be obtained and brought together, and fitted to each other, there can be no strong and beautiful temple. To make an edifice imposing and grand, magnitude must be considered. Small things may be beautiful; only large ones are grand and sublime. Hence when we would erect a grand and beautiful Masonic temple, it must be great.

This fact laid the foundation of universal Masonry. It has gathered materials for the temple from every clime. It has found fit stones for the strong and living walls in every nation, and now the first grand necessity of the work has been achieved. Its dimensions are as extensive as the globe we inhabit. It extends from the east to the west; from the north to the south: from the center to the circumference, and its only covering is the cloudy canopy. Its proportions give grandeur and stability and shows the wisdom which devised the plan that skill and labor have completed. Nothing now is wanted in this direction.

But this vast building—this moral and Masonic edifice—to be strong, must be constructed of good sound materials. A disentegrating conglomerate is not the kind of stone that a skilful and honest architect puts into a good building. He does not lay up his walls with sandstone that yields to the corrosion of the storms and of time. It is not every stone that he will allow to go into the edifice, that he finds in the quarry. Defects are found in some, and these are rejected.

So it is in our Masonic temple. The materials which we place in its walls, must be selected. A bad stone that will decay and fall in pieces, may endanger the whole building. A builder who was awarded a contract on some public work, laid a stone in the walls, of such a texture that the weight of the wall crushed it, and the work had to be taken down. Figuratively speaking, the same defect may be found in our moral temple. A stone may be placed in the wall that cannot be relied on, and the fabric may fall. It is much easier to put good stones in the first place, than to be compelled afterwards to remove them and supply their places by others.

Substantial, good, honest, honorable men are the stones only of which the Masonic temple should be builded. These give it stability and permanence, and impart to it the second requisite—strength. Without such men, Masonry is a show—to carry out the figure with which we have commenced, it is a building composed of loose and crumbling materials, and must eventually fall. With these materials, it becomes a strong and durable edifice, against which the billows may dash, and the tooth of time do its utmost, and yet endure. Such has Masonry been in the past. Such must Masonry be in the future, if it will be everlasting.

But it is not only necessary that the stones of which our temple is composed, should be sound and capable of enduring the assaults of time and storm. There must be beauty to adorn, as well as strength to support, our mystic temple. The most prominent edifices of antiquity were as singular for their beautiful proportions and for the harmony of their several parts, as for their durability. The Druidical remains of Stonehenge might as well compete in architectural importance with Luxor or Karnak, as far as to attempt to erect a moral edifice which should challenge the admiration of the world, and leave out of it the moral virtues.

The Scriptures speak of "the beauty of holiness." Perhaps the technical and theologic meaning usually attached to that term, will prevent us from understanding clearly the idea intended to be conveyed, and yet it exactly expresses it. Holiness relates to something that is set apart from profane or common uses. To be holy, then, means to be singular from the great mass, by being better. This is the beauty that should adorn our Masonic temple.

We ought to be better men than those who are not Masons, because we have better instruction given us. No better system of moral teaching than that which Masonry inculcates, was ever given to man. Then why should we not be more beautiful in goodness? in virtue? in kindness? These are the beauties which are to adorn our moral and Masonic edifice, and they are just as material to the building as the most unwavering devotion to the cause; the most unflinching perseverance under opposition; the most staunch support that a true heart can give it.

Under this figure we are taught that to erect one Masonic edifice there are three requisites to make it perfect. It must be extensive, to be grand, sublime and magnificent. It must be composed of the best materials, that it may be strong and durable. It must be adorned by the virtues of goodness, mercy and truth, that it may be beautiful. Thus builded, our edifice will stand until time shall be no more. If we neglect one duty in any of these particulars, a frail superstructure will be reared, which will crumble to atoms, and be remembered not even as a splendid ruin of a mighty and magnificent temple, erected by wise builders, but as the debris of a pile with neither strength nor beauty, erected by those who, claiming to be wise, proved themselves to be fools.

The moral of this is, "if that it has a moral," that in the selection of members we should have reference not only to the sterner virtues of fortitude, courage and perseverance; but also to the milder ones of generosity, kindness, charity. No man can be a good and living stone in our Masonic temple, who is not the possessor of a generous heart, as well as a sense of honor. He must feel for other's woe, as well as know how to ward off evil.

Annual Elections.

BY A. T. DARRAH, M. D.

As the questions of annual elections, and the time of holding Grand Lodge are now being agitated, I would like to say a few words on these important subjects, for the reason that I feel very greatly interested in them. More particularly however, in the time of holding the Grand Lodge.

It would certainly be very desirable to have some uniformity (as to time) in the election of lodge officers. And it occurs to me that December is the most favorable month in the year, for the reason that we can do any lodge work better in cold, than we can in hot weather, and for the reason also that our attendance is greater in cold weather. Who does not know that our lodges are "rather slimly" attended during the summer months? Now the election of officers is a matter of no little importance, and it must be desirable to have the largest number possible present, to participate in this important work. The reputation of a lodge depends very largely on its officers. Then how important it is that the very best men should be chosen to fill these stations. And it is equally important that there be a full attendance, so that there may be no dissatisfaction in the result of an election. I do not say that it would be impossible to have a full attendance even in August, but I do say that it would be highly improbable. We could have our elections in December, and then have a general jubilee of installation and celebration on the 27th.

At all events, let us have as little to do on the 24th of June as possible, of course not omitting a proper observance of this "festal day;" but let us have our election and installation when it is more pleasant. Suppose all our lodges elected their officers in December. The returns could all be made to the Grand Secretary by the first of January. The Grand Master could (if he saw proper) refer to the list, in the making up of the committees for the Grand Lodge.

What I feel more deeply interested in, is the time of holding our Grand Lodge, and for various reasons. With the exception of August and September, October is the most unfavorable month in the year for the holding of our Grand Lodge. The autumn is the most sickly season of the year. How often do we hear it said that this brother or that brother could not attend on account of sickness, and how Bro. A. or B. had to return home on account of sickness? The fact is, we all feel the influence of this sickly season, say what we may. We often leave our friends or perhaps members of our own families sick; we go to Grand Lodge full of the poisonous malaria of the region, not more than half ourselves. The result is, that we do not have the interest in the business before us that we should, but are in a great hurry to get through and get home. Many who are physicians are anxious to get home to their patients, others to their families.

I find it to be a great inconvenience to me to attend Grand Lodge in October, and it must be so with every physician who attends, and there are not a few of them. I was very much surprised at the large number of physicians in attendance at the last meeting of the Grand Lodge. If I am not much mistaken, fully one-fourth of the Grand Lodge was composed of physicians. If Champaign county is any criterion, then fully one-half were physicians. For instance from Homer comes Dr. Conkey; from Sidney, Dr. Hartman; from Tolono, Dr Darrah; from Urbanna, Dr. Brown; and the list might be extended in this county. Now all these brethren must leave their practice in the most sickly time of the year—if, perchance, they can leave at all. They must employ some physician to see their patients during their absence, and this is not easy to accomplish at a time when physicians are busy, and perhaps have all that they can attend to. Yet he must do this, otherwise remain at home, as many are obliged to do. The result is, that quite a number of the representatives of the Grand Lodge are obliged to send proxies. I think I will be sustained in what I say, by every physician, and every thinking person. June is undoubtedly the most healthy, and the most pleasant month in the year.

If there is a time of the year when we approach a standard of health, that time is in the month of June. Now all nature is alive. See her dressing herself in fresh carpets of green; in fact "all matter quick and bursting into birth," which contrasts very favorably with the "melancholy days" when "decay was marked on all we see." "In the springtime all seems to be joyous, gay and happy." And now, as the physical man is more free from disease, so is the mental more clear and active. If our bodies are in pain, or our brain is stupefied with malaria, we are in a very poor condition to transact any business, at home or abroad, and this is the condition of half the number who assemble at our Grand Communication. And I insist that this might be remedied to a great extent by meeting in June, or perhaps the last of May. If we could meet together when our physical and mental powers are in full vigor, and at a time when there is no urgent demand for our presence at home, we could go through with the business of the Grand Lodge without that great hurry which only impedes our progress. There is something in the very idea of haste, which only serves to confuse and retard.

Some two or three years ago, when Bro. Robbins offered an amendment to the by-laws, changing the time of holding the Grand Lodge from October to June, I was very anxious to see the Grand Lodge adopt the amendment, but when the time came, it was laid on the table, without one word said pro or con.

Now I feel very confident that the Grand Lodge did not consider the question as they should have done, but simply laid it on the table as the shortest way to dispose of it. The question often seems to be, not how we shall dispose of any given subject, to the best interests of the Grand Lodge, but, how can we dispose of it in the shortest space of time. There seems to be a very great desire on the part of representatives to get through with the business of the Grand Lodge, and get home. I admit that this might be the case at any time of the year, but let us choose the most favorable time in the year, a time when there is not so great a demand for our presence at home.

I speak in behalf of the many physicians who are subjected to no little inconvenience, in order that they may attend Grand Lodge. One week now, to the country physician, is worth more than the whole month of June. I do not know what the arguments are in favor of October, but if there are more and stronger than in favor of June, let us hear what they are, by some one posted on that side. I will only add the last sentence of Traveler's communication in the July TROWEL, "Let us push for a Grand Lodge in June."

Fair Hearing.

We most cheerfully give place to the following candid communication, while by no means subscribing to all its conclusions; in the main we do.—ED.

CENTRALIA, July 14, 1871.

Most Worshipful Brother, Honored Sir,

In your article published in your valuable paper on "Judaism and Christianity," you state that "Jews do not join in what is called the Lord's Prayer." This is decidedly an error. Members of chapters who subscribe to the Jewish faith, do not object to participate in the ceremonies, when the Lord's Prayer is pronounced. The phrases of this time-honored appeal are as pure from bigotry, as the waters of the Pacific ocean are from dust. Intelligence is inspired with the sublimity of its tribute to meekness and charity.

Supplications to the throne above, containing such sentences, are not offensive to the Jewish ear, nor to those uncounted millions of human beings, who either deny the divinity of Christian theories, or abhor any doctrine not substantiated by science.

It is, however, I am sorry to say, a fact that in several instances Israelites, members of our Order, objected to Christian prayers in the lodge room; those I would advise to cease in their opposition to what is commonly called a God-given privilege, to serve Him in accordance with the dictates of our religious beliefs. This right is absolute, and should not be assailed and abridged; on the contrary, this great boon constitutes one of the safeguards of our liberties, and should, consequently, be defended by all true Masons. Masons who object to religious toleration, are guilty of violating the fundamental principles of our government, and act in opposition to one of the cardinal tenets of Masonry.
